The narrated incident at Manhattan—where "one of the prominent lady candidates is the proud mother of two fine babies born last January," a "Mrs. Williams" whose husband happened to be "an outspoken opponent of woman's suffrage and usually spent much of his time electioneering against the woman's ticket," but was kept at home the livelong election day by his wife's ruse in "asking him to hold the children for a minute, and basely leaving him tied to the house," having previously "taken all the ladies of her acquaintance into her confidence" so that "they not only refused to relieve him, but prevented him from hiring anyone to take his place long enough to go and vote"—and how he was found by a deputation of his party, later in the day, at his home, sitting with a kid on each knee and holding two bottles from which they were feeding—all this, and more, has such a chestnutty suggestivness of an old Valentine cut bandied about years ago as a take off on woman's suffrage, representing a man sitting at home on election day with a twin on each knee and a nursing-bottle in each hand, while his wife had gone to attend the polls, that it seems as if that same old reminiscence had chiefly inspired this Herald reporter's yarn.

Again: "In fifty-seven cities of Kansas elections were held last week," etc. It is quite doubtful if there is more than half that number of chartered cities in the state of Kansas at the present time.

Of the six named persons in the article four of them were Jackson, Anderson, Robertson, and Fulkerson.

In the last paragraph we find: "Probably Kansas City, Kan., [!] showed more clearly the objectionable features of woman's suffrage than any other city in the state," etc.

Then follows an allusion to some low, vile, quarter in said city, known as Hell's Half-Acre, and to its inmates by the generic title of "hobo," telling how two of the bravest of the electioneering ladies suffered themselvs to be escorted through those vile dens by some of their tenants, in pursuit of voters, and, at last, had to call the police to conduct them away again, amid the hootings and jeers of the rabble, etc. —smacking, all along, very much of the myth and canard. But Kansas City happens to be in the state of Missouri, and no female voting for alderman there at all.

The Herald man's ignorance of geography seems to be the avenging Nemesis to help show up the falsity of the whole statement. C. H. GREENE.

Rochester, Mich., April 20, 1890.

Mariolatry.

Not long ago I took up the Illustrated Catholic American, of the date Dec. 18, 1886. In turning its pages I found a piece which I will send, and if you think it would be of interest to your readers, you hav my permission to print it. EVA LEE.

A BEAUTIFUL LEGEND.

One day, while our Lord was walking through paradise, he was surprised to see a group of persons —men and women, young and old—whom he had not met before. It seemed strange that they should appear amongst the elect. This affair must be investigated. "How is this? This is something unusual! Has Peter been remiss in his duty?"

Thinking thus, our Lord directed his steps toward the gate of heaven. There he found St. Peter with his large golden keys in his hand. The master looked at the prince of the apostles, who grew pale and began to be troubled. However, as his conscience did not reproach him for anything, he maintained a respectful silence.

"Peter," said the sovereign judge, "I hav just seen here some among the elect who are strangers to me. I do not suppose that you hav smuggled them in, but it may be that you were absent for a short time and forgot to close the gate. Now, tell me the truth, with all your usual simplicity and frankness."

"Lord," said St. Peter, "I assure thee I keep the gate constantly closed, and open it only after positivly assuring myself that those who seek admission hav their names, surnames, occupations, and countries inscribed in the index to the book of life. It is true that sometimes I may be absent, but this happens very rarely, and then I always take care to hav my brother Andrew take my place; and I hav as much confidence in him as in myself."

"It is very strange," said our Lord. He then called to him some of the "suspects" among the elect, and mildly questioned them. They gave their family and baptismal names, but none could be found in the index to the book of life. The master's face became clouded, and St. Peter began to tremble. But the Lord said: "Do not be disturbed. I shall giv you three days to make an investigation, and produce a detailed report."

The gatekeeper of heaven lost no time. Intrusting his keys to St. Andrew, whom he advised to be extremely careful, he went in search of the elect whose names had not been written in the book of life.

"How did you get into paradise?" he said to them, "you surely did not come in by the gate!"

"No, sir," replied an old man, speaking in the name of all. "This is how it happened. We knocked long and loud at the gate, but in vain; you would not open. At length, in despair, we went around the holy city, vainly hoping that we might find some opening in the walls. We found none; the walls of heaven are as impenetrable as they are beautiful. Suddenly, just as we thought all was lost, we heard a voice, sweeter and more harmonious than all the angelic choirs, saying to us, 'Come, my children, come!' At the same time an opening appeared in a wall, which closed just after we entered. It is unnecessary for me to tell you who it was that called us, and thus mercifully brought us in?"

"Indeed," said St. Peter, "you need say no more. You may be in peace until the sovereign judge givs his decision."

The prince of the apostles then went in haste to his master. "Lord," he said, "I hav made the investigation which thou hast ordered. It is all as I had foreseen. It was not at the gate these elect entered. It was—it was——"

"Be not afraid; explain," said the king, who saw that St. Peter hesitated and trembled.

"It was thy mother who called them and admitted them through a break made in the wall."

"I thought so," said the Lord, with a sweet smile, "However," he added, "the book of life must not be untrue; the names of these elect must be written there. Look again, Peter—not simply in the index but in the body of the book."

St. Peter obeyed. Scarcely had he turned a few leaves when he noticed some lines written in a fine, elegant, and evidently a feminin hand. He had seen the writing too often before, on supplications and petitions, not to know who it was. Everything was now explained; the Blessed Virgin had written the names of the elect in the book of life, but neglected or forgot to write them in the index, and once more justice yielded to mercy.

"Poor Peter," said the prince of the apostles to himself, as he returned to his post, "you are but a mere turnkey. The Blessed Virgin Mary is the true gatekeeper of heaven, or rather is the gate itself. Well may Christians often say to her: Fanna Coeli, ora pro nobis—gate of heaven, pray for us."

Who Wrote These Lines?

The city of New York is blessed with various daily newspapers, and their conductors are generally remarkable for taste and shrewdness. The following lines—which were thought by me quite beautiful—were sent recently to two of our leading papers for publication, with the request to name the author if they knew. But the passage never came out. It was obtained from a London type-founder's specimen book. It ran as follows:

Learning and Rome alike in empire grew,
And arts still flourished where her eagles flew.
From the same cause they had their fatal doom,
And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome.
Much was believed but little understood,
And to be dull was construed to be good.
A second deluge learning thus o'erran,
And the monks finished what the Goths began.

It is not difficult to guess whose political track it was likely to cross. DAVID BRUCE.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Work, for Its Purpose, Without an Equal.

From San Francisco Freethought.

Twenty writers contribute to THE TRUTH SEEKER's symposium on "Freethought—Is it Destructiv or Constructiv?" now issued in a twenty-five cent pamphlet, and there is substantial agreement among them that the question should be answered in the affirmativ. As a reply to the current objection that Freethought is a mere negation, the work is without an equal.

A Shackle Breaker.

From the Better Way.

THE TRUTH SEEKER comes regularly to our table and is filled with thoughts that are calculated to free the enslaved mind and enlighten it on things that are good to know.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MAY 3, 1890.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

A BLASPHEMOUS LECTURE.

We shall print next week a translation of the lecture for delivering which Victor E. Lennstrand is now suffering in Sweden imprisonment for blasphemy, having been sentenced by three courts to terms aggregating twelve months, with a possibility of more indictments and more sentencing. From a perusal of the lecture and a careful consideration of the particularly "blasphemous" passages, it will readily be seen that in civilization Sweden is a good many decades behind the age. Her courts appear to hav no conception of what is meant by the words, freedom of speech.

Pictorial Arguments Against the Church.

Additional chapters in the Cartoon Book completed during the past week are:

PIETY IN THE PENITENTIARIES.
A Religious Procession.
THE ATONEMENT SCHEME.
The Atonement Doctrin.
Practical Application of the Doctrin.
The Great Efficacy of Baptism.
How to Get a Halo and a Harp.
THE LORD AND HIS WORKS.
Divine Benevolence.
The Tabernacles of the Lord (two pictures).
A Few Victims of Divine Benevolence.
PRAYER.
A Drouth in Cambridge, Ill., in 1887.
The Christian God No Help in Time of Need.
THE CREEDS.
What is Christianity? (three pictures).
The Clamor of the Creeds.
Sustaining the Creeds.
The Creedal Fiddle.
Christianity's Holy Family.
Janus-Faced Creedalists.
The Creedalists and the Government.
MISSIONARIES.
The Hypocrisy of Christian Missionary Effort (two pictures).
Christian Missionaries in India.
Missionary Methods in the Church of England.
A Poor Rule that Doesn't Work Both Ways.

The Picture and Literature Funds.

Since the last acknowledgment we hav received the following sums contributed to maintain THE TRUTH SEEKER as an illustrated journal:

J. E Perrault	$ 75	Jacob Heater	$1 00
P. S. Gould	75	Jas. Crowell	75
C. C. Fisk	1 00	Dr. E. N. Ogden	1 00
Leroy Dutton	1 00	D. R. Fruit	50
J. J. Dirtz	1 00	S. H. Davis	1 00
D. S. August	75	"Cash"	1 00
G. S. Croft	60	C. W. Doane	1 75
Robt. C. Adams	5 00

For the gratuitous distribution of Freethought literature where it will do good, we hav received these amounts:

"Cash"	1 00	Josiah Friend	5 00
Samos Parsons	10 00

Our thanks are hereby returned to these friends who hav the cause at heart.

Some Things that May be Called Victories.

The Washington Liberals are getting away ahead of the rest of the country. In that state the contest for justice began with the incorporation of the state and the drafting of its constitution, and has been maintained vigorously ever since. The result is that chaplains are abolished in both branches of the legislature, and the churches and private religious schools and hospitals are taxed, as they should be. Now the Secular Union proposes to get the Bible and sectarian religious instruction out of the public schools.

One incident showing the drift of public sentiment in Washington and incidentally what the Liberals can do when they mean business, is the result of the recent city election in Montesano. A correspondent from that place, who appears to hav been on the winning ticket, writes us:

"The Liberals put up a ticket of their own with the intention of getting there. Our old church-members and their herders are working hard to keep the Infidels down. Up and down the streets they run, shaking hands and giving courage to the holy cause, which was sure to win, they said. We did not deny we were Infidels, but said that the Liberal ticket must win. We showed our colors and gained a sweeping victory. In fact, we had a walk-over. Of course our ticket was A No. 1. All the objections our enemies could oppose to us did not amount to anything, and the indifferent men had to say that though the ticket was an Infidel one, it was a very good one."

The writer concludes:

"Now, Liberals, take a step to the front. Show your colors wherever there is an opportunity. Go for the best of your men—men without faults. Nominate them, work for them, go into the fight with the determination of winning, and you will win as we hav done.

"Many church-members, of course—such as go to church because it is the fashion—voted for us here. Why not elsewhere? Let us all work in city, county, and state elections. Let us make at least a good showing, and then at our next national election let us vote for one for president whose appearance in the White House would purify the air around the capital, and his name would be Robert G. Ingersoll."

There is a good deal of encouragement in all these victories. Public opinion is coming our way. The old creeds are going, and with them is going the idea that religion must rule, and be coddled and exempted and submitted to as something from heaven. One swallow doesn't make a summer, but we look upon the events in Washington as significant of greater changes still in the policy of government. The disturbing Catholic element is helping secularization, for it is the only permanent solution of the school question, and a great many are wise enough to see it. The fanatics of the Protestant church also help us, for when they call attention to their demands sensible people, hitherto indifferent because ignorant of the subject, conclude that their ultimate object is religious tyranny. Religionists are most dangerous when they work silently and underhandedly, keeping the people in the dark as to their actions. Let state secularization be discussed in the broad light of day and the result is not so much a matter of doubt as it is of delay to act because of a non-realization of its importance.

Hurrah for Washington!

The Conviction of Mr. Harman.

As THE TRUTH SEEKER goes to press, we hav not heard from Kansas as to what has been done with Mr. Harman by the United States district court, which on April 18th convicted him of mailing obscene matter. A motion for a new trial was argued on the 22d ult, but the result has not been intimated to Mr. Harman's Eastern friends.

In another place in this issue Mr. Chamberlain describes the story of the conviction, so far as he was connected with the matter. In Fair Play of last week, published immediately after the trial, Mr. Walker givs his side of the story, and incidentally reflects severely upon Mr. Chamberlain for giving bad advice to Mr. Harman. Mr. Harman also explains the matter in Lucifer of the 18th ult. Mr. Chamberlain's statement our readers hav. Mr. Walker says of the trial:

"The government had asked for conviction on seven counts, five for mailing the 'Markland letter' and two for mailing the 'Whitehead letter.' The prosecution had not evinced a disposition to make a fight on the 'Millerite Story' and the 'Comments on Chavannes Article,' Judge Foster intimating that the former was something of a 'chestnut.' The jury brought in a verdict of 'guilty' on four counts and 'not guilty on three.' Meanwhile the grand jury had brought in indictments against the defendant for mailing the O'Neil letter. The government was ready to proceed with the trial of Mr. Harman on these indictments, but he asked for a continuance, which was granted, to the next term of court. At this point United States Attorney Ady entered a nolle prosequi in the cases of Geo. Harman and E. C. Walker, the fact having been brought out during the trial that the former was at work upon a farm, and that the latter was 'in the field' in the north when the articles complained of were published, hence that they were in no way responsible for their appearance."

Mr. Walker's reflections upon Mr. Chamberlain are contained in these paragraphs:

"The defense was a botch from beginning to end. In order to understand how this came to be so we must go back to a time previous to the publication of the O'Neil letter. It seems that Ed. W. Chamberlain, of New York, secretary of the National Defense Association, in the course of his correspondence with Mr. Harman, wrote that this Dr. O'Neil was talking of sending a letter anent the Lucifer case, to Judge Foster, as was being done by many others. But after talking the matter over with Attorney Chamberlain the doctor concluded to write out some of his experiences as a physician, and forward the same to Lucifer for publication. Chamberlain advised Mr. Harman to publish whatever O'Neil might write. So great was the Kansas editor's faith in the New York lawyer's judgment that when the letter from O'Neil was received it was handed to the compositor without being read.

"Well, the O'Neil letter was printed. David Overmyer and G. C. Clemens, able and radical men, cool-headed and influential attorneys, had, up to this time, been the counsel of all the Valley Falls defendants. Upon the appearance of this foolish letter Mr. Overmyer remonstrated earnestly with the editor of Lucifer. But Mr. Harman was sure his own methods of propaganda were the best and, tired of 'the law's delays,' always ill at ease when contemplating a merely technical defense, and anxious to hav the question tried upon its merits, decided to dismiss counsel and conduct the case himself. 'Of course we paid no attention to this dismissal,' said Mr. Overmyer to the writer. But as weeks came and went and other letters, approving, and somewhat supplementing in style, that of O'Neil, appeared in Lucifer, Mr. Overmyer finally determined to withdraw.

"Mr. Harman went to Topeka Sunday night, April 13th, and on Monday tried to make arrangements for a continuance for a few days so that Chamberlain could come in response to a telegram and be on hand to defend when the cause should be called. It was thought that such an arrangement had been previously made, but it seems that there was a misunderstanding, and the judge said the case would come in regular order Tuesday. Mr. Overmyer acted for Mr. Harman temporarily. Tuesday forenoon the case was called by the clerk, but Government Attorney Ady said that some of their witnesses had not yet arrived and so no more was heard of it until Wednesday. In the mean time Mr. Overmyer had prepared affidavits for M. and G. Harman, which affidavits stated that, as the affiants had understood him, Assistant United States Attorney Soper had agreed to fix a date for the trial and inform Mr. Harman thereof, giving him time to bring on Mr. Chamberlain in response to a telegram. Wednesday morning arrived and the cause was called. As three members of Overmyer's family were dangerously ill it was wholly impossible for him to be in court, he residing in one of the most distant suburbs, three miles or more from the center of the city. Mr. Harman read the affidavits and asked for a continuance. Assistant Attorney Soper denied that he had said what the affiants had understood him to say. Judge Foster quickly decided that the trial must proceed at once. He said to Mr. Harman that there had been ample time given for preparation for defense; that Mr. Chamberlain could not in reason expect this court to delay its business and keep all the witnesses away from theirs, merely to convenience him."

This matter is explained by Mr. Chamberlain in his statement, and we can but think that Mr. Walker has done Mr. Chamberlain a gross injustice in his comments. This view is further supported by Mr. Harman's statement in Lucifer, as follows:

"It will be seen by reading the somewhat lengthy affidavits in the column headed 'Topeka Notes,' that I was compelled to go into trial under very embarrassing circumstances. Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens hav lately withdrawn from the defense of the senior defendant, on account of difference of opinion as to the best line of defense. I had made arrangements to hav E. W. Chamberlain, of New York, to come and assist me, as advisory counsel at least. Mr. Chamberlain agreed to come only on condition that he be notified definitly as to the day set for trial, so that no time should be lost in waiting. This date, after making diligent effort to ascertain, we failed to find out. When the affidavits referred to were presented we had been informed by telegram from Mr. Chamberlain that he would start at 6 o'clock Tuesday evening—time required to reach Topeka about forty-eight hours, so that, reasonably speaking, he was then—10 A.M. Wednesday—about one-third of the distance on his way to the capital of Kansas."

On the trial itself we must quote both Fair Play and Lucifer, to get an intelligent understanding of it, for it has occurred to no one of the parties interested to make a plain, unvarnished statement of the case. Everyone seems to hav some ulterior motiv hidden away, and some particular theory to support. Mr. Walker's account is as follows:

"Judge Foster appointed Colonel Bradley as counsel for Mr. Harman, the latter evidently supposing that the attorney would aid him in the examination of the jury, only, leaving him free to conduct his own defense, otherwise. But the lawyer stuck to him through it all. The jury was impaneled, and duly examined, one man being challenged by the defense, and rejected.

"Colonel Bradley now outlined the theory of the defense. He said that they would maintain, first, the articles were not deposited to be mailed as charged in the indictment, and, second, if they were so deposited, then Harman was insane, as no man, whose intentions were good, would attempt to disseminate such unutterably filthy matter. This announcement fell like a dynamite bomb, creating a most decided sensation. Probably nearly all in the court room fully expected to see Mr. Harman arise and hear him repudiate the line of defense announced by his counsel, but he kept his seat and remained silent, although subsequently, on the witness stand, he declared he was perfectly sane, and also, when Bradley was making his closing argument to the jury, he attempted to discharge him. But during the process of the trial, with these exceptions, 'insanity,' 'monomania,' 'dementia,' etc., were the cards played by the attorney, while his client sat there, a helpless victim of adverse circumstances, his own zeal, and the very peculiar tactics of an aristocratic member of the New York bar—who did not put in an appearance until the case had gone to the jury.

"Colonel Bradley introduced for the defense most of the witnesses previously called by the government. These were neighbors of Mr. Harman's, men who had known him for many years, and they all, with the exception of the prosecuting witness, Simpson, testified that his private character was the very best. Most of them thought he was 'off' to a greater or less extent. This testimony was intended to support Bradley's theory that the defendant was a very good man who was 'out of his head' on the subject of the sex relations, this monomania having been caused by 'brooding' over the matter for a long time. Only those who know how earnestly Mr. Harman has striven to make this defensiv fight upon the ground of principle, who realize how intensely he detests anything looking like 'compromise,' 'expediency' or 'policy,' can imagin how gratingly upon his ear fell from the lips of his attorney these and similar expressions, referring to himself: 'Poor wounded mind;' 'peculiar appearance;' 'poor demented fellow here;' 'because you yourself [the jurymen] are not inflicted as he is;' 'visitation from the almighty God sits heavily upon him;' 'demented;' 'weak;' 'insanity;' 'weak-minded.' In addition to all this Bradley vied with the prosecution in denunciation of the indicted articles. Whatever he may hav thought of them, this denunciation was part of the work of defense. His witnesses had established his presumption that the defendant was personally pure; therefore he must be insane to publish such 'vile' stuff, and the viler he could make it appear to be, the more unusual and 'unreasonable' the opinions of Mr. Harman, the stronger would be the insanity theory. Once, it is true, he covertly or carelessly defended the publication of the Markland letter, but he atoned for his indiscretion by the increased virulence of the epithets which he afterwards bestowed upon the unfortunate missiv. With all reasonable minds, however, his explanatory defense would greatly outweigh his vituperativ denunciations. Had the jury said reasonable minds? is the question."

That is the way it looked to Mr. Walker. This is the way Mr. Harman viewed his attorney's wonderful defense:

"The notes given elsewhere show that I employed Colonel Bradley, of Topeka, to assist me in the defense. His line of defense was:

"1. That the indicted articles are not obscene within the meaning of the law.

"2. The defendant, Moses Harman, did not deposit the offending articles in the post-office.

"3. On the question of the right relations of the sexes, the defendant is a monomaniac—is insane!

"Now that the smoke of battle has cleared away I would say, to begin with, that, if regrets were ever allowable in regard to any action done with good motiv, I would now be tempted to regret that I selected Colonel Bradley to assist in my defense, or more correctly speaking, that I allowed him to put in the plea of insanity.

"My reasons for allowing that plea to go to the jury were briefly these:

"(a) I felt a little curious to know whether a jury of ordinarily sane men could be found who would adjudge a man insane simply because of his earnest and persistent efforts to secure to woman her natural right of self-ownership, her right to freedom from invasion in the most important part of her nature as woman—her sex-nature, her maternal capabilities and functions.

"(b) I was somewhat desirous to know whether my neighbors and fellow-citizens would testify under oath that they regarded me insane on the above-named question, as many of them profess to believe.

"(c) But by far the most controling reason for allowing this plea of mania to go to the jury was that thereby I might gain time! When peremptorily ruled to trial, as related elsewhere, I entered a solemn protest—and asked that my protest should be entered upon the records of the court—against being forced into trial without the aid of the counsel of my choice when that counsel was already on his way to my assistance, and when it was clearly shown to be not my fault that he was not then on the ground. I knew that the plea of insanity would open up a wider field of discussion, and thought it possible if not probable that by this delay the final arguments would not be reached till the arrival of my counsel. I fully intended all the while to repudiate, at the proper time, Colonel Bradley's plea of insanity, as I did repudiate on the witness-stand his plea that I was not personally responsible for the mailing of the indicted articles."

A comparison of these differing statements with that made by Mr. Chamberlain shows that the blame for not being on hand should fall not upon the "aristocratic New York lawyer," but upon the Kansas people who were at cross purposes, thus leaving Mr. Harman to conduct entirely his own defense. Having a great many things to think about, money being scarce, and not being used to the turmoil and procedure of prosecutions and their defense, Mr. Harman made errors of judgment, with the result that he was convicted a little more expeditiously and under more annoying circumstances than he would otherwise hav been.

It is no time now for criticisms upon anything connected with the trial, or with its cause. Mr. Harman has been convicted of an offense he did not commit. The matter charged as obscene in the indictment is not of that sort for printing which any man should be put in prison. It has, however, proved sufficient for the purpose of the prosecution. Whether it is their further intention to shut him up or to fine him we do not know. What they desire is to suppress the publication of Lucifer because they conceive that its location in Valley Falls is a detriment to the prosperity of the town—though it is safe to say that without that radical journal the fame of Valley Falls would not hav extended beyond the border of the state. Their purpose should be thwarted in some way. It is probably of no use to go to our Presbyterian elder president for a pardon; Comstock's backers hav too much influence there. If the conviction could be appealed from, there is a possibility, though not a strong one, that the verdict could be set aside. But the only thing, it seems to us, to do is for those who hav egged Mr. Harman on in his linguistic crusade to come to the front and help him out of the scrape by seeing to it that Lucifer is kept going and that its editor suffers as little as possible. It will be too bad for him to bear the burden which ought to be shared by a good many more. Vicarious atonement never was and never will be a righteous scheme.

The Alaska Missions.

In the letter containing his subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, in which he uses his opportunity also to vote for the pictures and to pay a handsome compliment to the paper, our only subscriber in Sitka, Alaska, Mr. R. Albertstone, givs some information regarding the religious condition of the territory and the work of the missionaries there. Since the presidency of Mr. Harrison the Presbyterians hav been carrying their heads high up in the air, and at the same time sparing no efforts to make the government pay them still more munificently for their presence. Sitka, a little city of one street, contains eight churches and Christian schools, all subsidized, reports Mr. Albertstone, by the government, and all teaching religion. The Russian government takes care of the Greek church to the extent of $50,000 annually, while the Presbyterians received from the United States government $25,000 with which to build a school, and are drawing annually from the treasury another $25,000 with which to support it. Besides this, the Greek church makes hundreds of dollars annually by exhibiting the church, which is very gorgeous, to the tourists; and the Presbyterians reap a harvest of dollars during the tourist season by begging of visitors. So profitable are the tourists to the Presbyterians that a brass band of twenty pieces is maintained by them, the sole occupation of which, says Mr. Albertstone, in the summer months, is "to entice the tourists from the wharf to the great show prepared for them and to gather from them donations for the benefit of the poor Indians, who are in fact the wealthiest people in the territory." Yet the managers of the missions are not satisfied, amd demand greater subsidies. Our correspondent, who is a man of some prominence in Sitka, having been in business there eleven years, has been plainly told that unless he joins with them in trying to influence the government to increase the annual grant for the maintenance of these mission schools he can never expect to succeed financially.

That the mission schools of Alaska are badly managed and are no credit to Alaska nor to the churches which maintain them is pretty broadly hinted in the report which A. P. Swineford, then governor of the territory, made to the department of the interior last year. He names two or three persons, prominent in the work, as constant mischief-makers, and asserts that they do not hesitate to lie "about the condition of affairs in Alaska for the purpose of exciting the sympathies and opening wide the pocketbooks of the good Christian people of the East." He adds: "I venture, with the best of motivs and with no other view than to promote the success of the good work in which it is engaged, to suggest to the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions that a thorough investigation of the management of its missions and schools in Alaska will be apt to reveal a condition of affairs its officers would hardly be willing to credit on the strength of information in any other wise obtained. As a mere indication of what I mean, not wishing, not daring to giv utterance to truths struggling to escape, I simply call attention to Exhibit F."

The exhibit to which he calls attention is an extract from the Alaskan of June 16, 1888, giving an account of the arrest, conviction, and fining of the superintendent of the Presbyterian mission school for cruelly beating two young girls, both inmates of the school. The testimony of the committee which investigated the charges showed that the girls—one twelve and the other sixteen years of age—had been beaten with large sticks. On the body of one were found nine bruises. "Three welts or cuts the size of one's little finger" were on the other girl's back. One child received sixty-two blows; the other, thirty-six. The judge also examined the backs and arms of the children and was "satisfied that the punishment was not moderate." It must, he said, hav required hard blows to produce the marks he saw.

Wherever it is tried, the attempt to civilize "heathen" natives by turning them over to the churches to be "educated" is a failure and leads to gross abuses of all kinds. In Alaska the delinquencies of the missionaries are of several sorts—cruelty to the children, interference with government, attempted bulldozing of citizens, underhand and dishonest influencing of government subsidies, and lying about the country "to excite the sympathies and open wide the pocketbooks of the good Christian people of the East." Probably all other Christian Indian schools in this country are controled by no better men, and the practical union of church and state effected in these matters is but a disgrace to the churches and a robbery of the taxpayers. The government should build and control its own Indian schools. It would save thousands of dollars every year by doing so, and the children would learn something besides the catechism and the Lord's Prayer. We hope the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions has ere this acted upon Governor Swineford's suggestions.

MARK BERRY, a noted musical composer of England, has set to music George Remsburg's poetical tribute to Horace Seaver.

J. E. REMSBURG'S "Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" will be published in book form. He will revise it before publishing, and desires those possessing any facts or evidence relativ to the subject not already published to send it to him. His address is Oak Mills, Kan.

MR. B. C. MURRAY, editor of the Sunday Gazetteer of Denison, Texas, and who has one of the largest printing establishments in the state, writes thus about a book now in process of manufacture, in THE TRUTH SEEKER office: "I am pleased to see that you hav decided to giv the public THE TRUTH SEEKER pictures in book form. The price is much lower than I expected. I inclose the money for three copies, and will take two more if you find the sales do not warrant the publication." As a practical printer Mr. Murray knows he will get a big value in size of book for his money, and his order for three copies shows what he thinks of its quality.

THE church papers are printing an anecdote of the late Speaker Randall, alleged to be related by J. T. Miller. The story is given in the words of Mr. Miller: "Two years ago I happened to be in the room of the House committee on appropriations talking with several members of the committee. Randall, then chairman of the committee, sat in his place at the head of the table writing letters, and apparently paying no attention to the conversation. We talked about many subjects, and finally drifted past philosophy on to religion. I said nothing on this latter subject, but all the others expressed in turn skeptical views of religion. Apparently Randall was not listening, but when we got through he rose to his feet in that masterful way which made him so impressiv in the House, his face stern but bright, and said in his crisp way: 'Gentlemen, Christianity is truth. The man who doubts it discredits his own intelligence. I hav examined this matter for myself.'" For the credit of Mr. Randall, we trust his friends will not often repeat the tale. If it is true, it simply writes Mr. Randall down a dogmatic idiot. If it is not true, it slanders him by making him appear one. No really intelligent man in the world will say he knows a thing to be true about which no one really knows anything. The fundamental assumptions of Christianity are simply unprovable, and are so conceded.

Letters from Friends.

NASHVILLE, MO., April 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I vote for the pictures, and so do all that see them. Respectfully, WM. G. WARNER.

ONO, WYOMING TERR., April 7, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2 for the cartoon book. Yours for truth and progress, MRS. H. M. SPANG.

KALAMA, April 3, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $6, for which send three copies of the cartoon book when ready.

Your honest well-wisher, GEO. G. SVENSON.

GRANBURY, TEXAS, April 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Send me the new picture-book. I desire the illustrations in a more valuable and permanent shape than in the paper. Yours truly, F. C. BUSH.

LOUISVILLE, KY., April 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Mrs. Renwick commences to hoard nickels for Heston's cartoons. She will get there. If you will giv me a list of your subscribers in this city, I will try to organize. WM. E. RENWICK.

BROKVILLE, ILL., April 14, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been trying to get some new subscribers. There are a good many Freethinkers here, but all re afraid of the church. Record one vote for the pictures. I think the pictures are excellent. E. G. BOWERS.

WEST BAY, N. S., Jan. 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Your bold TRUTH SEEKER is enlightening a few of us here. Freethought was always considered terrible this way, for ignorance and religion had no opposition until now, but now we hit whenever there is a chance.

R. MCRAE.

NEWARK, N. J., April 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I like your paper and the cause it advocates. If I was a rich man, I would giv to build up a TRUTH SEEKER building. There are plenty of rich Liberals that could do so. Respectfully, W. W. MORRIS.

SAN JOSE, Jan. 6, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5 50. $3 to be applied for THE TRUTH SEEKER, $2 to where it will do the most good toward the Liberal cause, fifty cents for the book called "Maria Monk." Respectfully yours, LEWIS ROTHEMEL.

VINELAND, N. J., April 21, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I send for the ANNUAL, the cartoon book, and other books as on inclosed list. I am trying to circulate Liberal books and papers by lending such as I hav. My sending pay for the book of cartoons shows my vote.

J. S. SHEPARD.

POCAHONTAS, ILL., April 13, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find money for renewal and the ANNUAL. My children tell me to be sure to vote for the pictures. Thus you see how the pictures affect the rising generation. They are seed sown on good ground, which will yield a good crop in due time. HENRY KLEINMANN.

AUBURN, N. Y., April 19, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Being a Spiritualist, I think there are some things in THE TRUTH SEEKER that might be left out to giv room for better things, and it would be fully as satisfactory to others. There is much that I like, and much that I can overlook that I do not approve. WM. A. KIRBY.

KEATING, April 8, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $5—twenty-five cents for the ANNUAL; fifty cents for the cartoons; $4.25 to my subscription for the best paper I ever read, the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. I think the pictures are a great help to the young and unthinking, as they show a different side to what they hear from the pulpit. D. R. FRUIT.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., April 22, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please send cartoon book when ready, for which find inclosed $2. This is a hard town to look for subscribers to any Freethought papers. You would think so if you were here on a Sunday morning. I suppose when a lone Freethinker up here dies he will hav to be buried without any sermon whatever unless one gets a sky-pilot.

FREDERICK WEIDMANN.

MILTON, N. DAK., Jan. 21, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read your (to me) most valuable paper published in America the last year. Retain the illustrations if possible. I think Heston hits just the kind of blows that tell. I feel like Mr. Peck. He says, "Up and at 'em!" So say I. Do not strangle any individual, but strangle the cursed theory of orthodoxy. S. E. HAIGHT.

BOSTON, MASS., Jan. 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am going to celebrate Paine's birthday by sending you a new subscriber. I wish I could do more. When I see how much there is to be done and so little time to work, I feel that no time should be wasted. Of course I know philosophically that we are progressing according to the unvarying law of growth, and in that sense I am content. Long life and success to you, my boy.

C. FANNIE ALLYN.

EAST PORTLAND, ORE., April 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The Portland Secular Union not long ago had the pleasure of several able lectures by Lois Waisbroker, author of "Helen Harlow's Vow," "Perfect Motherhood," and other valuable works. These lectures were delivered in her usual forcible, convincing, and pleasing manner. Her lectures must of necessity influence every unbiased mind for good. For depth of thought, clearness of expression, and amount of information we hav seldom if ever heard these lectures excelled. Her address is East Portland, Ore.

MATTIE BLAISDEL, Secretary.

ORANGEVILLE, April 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2 for the new picture book. I was one among others that suggested, some time ago, to hav these pictures published in book form. I am pleased to hav them substantially bound. If I can sell them I will send for more. And when you put the last-page pictures in book form I want one book sure.

Yours for more light, M. S. HAYHURST.

SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA, March 19, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I see that there is some change possible in relation to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hope the Secularists of America will appreciate the value of this organ of their cause and worthily sustain it. As regards the pictures, I believe that the majority of readers here are in favor of the pictures being retained, and that these latter form the chief attraction to buyers. W. WILLIS.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Jan. 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please send the ANNUAL and following books. I suggest that you get up an index to the Bible, embracing about all of the absurd passages in it. Such an index plentifully distributed in Sunday-schools, and pasted to the inside covers of the Bibles throughout the land, would be more effectiv, and reach more of our deluded brothers and sisters, than anything else that can be done to reach them, in my opinion. Respectfully, D. C. COLEMAN.

EMMETTSBURG, IA., April 15, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Put me down for three volumes of your first-page-picture book, at $2 a volume. Send them along as soon as they are out, and I will honor your draft for $6. I hope that the book will be a success. There are about seven of us poor Infidels in this town. Three of us want a book bad. The probabilities are that you can dispose of at least seven books in Emmettsburg.

I am glad to see that Agnosticism is flourishing. We are thinking of organizing in this town. I wish we had a thousand members. T. J. PROUTY AND C. E. COHOON.

DALLAS, ORE., April 12, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $7, for renewal, also one new subscriber, also one cartoon book to myself. If I was a Vanderbilt I would donate half a million of dollars to John Peck and Heston, but as I am not I will hav to be content to subscribe for your paper and giv an occasional order for books, and will always do my utmost to further the cause of justice and truth as advocated by its great champion, THE TRUTH SEEKER. Wishing success to Heston and John Peck, and with an earnest desire for the success of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain, Yours for the truth,

THEODORE ROE.

BARRE MILLS, WIS., Feb. 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $6; apply it on my subscription for this year, and on the subscription of the herein-named friend. Please do not forget to send us all numbers you hav published this year; we want to hav the seventeenth volume complete. I got a sample copy some weeks ago, and am highly pleased with it. I never saw a portrait of Robert Burns before, but the works of that great poet are well known in Germany, and I read them in the language of my country. HEINRICH HENNINGS.

CULLMAN, ALA., April 13, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Your paper arrives always on Sunday, and as soon as I open the wrapper and look over the contents, I lay it on the table. The next thing is, some one steals it, and I do not see it any more till the next comes again.

Now, I offer $50,000 to any God or ghost to manufacture a genuin Eve from a piece of rib taken out of a man. The god or gods must perform this Eve creation in the presence of a committee of three good Liberal men, within three months' time. All gods and ghosts are hereby invited to earn the above reward.

I inclose names of friends for sample copies.

WM. RICHTER.

KIMBALL, April 8, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Through the kindness of a friend at this place I hav been reading a few copies of your paper, which I like very much, so much so that I hav perused them several times with extreme delight. It may become my Bible yet. A few years ago I read our Robert G. Ingersoll's pamphlets, which was the means of my cutting loose from all of the sky-pilots' teachings. I inclose for the paper and the ANNUAL. I expect many of your readers hav reading matter not in use; if they hav and will send some along, I will see it put where it will be read and appreciated.

Truly yours, JOHN M. MCKEE.

MARION, CONN., April 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I spent the last winter in the South, mostly in Florida. I would advise some of the heathen missionaries to return to America and see if they cannot halfway civilize the negro. The poor negro, I pity him! But I prefer to remain away from him. You might as well talk Infidelity to a rock as to talk it to the negro. He is too thoroughly saturated with Christian orthodoxy—rather ancient interpretation though—for the sense of Infidelity to get into him. He is a little like some white Christians. He believes the Bible before he is born. He believes it without reading it. When he does read it he does not get the sense of it—and I do not know that anyone else does. I will write ere long a more extended account of superstition in the South.

EDWIN N. BEECHER.

LEWISPORT, KY., April 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I will, on my return home, send one year's subscription and $2 for your book of pictures. Cartoons are the proper thing. I hav some friends to meet in Louisville, May 1st, who are working up subscriptions for THE TRUTH SEEKER—workingmen, machinists generally, who of all people hav a direct interest in driving superstition out of the land. Never, never can good government, a firm civilization, exist with sky-pilots and joss-houses. They are really the only obstruction to life. My opinion is, and has been for forty-five years (I am now seventy-five), that the clergy is the vilest class on the earth. The blackleg is a beauty beside them as a class. GEO. SMITH.

GRANTFORK, ILL., April 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I see that you intend to get the Heston cartoons in THE TRUTH SEEKER in book form, which I think is a move in the right direction, and the sooner out the better. You can put me down as a subscriber for three books for $6. And when you get out the biblical part of the cartoons you may put me down as a subscriber. I would suggest that you urge John Peck to get his articles written in THE TRUTH SEEKER in book form. I put him down as a second Ingersoll. I enjoy reading his articles as well as Ingersoll's, for he strikes right from the shoulder, and puts in red-hot licks into the clergy, under which they must crumble and tumble and show the white feather. ANTON J. KRAFT.

SPRINGWATER, ORE., April 14, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $5 for the ANNUAL and other books named. The author of one of the books, George Jacob Holyoake, I know will do to hitch to. He used to lecture before our institute, Dudley, England, forty-three years ago. He also edited a paper, the Reasoner. It scintillated the electric sparks of Freethought. He was the founder of Secularism, separating the real from the imaginary, the grain from the chaff. These principles hav become deeply imbedded in the minds of the people—are broadening and advancing up the hill of time to make the world grow brighter. This grand old Trojan has occupied nearly half a century in the advocacy of Secular principles.

E. H. GUTTRIDGE.

PORT-OF-SPAIN, TRINIDAD, April 8, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith inclose $11.14 for books. The Freethinkers' association was finally organized on March 21st, and its name is the "Freethought League." We number very few at present and cannot as yet afford to come out publicly. We are persecuted by our enemies—Christians—right roundly. We number about thirty, but we hope before the year is out to count over one hundred. "The objects of the League are to encourage ethical culture and to disseminate Freethought. As a means to secure this end the circulation of Freethought literature must be persistently, diligently, and gratuitously performed." We shall order tracts and books nearly every mail from your company. We intend to storm the country with them.

EM. DOS GANTOS.

WALLA WALLA, WASH., April 12, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 50 for my subscription and two ANNUALS. I hav been unsuccessful in getting that new subscriber, but send in a big vote for the pictures all the same. We hav good times at the Union every Sunday night. We hav changed the meetings to 7:30 Sunday evenings. We expect to hav Mr. Remsburg here before long to giv us a course of lectures, and we are going to hav a big time. I heard Rev. P Hennberg at the Catholic church a few nights ago. He told the Catholics that it is better to let their children attend no school, but run in the streets in ignorance, if they cannot attend a parochial school, for once they went to the secular schools they would leave the church never to return. I wonder how long people will allow such vipers in the country. ARTHUR VENN.

BUNDYSBURGH, O., Feb. 14, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I will be one of five hundred Infidels to giv $1.50 for a Life of Mr. Paine, of three hundred pages, written by W. H. Burr, of Washington. There has been six or seven so-called Lives of this heroic philanthropist, but knowing as I do that Mr. Burr has made modern discoveries pertaining to this immortal champion of human rights, and that those discoveries are liable to become unknown to future generations, unless preserved by being incorporated in book form, I desire to feel of the Infidel pulse of America, and see how many, if any, will place their names in a column in THE TRUTH SEEKER for the purpose herein stated. "Modern Thinkers," by Denslow, suggests some things that, if they could be successfully cleared up, would render hitherto uncertain matters plain. B. O. FENTON.

DALTON, GA., April 14, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I see in a late copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER a picture of Uncle Sam with his trousers strapped down. He looks as though he meant business. He puts me in mind of a picture I saw of him down here in Georgia in 1861. He had his breeches strapped down then and meant business. He then had a high plug hat and a long-tailed blue coat on, and looked quite tall, and said to the gentlemen in the ship of state to throw the "tarnel nigger" overboard or he would sink the whole craft. We are in a worse condition now than in 1861. The same political isms as before the war are in power North and South, and the negro is still a hobby to fight over. We Freethinkers hav a big job ahead of us to perpetuate the republic with those fanatics in power. So hurrah for Heston, Peck, and Ingersoll. I want Peck's and Ingersoll's writings put in a neat volume, so every true American can read the truth. I am an old California forty-niner, and a Materialist, I am proud to say. You are doing more to enlighten the people than any other man now in America. W. W. BAKER.

OMAHA, NEB., April 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of your valuable paper for some time, and earnestly desire to see the good work go on. I appeal to all Liberals to be up and working for the grand cause of liberty and Freethought, and to break down these barriers called churches, so detrimental to all human happiness and progress. I ask any sane person whose mind is not prejudiced, Is not the past history of Christianity rotten to the core? Are its pages not stained with the blood of innocent men? Do not statistics of our penitentiaries all over the land corroborate my statement? Are not nine-tenths of the convicts religious people? Does the doctrin of Jesus Christ hav a tendency to soften the hearts of people? Does it do good to teach children they can be the vilest criminals, and by one application of the blood of Jesus Christ fit them for eternal glory, where they can look with triumph upon their victims writhing in agony in eternal hell? Down with this damnable doctrin of ignorance. Let every man be his own preacher and interpreter. Liv for mankind and happiness here on earth. Let God take care of himself. If he is not happy it is no fault of ours.

EDWARD J. BOYLE.

NEW YORK, April 17, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: After reading your and Mr. McArthur's articles about slate-writing, I wish to ask the question, Can one get writing done on slates laid on tables in full, plain view, not in contact or held by anybody? I hav never visited a spiritual séance, but from all I hav ever read, I hav an impression that mediums, so called, can succeed only under certain conditions. They need a cabinet; they want darkness; persons present must join hands—that is, be bound—and what not of other conditions and hocus-pocus. If asked to believe and to investigate these phenomena, I could and would never submit to such conditions under any circumstances, because I cannot see, if there are any such spirits of deceased persons able and willing to communicate with their friends, why they cannot do it in broad daylight, without any aid from anybody. All these conditions necessary to be favorable for successfully working their schemes are foolish, and advantageous to deceive and impose on the credulous. These circles may do for amusement, but for rational beings they look more like tomfoolery. In my view these mediums are not much better than, and belong in the same class with, the clergy, astrologers, and soothsayers. We hav never heard of one useful communication received from a spirit. I do not believe in a God, devil, or spirit outside of animals' bodies or alcohol. There is no use wasting money or time under these conditions. FRED. KOEZLY.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA., April 3, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In the glorious movement for Universal Mental Liberty, there are signs on every side of its victory over superstition and religious bigotry. I never heard of so much skepticism as is manifested. Friends of Freethought and liberty can rejoice at the progress of our cause. I come in contact with many who for a good part of their lives accepted and believed in Christianity who are now wavering in their faith.

I am sure all desire to liv eternally. If there is such a place as heaven, then its bliss and glory cannot be described. This life is indeed a vale of tears, with its sorrow, but we are not responsible for its sad conditions. The sad conditions of life cannot be changed. Life is thrust upon us and we must make the best we can of it. We must learn by experience to obey the laws of nature, and put in action only such causes as will insure happy results, for all that tends to happiness is good.

Taking everything in this strange world into consideration—its inequalities, imperfections, and incompleteness; its injustice; man's inhumanity to man; the oppression of the strong over the weak, and might making right—it is astonishing how so many millions believe that an almighty God livs who permits such sad conditions to exist. But these are facts to any sensible, just person. He or she cannot believe that a God rules the destiny of men and nations.

THOS. J. CONNERS.

ATLANTA, GA., April 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The subscriptions inclosed redeem a promis made of backing up Heston and his pictures. I rejoice in the renewed vigor which seems to animate the pencil of this second Voltaire, who, in a different department of the same field of labor, strips the church of its thin disguises and holds up to the scorn and ridicule of the world the claims of its popes and its priests, its bishops and its pastors, to be the proper custodians of the minds and consciences of mankind. In fertility of resource he is surpassed by no artist of the present day; and in the comprehension and treatment of his subjects he shows the skill of the master. The startling contrasts he produces between superstition on the one hand and science and enlightened philosophy on the other, should awaken every thoughtful mind to the dangers with which the liberties of the republic are threatened by dominating ecclesiasticism, and strengthen the determination to resist by every means its tyrannical encroachments. A hearty welcome then to the courageous artist under the withering strokes of whose pencil dogmatic pretension shrinks to infinitesimal dimensions, and who in his love for the beautiful and the true brings out in bold relief the opposit and grander elements of manhood and womanhood.

Many Spiritualists are found in the ranks of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S subscriptions, and if I can measure their feelings by my own, they wish THE TRUTH SEEKER and its redoubtable champion that abundant success worthy of such unwearied efforts in behalf of truth and liberty. I shall send for the volume of pictures when it appears.

Very truly yours, THOMAS M. TAYLOR.

DEGRAFF, O., April 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: It is deplorable, to say the least, that in a country boasted as a "land of liberty," there should exist a spirit of tyranny, in the form of religious preference, sufficient to forestall and abridge every effort at reform. Some weeks ago a few of the Liberals of the community arranged for a Liberal lecture at Quincy, O., to be given by P. H. McCrosky, entitled, "Why am I a Liberal?" There is in the town a church building, formerly occupied by the Universalists, now owned by a Mr. Leach, who has been in the habit of leasing it for lectures or other meetings. The nature of the lecture being made known to Mr. Leach, he assented to the use of the building, the lecture to take place Saturday evening, December 28th. Arrangements were accordingly made, some expense incurred, and prospects seemed fair for reasonable success. No sooner, however, had the ball been fairly started rolling, than the spirit of the Dark Ages broke loose, was joined by the forces of Mr. Grundy, and a furore of excitement in and about Quincy prevailed. Semi-idiots of the Jonah school tore their hair, and the Ribitis pawed the ground. Mr. Leach was notified that unless he let up on the contract he would be ostracised, if not assassinated. And the good man with fear and trembling begged to be allowed to sacrifice his word of promis to the Infidels, which was finally granted, he agreeing to furnish chairs to seat an unused and unseated hall. But word was furnished by the enemies of Freethought to the effect that the lecture would be defeated, as there was no other hall to be procured, and but few came out. But the lecture went on all the same, and while it could not be called a success, it fairly illustrates the determination of Freethinkers to persevere even in the face of disappointment and the barking of orthodox hounds. P. H. MCCROSKY.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Feb. 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The two extra copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER came to hand in this morning's mail, and I hav already got them started on their missionary work in different directions where they will do some good. Having constituted myself a missionary in proselyting, I feel it has been the "Lord's will for me to engage myself in bringing souls to him" for these many years. So confident am I of this fact (through a divine revelation imparted to me last night by a most troublesome dream), that I can now proclaim to a sinful world that "I know my redeemer liveth" and that I am not mistaken in my "calling." I hav forwarded these two copies to two young converts of Liberalism, recently ushered into the "kingdom of heaven," by the new birth, having been "born again," and now ardently seeking for a knowledge of the religion of the Christ of humanity, which will be gloriously administered unto them by a careful study of its teachings through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Yesterday I lent my paper to a friend recently out of college, who has never before seen a Liberal paper, and believe me, he was just delighted with it, especially in reading the articles of the "Symposium," from Ingersoll and other prominent writers. I believe this one reading has really awakened new thoughts in the mind of this friend of ours. He will be eager to get the next number, which I hav promised to furnish him. I do believe that by the time the extra subscription expires, his gratuitous circulation on the writer's part will hav secured not a few new subscribers, and wrought no little change for the aggrandizement of our noble cause. One very great need of the Freethought movement is to get its good, useful, and instructiv literature before the masses and get them interested in it; urge them to life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, and that it is man's complete salvation to exist outside the church and Christianity.

L. DEWITT GRISWOLD.

KENT, O., April 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Civilization has always shown various relics of barbarism. Among these is the tendency to follow some leader. A certain type of character indorsed Luther, and became Lutherans. Calvin's bent of mind suited others, and they adored him as a leader; hence Calvinism as a public doctrin. The same was true of Wesley, Campbell, and a host of others. And now when Col. R. G. Ingersoll has become popular, a class are inclined to follow him, and seem never to see a defect in anything he says. To me, Mr. Ingersoll appears to be in error in some points. Whether this be the case, or I hav not advanced far enough to receive the truth, it is not for me to judge; but I write this mainly to say, I am in the most hearty sympathy with the colonel's sentiments as expressed in his "God in the Constitution," an article published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. This article should by all means be published in tract form. Among the Liberals are some of the most forcible writers of the present age. It would not be difficult to collect a couple of dozen of the most telling treatises relating to the proposed union of church and state, encroachments of Rome, etc. Remember, I write not as an Infidel, but as a Christian, for I yet retain the name. Also, I am of foreign birth; spent twenty years of my early life under the abominable conspiracy system of monarch and priest, and want no more of it; but see plainly where things are drifting on Columbia's blood-bought free soil. The different types of priests are uniting in a movement which will result in common plunder, as all union of church and state does. Those who cannot conscientiously put your paper on a mission work on account of the pictures, would zealously distribute such a class of tracts. Friends of liberty, lovers of human rights, this is no time for childish quibbles and silly bickerings. We must "hang together," or, in time, we shall "hang separately" for meddling with the interests of the old Mother of Harlots.

In love of my adopted country, JOHN DAVEY.

VAN BUREN, ARK., April 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I always like THE TRUTH SEEKER, but it appears to me that your paper of the 12th inst. is an extra good number. Edward L. Stark's piece, "Is there no Remedy?" referring to the economic inequity, with its long series of social, political, and other wrongs, should engage the attention of every friend of humanity. Our essayist's suggestion of calling a convention is very good, but the prospect of its accomplishment is very slim. Our free institutions, our political freedom, are menaced on all sides, and can only be preserved by the intelligence and virtue of the people. Our institutions of learning and free schools are designed exclusivly for the education of the young and rising generation. This is right, but we need the men and women now on the stage of action educated. Our present systems are too much merely literary, while a large majority of the educated, so-called, including our school-teachers, are grossly ignorant of the problems of life, and the world they liv in; and what vastly adds to this dark picture is the ignorance and indifference everywhere in regard to it. Parochial and denominational schools are getting full control of education. They teach literature, foreign and dead languages, and use every means that a depraved ingenuity can invent to keep the mind in darkness and bondage. They turn out vast numbers of educated illiterates, who expect to make a living by fastening this large incubus upon the rising generation. Now, "Is there no Remedy?" Let every Liberal do his duty. Hold up the hands of our lecturers and editors. Establish or aid in establishing libraries, reading-rooms, with lectures and discussions, free to all, provided only that both sides be heard. Let moral and mental science be simplified and popularized and taught.

I believe one of the most efficient means of striking old orthodoxy in a tender place, is with evolution; the term is coming into general use, and its proof is so clear that no one can honestly resist it. With it established, special creation must soon fall, and as special creation falls, special providence it seems to me must follow. HENRY SHIBLEY.

EUGENE, ORE., April 7, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: When Colonel Copeland lectured here for the Methodist church a few months ago, they billed and boomed him as "The prince of orators." But he proved himself the prince of snobs. Personally I heard him only on his "Mistakes of Bob." I was surprised to hear him quote Ingersoll so much and so correctly. He was evidently flattered with the thought of shining in such borrowed jewelry. Copeland's pious tirade against Ingersoll, together with the silly and clownish criticism of science and its advocates, were not approved by the thinking class. Of course he fed the clergy on that sweet manna which is so nutritious and inflating.

But the Methodist saints made a recent display of their holy zeal, by going in cahoots with a darkey show for a few nights and then flooding the city with cards, leaflets, etc., announcing the "Rev. Weber, the great comic revivalist," for the holidays. Soon the theological jumping-jack and his pocket-Lord arrived. Then the "inspired oracle" informed the people that he was now going to convert one hundred people per week, for the small sum of $50. Cheap indeed, for souls—less than cost. Tickets to heaven only fifty cents! Free and glorious transit insured on the old solar ark of Zion. (Noah got there on the celestial air-rate, i.e., Ararat.) But Captain Jesus now runs this free and only line. Hurrah, drive in all the lambs, and old sheep too, for now's the rare chance to get first-class tickets from the cheap-John auctioneer. One night this pulpit clown said to the gentlemen, "Boys, raise them winders there, this house is suffocating;" then, addressing the ladies, he said, "Girls, look to your wraps there, for if you take cold and die you'll all go to hell." When this inspired dime-seeker sees one or a group neglecting to sing, he favors them with a pious rebuke, and then trots his songbook pedler round again, to "accommodate all the needy—only ten cents apiece." When the "sermon" is ended, those who wish no further and direct interest in the meeting are dismissed. Then the preacher says, "You who remain are now in our private meeting, our private house, our trap. And you are all committed to an interest in our church and the salvation of your souls through its open and heavenly door." Then such a pious boring begins as either a sensible Lord or devil would be ashamed of. A few nights ago, after a fluent display of slang, taffy, and cheap gossip, the preacher collared and importuned a young Mr. Babb until he said, "No, I will not go to the mourners' bench, nor I don't go much on you or your kind of preaching." Then the pious ape thrust the boy out of the house, his mother following. As soon as Weber was arrested, and pending trial for a few days, he and the two other clerical ignoramuses, together with some of the dupes who are also on gushing terms with the mythological firm, joined in a protracted and agonizing wail to their Bible God & Co. It is said that the terra-celestial wires were kept red-hot with the holy message to Jove. Thus he was adjured to promptly send a potent delegation, with a barrel, and jug or two, full of the best quality of "inspiring grace," so as to immediately vindicate the saints and squelch the devil. But our reporter says that the wires burnt off at the home isolator just when expectation was most ardent. That was too bad. Possibly the heavenly firm didn't get here in time. At any rate, they must hav been a little bashful in materializing before the city recorder; so the case went "agin the Lord," and Weber had to pay a fine of $5 and costs, $41. The pulpit dunce is yet hooting away to some of the large and small children who like to hear the false and silly twaddle of church theology. J. C. SNODGRASS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

My Winter Boarders.

Some people keep in summer
A "home" by ocean spray;
But I take winter boarders,
And find I make it pay.
I need no cups and saucers,
No glass or linen fine,
My blessed little boarders
Care not for tea or wine.

For meat they hav no fancy,
But brown bread they think right,
They eat like "little Yankees,"
With hearty appetite.
I do not "set my table,"
I "set" my window sills,
And strange enough that daily
They all "present their bills."

They hav no hour for breakfast,
They care not when they dine,
And if they hav no supper,
They seem not to repine;
They never giv me trouble,
For they are very shy;
I've learned, when they are eating
No one must venture nigh.

I hasten to my window,
When morn its glory sends,
And call, "Come home to breakfast,
My darling birdie friends;"
A moment—all is silent—
Then, presently you see
Brown nodding heads come chirping,
"Good morning," back to me.

When hungry, they come rushing
On blinds and fences near,
As if to say, "We're ready,
If you will disappear;"
And even while they're flying,
Their bright eyes seem to see
Their evident thanksgiving
Is pay enough for me.

When summer takes them from me,
I miss them with regret,
So happy hav they made me,
I think I'm in their debt.
If anyone is gloomy,
Just advertise and say:
"Wanted, some birdie boarders,
Till winter goes away."

And when they come, don't let them
Find on your hats such things
As birdies' heads, all useless,
Or helpless, cut-off wings.
And then you'll find the secret
Of happiness and cheer
Is making others happy,
And starting heaven here.

—C. Fannie Allyn in Our Dumb Animals.

Correspondence.

FAIRDALE, O., March 31, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am eight years old. I hav three sisters. Little Elma is dead. She would hav been three years old to-day. We liv with Grandpa Burns. I just got through my first Reader. I hav been sick and could not go to school all the time. My grandpa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Corner is for me. Papa says, make a short call.

ERNIE L. BURNS.

ARLINGTON, NEB., April 3, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for nearly seven years, and I hav thought I would write for a long time but I hav failed to write till now. I hav read the letters in the Children's Corner ever since I hav been old enough to read. I am ten years old. I go to school and study reading, writing, arithmetic, spelling, and grammar. We liv a quarter of a mile from the school-house. We are having vacation now. I hav two brothers; one is twenty-five and the other is eighteen. My sister died a year ago last August; she was twenty-two.

I will close for this time, hoping to see this in print. You must excuse a short letter, as this is my first one. I remain,

Your true friend, EFFIE WHITFORD.

NORWEGIAN CONSULATE, SALONICA,
TURKEY, March 20, 1890.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: Fifteen days ago we received newspapers telling us of the death of our dear friend Mr. Fisk. Mamma says we hav lost the only true friend we possessed. She was very grieved about it. We hav not yet heard the particulars of his death, although we knew from his secretary, Mr. Hodge, how ill he was; but we hav not heard from him since. We should be much obliged to you if you would write and tell us all about him.

On the day we heard of poor Mr. Fisk's death our new baby was born, and it is a little boy this time, so there are now five of us.

I hav been teaching the boys for the last six weeks, as mother was too unwell to attend to them. I must say I did not like it. I hav to go down stairs now, so please excuse a onger letter. With much love, I remain, dear Miss Wixon,

Yours affectionately, DAISY SUTER.

ROGERS, ARK., April 6, 1890.

MISS WIXON, Madam: I hav never written to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hav often thought of doing so. There are quite a number of Liberals in Rogers, but so many Christians that we can do very little good. We hav been having the honored man, Mr. J. E. Remsburg, to lecture for us, and while here, organize a Secular Union. He gave us two lectures, "Sunday Laws" and "False Claims," about two months ago; and we had to hav him again, for the first only excited the people's curiosity. Mr. Ackers, the Campbellite preacher, challenged Mr. Remsburg for a debate, and he accepted, of course. The question for debate was: "The Bible is of human origin, contains many historical and scientific errors, immoral teachings, and many glaring contradictions," Mr. Remsburg taking the affirmativ and Mr. Ackers taking the negativ. Mr. Remsburg triumphed. Freethought is gaining ground fast, and every young Freethinker should improve every moment of their time in posting themselvs. I loaned THE TRUTH SEEKER to some of my friends, and they seem to be very much pleased.

Our Secular Union meets to-day, and I think we are doing well. I would like to see the letters in the paper of Florence Ward, Alma Wineman, Fred Hoffman, and others. Also send me postal autographs. I am making a postal autograph album and hav quite a number, among them the autograph of Mr. J. E. Remsburg. I also wish the autograph of Mr. George Remsburg.

This will do, as I am making my letter too lengthy.

I will compliment Leonora Stockinger for her "What is Morality?"

Progress to Mr. Heston and his pictures.

Wishing progress to THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am, Yours, EMMA BIXLER.

Science Column.

Birds.

Birds are found in all parts of the world, but there are more of them in warm than in cold climates.

Birds make us admire them by their sweet songs and beautiful plumage. In most cases the male has a more brilliant plumage than the female, and is often so different from the female in plumage that an inexperienced person would not know that they belonged to the same species. The goldfinch is a good example.

Birds are vertebrates, are covered with feathers, and hav hollow bones, thereby combining strength with lightness, which makes it easy for them to fly. All the bones and even the quills hav air in them, and the birds can force air into them at will from their lungs. When they hav a large supply of air they can fly higher and swifter on account of their lightness. The birds that hav the largest supply of air are the fleetest and can fly the highest, the chimney swift, for instance. All birds, with but few exceptions, can raise themselvs in the air. The ostrich and penguin cannot on account of their rudimentary wings.

The birds of the warmer climates hav a more beautiful and brilliant plumage than those of the colder northern climates. They generally shed their feathers twice a year, and in some cases the winter plumage differs from the summer—the bluebird, for example. Its winter plumage is brighter and thicker than in the summer.

The shedding of feathers is necessary to life and is the most painful event of a bird's life. The plumage is made waterproof by the oil with which they dress their feathers. The oil is secreted by a gland situated in the tail.

Birds swallow their food whole, and it first passes into the crop and then into another sack, where it is moistened, and after it is well moistened it passes into the gizzard, where it is digested with the aid of small stones and other hard substances which the birds swallow for that purpose.

Most birds build nests in which to raise their young, but there are some that build no nest, but lay their eggs on the ground and in holes in trees. While some lay their eggs in the nest of other birds, these usually lay but one egg in a place.

Birds build their nests in bushes, trees, chimneys, boxes, holes in trees, and on rocky cliffs.

Some birds hav to mine to make their nest. The bank swallows dig into the sand to make their nests. Then there are others who are masons. The chimney swift, for instance, builds its nest against the inside of the chimney. Then there are the weavers, domebuilders, and basketmakers, all of which liv in the warmer climates. The marsh wren, Baltimore oriole, quail, and magpie are good examples of this class.

The woodpecker, yellow-shaft flicker, and American sapsucker are diggers, for they dig into old trees and stumps to make their nests. The goldfinch, canary, and humming-birds are good examples of the feltmakers. The feltmakers chew up the material until it resembles felt and then form it into nests.

The eggs are laid by the female and she generally sits on them to hatch them; but in some cases the male sits on the eggs a part or all of the time. When the eggs are hatched the young are fed by the old birds on bugs, worms, and seed of weeds, etc. The young birds hav a sharp point on the end of their bills with which they break through the shell. When they are a few days old this point falls off, as it has served the purpose for which it was intended.

Some birds hatch two broods in a summer. The number of eggs laid by birds differs greatly. Some lay but two eggs, while others lay as many as thirty-six in a brood.

There are from ten to twelve thousand different kinds of birds in the world. In North America there are about seven hundred kinds.

All birds are divided into seven great classes, according to their habits, viz.: the Birds of Prey, the Climbers, Perchers, Scratchers, Runners, Waders, and the Swimmers.

The birds of prey are so called because of their habit of catching birds and other small animals for food, and some of this class liv on the carcasses of animals. They are provided by nature with large, spreading wings, long and sharp claws, and very powerful muscles, and also with a strong, hooked bill, and a very piercing sight, and acute sense of smell. The female is generally the largest. This class mate for life, the same as man. The eagle, kite, hawk, owl, vulture, and buzzard are the principal birds belonging to the class.

The climbers hav their toes in pairs, two in front and two behind. This arrangement makes it easy for them to hold fast to the bark of trees. To this class the parrot, cuckoo, woodpecker, and sapsucker belong.

The perchers are the commonest kind of birds, and contain almost all the small birds, such as the humming-birds, warblers, mocking-birds, and thrushes.

The dove, turkey, wild pigeon, hen, quail, grouse, and pheasant are the principal scratchers. This family is very important to man, as they furnish him with some of the best meat for his table. Birds of this class liv on the ground most of the time, and feed on seed, grain, and berries. One peculiarity of this class is that, except in the case of the doves and pigeons, the young birds run away from the nest, and hide in the grass as soon as they are hatched.

The runners are a very small class of birds, consisting of the ostrich and its relations. They hav very long legs, and rudimentary wings.

The waders hav very long necks, legs, and bills. They are adapted to wading in shallow water, and they liv mostly on worms and shell-fish. They inhabit the swamps, marshes, and the shores of streams. The heron, ibis, rail, plover, and crane belong to this class.

The swimmers are adapted to living in water. They hav webbed feet, and a very thick coat of feathers, which is made watertight by the oil with which they dress their feathers. Some of this class go north in summer to brood and liv in the south in winter. This class swim and dive with the greatest ease. The duck, goose, penguin, swan, and divers make up this class.

The eggs of birds are as beautiful as the birds themselvs. The eggs hav every color on them that is known to the colorist. The eggs are of all sizes. The largest egg laid by a North American bird is that laid by the California condor, which measures 4 40x2.50 inches, while that which is the smallest is laid by the rufous humming-birds, which measure but .45x.33 inches. Some eggs are pure white, without a spot, while others hav a darker background, and hav spots of a dozen different colors.

The eggs of the birds of the same family resemble each other in either color, size, or shape.

Some of the birds which generally lay pure white eggs hav been known to lay eggs with spots on, and vice versa.

All birds make some kind of a sound called singing. The singing of different birds varies as much as either their eggs or plumage. The songs of some birds are not as pleasing to the ear as others. Some of the finest singers are the mocking-bird, cul-bird, red-bird, brown thrush, and canary. The house wren must not be forgotten, for it builds its nest near the house, and its song is heard all day long.

All know that the blackbird, crow, and raven are not what might be called singing birds, as they only utter harsh cries.

What would this world be without the birds to cheer and comfort man with their sweet songs? The woods would lose all its attraction on a spring morning if it was not for the song and presence of the birds singing among the boughs. Nature would not hav fulfilled her mission had she forgotten the birds.

WM. L. PALM.

Lawrence, Kan., Feb. 15, 1890.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 313 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
A. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau st., New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
M. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.
Emory P. Robinson, Sydney.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

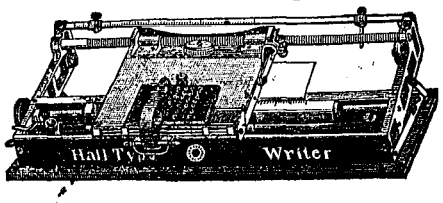
PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3.706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.



ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 Cents.

New Model Hall Typewriter

The Best Standard Typewriter in the World. Cheap, Portable, No Ink Ribbon, Interchangeable Type in all Languages, Easiest to learn and rapid as any. Agents wanted everywhere. WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED. Address

National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. P. O. box 5159.
Send for catalog and specimens of work.
13t10

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND, LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings,

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT

IS IT

DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?

A SYMPOSIUM

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAMS,
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,	THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:

Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?

PRICE 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

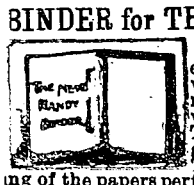
This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.



It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 333pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Charles Watts's Works.

The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.

A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.

Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.

The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.

Saints and Sinners—Which? 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Nature and the Supernatural; or, Religion and Knowledge. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3 Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.

NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.

Christianity: Defectiv and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,

OR, THE

Conflict between Reason and Superstition.

BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Price, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Candle from Under the Bushel

(Mark iv, 21); or,

1,306 Questions to the Clergy:

And for the Consideration of Others.

Instructive, Interesting, and Laughable.

BY WILLIAM HART.

Price, - - - 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

AN ADDRESS

By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE

New York State Bar Association, at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1890.

The only Complete and Authorized Edition.
PRICE, TEN CENTS.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Every Liberal Should Read

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

By ARTHUR B. MOSS.

WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.

INTRODUCTION.

Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution; Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.

Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

IRON-CLAD AND MANNA SERIES

IRON-CLAD SERIES.

1	Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
2	Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake.	5
4	Influence of Christianity on Civilization. Underwood.	25
7	Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Mueller.	10
8	Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison.	15
9	Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall.	10
10	Epidemic Delusions. Marvin.	10
11	Philosophy of Spiritualism. Marvin.	50
12	Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural, and Portrait.	25
13	Essay on Miracles. David Hume.	10
14	Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
15	Were Adam and Eve our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh.	5
16	Why do Men Starve? Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
17	Logic of Life Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. George J. Holyoake.	10
18	A Plea for Atheism. Chas. Bradlaugh.	10
19	Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake.	5
20	Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake.	5
21	Defence of Secular Principles. C. Watts.	5
22	Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts.	5
23	The Christian Deity. Charles Watts.	5
24	Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts.	5
25	Freethought and Mod. Progress. Watts.	5
26	Christianity: Its Nature, and Influence on Civilization. Chas. Watts.	5
28	Thoughts on Atheism. Austin Holyoake.	5
29	Is there a Moral Governor of the Universe? Austin Holyoake.	5
30	Philosophy of Secularism. Chas. Watts.	5
31	Has Man a Soul? Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
38	Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh.	5
39	Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
40	Poverty: Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H.	10
42	Science and Bible Antagonistic. Watts.	5
43	Christian Scheme of Redemption. Watts.	5
44	Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake.	10
47	Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Chas. Bradlaugh.	5

MANNA SERIES.

1	Original Manna for "God's chosen."	5
3	New Life of David. Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
4	Why I was Excommunicated. Barnard.	20
5	200 Questions Without Answers.	5
6	Dialogue between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin.	10
7	Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian.	10
8	Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake.	5
9	New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
10	A Few Words about the Devil.	5
11	New Life of Jacob.	5
12	Daniel, the Dreamer. Austin Holyoake.	10
13	Specimen of the Bible: Esther. Holyoake	10
14	Acts of the Apostles: A Farce. A. H.	10
15	Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. H.	10
16	Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
17	Who Was Jesus Christ? C. Bradlaugh.	5
18	What Did Jesus Teach? C. Bradlaugh.	5
19	New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
20	New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
21	A Secular Prayer. Holyoake. Per doz.	10

On orders for Iron Clad and Manna we will send $1.10 worth for $1; $2.50 worth for $2; $5 worth for $3, and $10 worth for $5.

New Publications.

Unless otherwise specified, all publications noticed here can be had of THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, at the prices named.

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION. By Arthur C. Moss. Preface by H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S. London: Watts & Co. Cloth, $1.

This is an excellent book, which we can recommend to our readers as clear in language, trustworthy in statement, and irrefutable in reasoning. A perusal of the chapter titles will impart an idea of the topics that it treats: Introduction; Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution; II, Bible Biology and Evolution; III, Bible Myths and Evolution; IV, Bible History and Evolution; V, Bible Morality and Evolution; VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; VII, Miracles Incredible; VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; IX, Bible Art and Evolution; X. Bible God and Evolution; XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; XII, Heaven Hereafter; XIII, Conclusion. Thus we hav a complete anatomization and annihilation of scriptural error and absurdity of every order—astronomical, biological, mythical, historical, ethical, supernatural, and all. Some of the chapters hav appeared in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and these hav been revised and improved, while new ones hav been added. An opinion on Jesus, from the chapter, "Jesus as God," is as follows:

"From all the evidence accessible to us, it seems perfectly clear that Jesus was an enthusiast, who did not always assume the noblest bearing toward those who differed from him, and who not only condemned his opponents in extravagantly strong terms, but urged his disciples to take an even more offensiv course (Mark vi, 2). Jesus indeed sometimes appeared to lose his mental balance, so much so that his own friends declared that he was beside himself (Mark iii, 21). From the evidence afforded by the gospels, Jules Soury concludes that Jesus suffered periodically from congestion of the brain, and was sometimes insane. . . . . Strange, too, that when Jesus came to die, he prayed, 'Oh, my father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me!' (Matt. xxvi, 39). If Jesus were God, he must hav known that to let the cup pass was at one stroke to send the whole of mankind to eternal perdition. Moreover, he surely knew his own mind, and was not likely, by a prayer to himself, to change his own immutable will. But all these difficulties shrink to comparativly small proportions beside that which is involved in his exclamation in the last agony of all, as he hung stretched upon the cross, 'Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani!' 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' If Jesus were God, in what sense could it be that he had forsaken himself? If he had come to die, to save the world, was this extraordinary utterance indicativ of grief at having to undergo such a trying ordeal?"

AN OPEN LETTER TO HON. EDWARD M. PAXSON, chief-justice of Pennsylvania. By Richard B. Westbrook, of the Philadelphia bar. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. Paper, pp. 36, 10 cents.

In this pamphlet the learned and able president of our Secular Union chastises Chief-justice Paxson for having delivered to the law school of the University of Pennsylvania, on Oct. 2, 1889, an address containing statements not sustained by the facts of history, which, coming from so high an authority, might hav an undesirable influence over the young hearers. The animadversions fall mostly under two heads, indicated in the queries: "1. Was the law of Sinai 'the first of which we hav knowledge?' 2. Was Moses the 'greatest statesman and lawgiver the world has ever produced?'" The passages especially objected to are these:

"The first law of which we hav knowledge was given to the world amid the storms and the clouds, the lightning and thunders of Mount Sinai. It has come down to us through the roll of the ages stamped with the awful seal of the godhead."

"The law of Sinai was a moral law. Something more was needed for the political government of the people to whom it was immediately addressed. This was supplied by the greatest statesman and lawgiver the world has ever produced. Upon this man and the system of law which he formulated with divine aid, the world has looked with admiration for thousands of years, and will continue to do so to the end of time."

A preposterous error of time is the first that is exposed, and this is done as follows:

"In speaking of time your honor uses two dates. You say, on pages 19 and 20, 'Whether wise or not, the principle originated with the great Mosaic lawgiver, fourteen hundred and fifty-one years before the birth of Christ.' And on page 19 you say, 'It has taken the world three thousand three hundred and odd years to come up to the standard here laid down by Moses.' . . . You think Moses promulgated the law about fourteen hundred and fifty-one years before Christ, and this must hav been about two thousand five hundred and fifty-three years after the creation, which added to eighteen hundred and ninety, the present date, would make the world just five thousand eight hundred and ninety-four years old. Lyell, a most judicious geologist, estimated the delta of the Mississippi at one hundred thousand years, and some persons think these figures should hav been doubled. Professor John Fiske thinks the glacial period began two hundred and forty thousand years ago, and that human beings inhabited Europe at least one hundred and sixty thousand years earlier, thus giving an antiquity to our race of not less than four hundred thousand years. Other scientists talk of hundreds of thousands and even millions of years, but we attach no importance to specific figures. We simply insist upon an antiquity which very far exceeds six thousand years."

The effectiv way in which Mr. Westbrook uncovers and derides the many other absurdities that were attempted to be palmed off as nineteenth-century facts, space limits do not permit us to display here. Whoever procures and reads the work will feel pride in our champion against the too numerous and too obtrusiv and odious shams of the age.

In India Freethought is making a certain moderate progress, and beginning to overturn the vast and ancient system of pessimistic belief that constitutes the religion there, in the same manner as it has already progressed so far in inroads upon the derived pessimistic faith of our own land. A Freethought periodical just started there is the Cosmopolitan, published and edited in Calcutta by Raliprasanna Ravyabishared. We wish it good fortune.

"All About Devils," is a fifteen-cent pamphlet by Moses Hull. It is described on its title-page as "An inquiry as to whether modern Spiritualism and other great reforms come from his satanic majesty and his subordinates in the kingdom of darkness." It deals many and piercing blows to the inconsistent and unguarded position the church has taken in regard to the diabolology of the Bible, Spiritualism, and corollary matters.

A very handsome new edition of Count Volney's "Ruins; or, Meditation on the Revolutions of Empires," has been got out by Peter Eckler. The volume also contains "The Law of Nature," another work by the same distinguished author. The book is embellished with a portrait of Volney, and other illustrations. We are willing to pronounce as our private opinion that whoever has omitted to read this veteran Antichristian disquisition possesses a course of Freethought instruction that is yet defectiv and incomplete. The price is $1.

"Theological Presumption," a 5-cent pamphlet published by Charles Watts, is "An open letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S." It deals with the following subjects: 1. Why do the clergy avoid debate? 2 The position of Agnosticism toward Christianity. 3. Freethought and men of science. 4. The difference between facts and opinions. 5. Christ and heroism. 6. Christianity and slavery. We should say that this address may fittingly be presented not to Rev. Mr. Burns alone, but as well to almost any of the presumptuous clerics whose spreading pretense requires unending clipping down with the blades of fact and sense.

"Simple Elements of Navigation." By Lucien Young, U. S. N. With numerous plates and tables. 12mo, morocco flaps, $2. Published by John Wiley & Sons, 53 East Tenth street, New York. The publishers claim that this book supplies admirably the great want of all seafaring men for a pocket manual of navigation. No navigator, they say, should be without it, whether he goes to sea as a business or for amusement, because it presents in a condensed form everything that a navigator wants to know, and in such a plain and simple manner that anyone who knows the four rules of arithmetic can readily understand it. All complicated mathematical formulas and difficult calculations are rendered unnecessary by the use of this handbook, and yet it contains all that is required for the proper and safe navigation of any ship, provided with suitable charts, to or from any part of the globe. The solution of the problems is reduced to one simple and uniform method, and all the necessary tables are given in the same covers. For anyone requiring a safe, simple, and easy process by which to navigate a vessel, the book is indispensable.

In the latest number of the Popular Science Monthly Andrew D. White continues his account of "Comparativ Mythology," as illustrated by the decline of the Dead sea legends. There is a paper on "Absolute Political Ethics," by Herbert Spencer, asserting the practical value of the highest possible standard for political action. One of the many spirited replies to Grant Allen's recent article depreciating woman's ability which hav poured in upon the magazine is published in this number. It is by Mrs. M. F. Armstrong, of Hampton College, and is entitled, "The Mission of Educated Women." Mrs. Sophie B. Herrick contributes an illustrated article on "The Laws of Films," which are shown in many curious ways by soap-bubbles, drops of oil, etc. An instructiv essay, by Prof. G. T. W. Patrick, on "The Psychology of Prejudice," shows how easy it is to take biased views of things. The "Origin of Land Ownership" is discussed by Daniel E. Wing, who maintains that the landowner is only the tenant of the community. An article on taking advantage of the fresh and eager questioning spirit of childhood in teaching the facts and ways of nature is contributed by Prof. C. H. Henderson, under the title, "A Chemical Prolog." There is a copiously illustrated article on the "Physiognomy of the Mouth," by Th. Piderot, explaining the different expressions which the mouth takes on. "The Meaning of Pictured Spheres," by J. Z Houzeau, describes the forms which different peoples hav imagined the star-groups to represent. There are a "Sketch" and portrait of Plateau, a Belgian physicist, who continued his valuable work after becoming blind.

The April number of the North American Review represents the same unwearying care and liberal expenditure which hav made that magazine what it is. The many difficult questions involved in such a case as that of the United States ship Enterprise and her crew are discussed by the admiral of the United States navy, David D. Porter, whose selection by the editor for the treatment of this subject is another instance of the determination of the Review to bring into every issue the most authoritativ and enlightened opinion. A no less timely article is furnished by Oswald Ottendorfer, the eminent editor of the Staats Zeitung, on German Socialism. To scientific readers the most important contribution to the number will be that of Francis Galton on "Kinship and Correlation," in which that distinguished scientist givs the results of some of his recent researches. No higher authority on the subject of heredity is alive to-day than Mr. Galton, who is the cousin of Charles and the grandson of Erasmus Darwin, and the author of (among many other works) "Hereditary Genius; Its Laws and Consequences" and of "Natural Inheritance," the latter recently published. Religion is represented in the same number by the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott and the Rev. Dr. Edward Beecher; Philanthropy, by the Right Rev. Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota; the Knights of Labor by Master Workman Powderly; the South and its Needs by ex-Governor Lowry, of Mississippi; Literature by Marion Harland and O. B. Bunce; Political Reform by Senator Saxton, and Social Life as it exists in Paris by the brilliant and vivacious Madame Adam. Mention should also be made of an earnest article against "Immorality in Conversation," by Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, the novelist, and of various "Notes and Comments," which, with an able chapter by the Hon. W. P. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, continuing the Gladstone-Blaine controversy, complete the number.

No. 121 of the Humboldt Library is "Utilitarianism," by John Stuart Mill, the standard English writer whose works form part of the library of every scholar. The opening remark of this work is that "there are few circumstances among those which make up the present condition of human knowledge, more unlike what might hav been expected, or more significant of the backward state in which speculation on the most important subjects still lingers, than the little progress which has been made in the decision of the controversy respecting the criterion of right and wrong." The doctrin of morals which Mr. Mill brings forward as a substitute for that of which the sanction is God's command, and the end God's favor, is thus stated: "The creed which accepts as the foundation of morals, Utility, or the Greatest Happiness Principle, holds that actions are right in proportion as they tend to promote happiness, wrong as they tend to produce the reverse of happiness. By happiness is intended pleasure, and the absence of pain; by unhappiness, pain, and the privation of pleasure." One common misapprehension of this creed the author thus notices: "Such a theory of life excites in many minds, and among them in some of the most estimable in feeling and purpose, inveterate dislike. To suppose that life has (as they express it) no higher end than pleasure—no better and nobler object of desire and pursuit—they designate as utterly mean and groveling; as a doctrin worthy only of swine, to whom the followers of Epicurus, were, at a very early period, contemptuously likened; and modern holders of the doctrin are occasionally made the subject of equally polite comparisons by its German, French, and English assailants." And to this objection, or willful misunderstanding, the explanation is given: "When thus attacked, the Epicureans hav always answered, that it is not they, but their accusers, who represent human nature in a degrading light; since the accusation supposes human beings to be capable of no pleasures except those of which swine are capable. . . . There is no known Epicurean theory of life which does not assign to the pleasures of the intellect, of the feelings and imagination, and of the moral sentiments, a much higher value as pleasures than to those of mere sensation. . . . Utilitarian writers in general hav placed the superiority of mental over bodily pleasures chiefly in the greater permanency, safety, uncostliness, etc., of the former." The further exposition of the Utilitarian moral system, and maintenance of it against its old dogmatical rivals, we hav not space to follow. We may add that the publishers merit praise for the handsome new form, with large type and fine paper, in which the Library now appears. Price of this number, 15 cents.

The Twentieth Century of the 21st ult. contains Colonel Ingersoll's latest contribution to Freethought, an answer to the question, "How do you account for the great change that has taken place in the religious thought of the world?" The colonel says:

"The average of intelligence has in the last few years greatly increased. Man may hav as much credulity as he ever had, on some subjects, but certainly on the old subjects he has less. There is not as great a difference to-day between the members of the learned professions and the common people. Man is governed less and less by authority. He cares but little for the conclusions of the universities. He does not feel bound by the action of synods or ecumenical councils—neither does he bow to the decisions of the highest tribunals, unless the reasons given for the decisions satisfy his intellect. One reason for this is, that the so-called 'learned' do not agree among themselvs—that the universities dispute each other—that the synod attacks the ecumenical council—that the parson snaps his fingers at the priest, and even the Protestant bishop holds the pope in contempt. If the learned can thus disagree, there is no reason why the common people should hold to one opinion. They are at least called upon to decide as between the universities or synods; and in order to decide, they must examin both sides, and having examined both sides, they generally hav an opinion of their own.

"There was a time when the average man knew nothing of medicin—he simply opened his mouth and took the dose. If he died it was a dispensation of providence—if he got well, it was a triumph of science. Now this average man not only asks the doctor what is the matter with him—not only asks what medicin will be good for him,—but insists on knowing the philosophy of the cure—asks the doctor why he givs it—what result he expects—and as a rule has a judgment of his own.

"So in law. The average business man has an exceedingly good idea of the law affecting his business. There is nothing now mysterious about what goes on in courts or in the decisions of judges—they are published in every direction, and all intelligent people who happen to read these opinions hav their ideas as to whether the opinions are right or wrong. They are no longer the victims of doctors or of lawyers or of courts.

"The same is true in the world of art and literature. The average man has an opinion of his own. He is no longer a parrot repeating what somebody else says. He not only has opinions, but he has the courage to express them. In literature the old models fail to satisfy him. He has the courage to say that Milton is tiresome—that Dante is prolix—that they deal with subjects having no human interest. He laughs at Young's "Night Thoughts" and Pollock's "Course of Time," knowing that both are filled with hypocrisies and absurdities. He no longer falls upon his knees before the mechanical poetry of Mr. Pope. He chooses—and stands by his own opinion. I do not mean that he is entirely independent, but that he is going in that direction.

"The same is true of pictures. He prefers the modern to the old masters. He prefers Corot to Raphael. He gets more real pleasure from Millet and Troyon than from all the pictures of all the saints and donkeys of the Middle Ages.

"In other words, the days of authority are passing away."

We advise our readers to send five cents for a copy of the Twentieth Century and read all of the article, thereby getting some new ideas. The same issue also contains a poem by Edgar Fawcett. "At the Window," and two articles, by Van Buren Denslow and Prof. W. G. Sumner, opening an economic symposium which will discuss from week to week what Mr. Pentecost assumes to be the most important systems of proposed reform.

Obituary.

I am commissioned to chronicle the death of another stanch Freethinker—one who has been a subscriber and constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for several years past. Rachel H. Baker was born in Clinton county, O., May 3, 1813. Her parents, Joseph and Rhoda Anthony, whose memory she held sacred, had moved from Richmond, Va., one year prior to her birth. She was married to John Y. Baker Nov. 30, 1833; moved to Hamilton county, Ind., in the fall of 1840, being among the first settlers. She was the mother of ten children; four of them having preceded her to the spirit world. Six are left, together with her aged husband, to mourn her departure. She passed away calmly and peacefully near 9 o'clock Sunday evening, April 6, 1890. She was a very industrious woman, devoted wife and mother, and a kind neighbor. She was noted for her good qualities as a nurse. She was strictly moral, honest, and punctual in all her dealings. At an early period in her life she became interested in the subject of woman's rights, which was then very unpopular. She was raised in the Quaker church, her mother being a minister and strictly orthodox, but her father was very Liberal in his views, and she partaking more of his organization, she naturally developed in that direction as she grew older. She believed firmly in a future existence, but never in a place of future punishment, that being inconsistent with her every sense of right and justice. She embraced the Spiritual philosophy in 1854, remaining firmly in this belief from that time on; it being a source of great comfort and consolation to her in all her troubles and trials in earth-life. LIZZIE F. BAKER.

Baker's Corner, April 15, 1890.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Due Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No.2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps. 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Biblo-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell..... 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Capphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 5
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology..... 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
10 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson..... 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
13 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

SPECIAL SALE
OF
WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2.50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4.50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17 50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.50; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels, $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart-shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can hav their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 5th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,
Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union
Meets every Snuday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.: LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club
Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Milwaukee, Wis., Liberal Club
Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 216 Grand ave., (Fraternity Hall). Lecture followed by debates. The public cordially invited.

Brotherhood of Moralists, No. 903, Prairie City, Ia,
Meets every Sunday in the Liberal reading room hall at 2:30 P M All Liberals are cordially invited. F. V. DRAPER, Cor. Sec.

San Francisco, Cal, Freethought Society
Meets every Sunday evening at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Seats free.

Des Moines Secular Union
Holds regular meetings at Good Templar Hall, Flynn Block, S.E corner 7th and Locust Streets. Lectures followed by discussion. Friends from abroad heartily welcome.
FRANKLIN STEINER, Pres.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 25 cents Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indescretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT.

"Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS.

VINELAND, N.J.

Inquiries are frequently received asking what we know about Dr Fellows, of Vineland, N. J. First, we know that he is a reliable gentleman of rare professional skill, who has earned success by good work. Second that he fulfills all his agreements to the letter. Third, that he has performed cures of hopeless cases that in the olden time his skill would have been called miraculous. Fourth, and last, we know him to be an honest man and a stanch Liberal.—The Better Way.

News of the Week.

IT is said that the Roman Catholic church desires the annexation of Canada and Mexico that she may elect a Catholic president.

THE International Arbitration and Peace Association hav asked Emperor William to set Europe an example by disbanding his armies.

EMIN PASHA has started for central Africa again, with six hundred men.

THE worst flood known in northern Texas prevails in the Trinity river country.

IN his latest utterance the pope says that "in America the vicar of Christ is respected, but it is not always so in Europe."

IT is said that England is encroaching on Venezuelan territory, and it is hoped that a federation of American republics will stop such appropriations.

AT London on the 26th ult. Signor Succi ended a forty days' fast, during which he had wasted from 176 to 92 pounds and lost one inch in hight.

SEVERAL breaks in the Mississippi river levees hav occurred. In West Baton Rouge parish, La., six negroes were drowned. New Orleans is partly submerged, and federal aid is asked.

THE Indians of the Tongue river agency, Mont., are excited over the appearance among them of a Christ, a white man that shows scars of the wounds in his hands, feet, and side.

SENTIMENTS of freedom hav spread to the czar's own family, the young grand duke Constantine having taken to writing revolutionary poetry.

PROFESSOR STOLZLE announces the discovery in a library at Augsburg of a manuscript of Giordano Bruno, containing criticisms on Aristotle and letters relating to various studies.

SPEAKER REED of the House of Representativs said on the 26th ult. that the way to stop the deprivation of rights at the polls which, Republicans allege, negroes suffer, is to remove elections from state into federal management and protection.

IN the summer of 1891 an Antarctic expedition will be sent out at the joint expense of Baron Oscar Dickson of Gothenburg, the Antarctic Exploration Committee of the Royal Society of Victoria, and the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia.

AT the funeral of Frank Richmond, lecturer for Buffalo Bill's Wild West, at New York last Sunday, Rev. Dr. Canfield of the Church of Our Father read the service of the Universalist church and a selection from Colonel Ingersoll's oration at the grave of his brother-in-law.

A SUPERIOR officer who was lately given a post in Siberia writes that all the people there are "wicked and depraved, given to gossiping, slandering, spying, and secret denunciations;" that the small officers are recruited from criminals and are "all thieves and drunkards," and that it is "impossible to find an honest man" there.

THE management of Claflin College, S. C., the second largest colored college in the Union, supported partly by the Claflin fund and partly by the state, are adjudicating the trouble that convulsed the institution lately. The white professor of mathematics came to blows with the colored professor of morals over a religious revival which was complained of by the former as interfering with the students' work. The students all sided with the professor of morals and refused to attend the class-room of mathematics until the professor should be removed.

MEAT AX, the big medicin man of the Shoshone reservation, predicts that in July a flood will drown all white men as retribution for their treatment of the Indians. Runners hav been sent all over the reservation, and to the Crows, Cheyennes, and Sioux, to herald the calamity, and a rush of Indians to the Wind River mountains, the scheduled haven, is expected. Meat Ax exhibits considerable ingenuity in arranging for the general sousing. He has it that all the whites and half-breeds will be drowned, and that the game will apparently die to make the play strong, but that as the waters recede the beasts will revive, to become the prey of the braves.

GODS AND RELIGIONS
OF
ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.
Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.
Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4: mor., g. e., $4.50.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

SAUL IS PLEASED.

And Michal, Saul's daughter, loved David: and they told Saul and the thing pleased him.—1 Sam. xviii, 20.

THE Truth Seeker Annual
—AND—
Freethinkers' Almanac,
1890.
(E. M. 290.)
WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Calendar for 1890,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1889,	17
Faded Flowers. Poem by J. E. Remsburg,	24
The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue. T. B. Wakeman,	26
Mostly Fools. W. Stewart Ross (Saladin),	36
Record of the Spanish Inquisition,	44
Dates of the Fabrication of Some Roman Catholic Dogmas,	44
The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a Moral. Helen H. Gardener,	45
The Middle Ages. Illustrated,	69
The Priest,	70
The Supernatural World,	71
The Reformation,	73
Future Terrors,	77
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated,	79
Freethought Journals in the United States,	96
In Search of a Spirit. E. M. Macdonald,	97
Why I Left the Church. H. O. Pentecost,	109

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Gems of Thought.

To see the absurdity of the prejudice against it [science] we need only remark that science is simply a higher development of common knowledge; and that, if science is repudiated, all knowledge must be repudiated along with it. The extremest bigot will not suspect any harm in the observation that the sun rises earlier and sets later in the summer than in the winter, but will rather consider such an observation as a useful aid in fulfilling the duties of life. Well, astronomy is an organized body of similar observations, made with greater nicety, extended to a larger number of objects, and so analyzed as to disclose the real arrangement of the heavens, and to dispel our false conceptions of them. That iron will rust in water, that wood will burn, that long-kept viands become putrid, the most timid sectarian will teach without alarm, as things useful to be known. But these are chemical truths; chemistry is a systematized collection of such facts, ascertained with precision, and so classified and generalized as to enable us to say with certainty, concerning each simple or compound substance, what change will occur in it under given conditions. And thus it is with all the sciences.—Spencer.

SCIENCE and common knowledge are composed of the same material—viz, facts. Common knowledge, however, consists of facts unorganized and unconnected; science, of facts organized.—Jno. Wilson.

IN the same sense that everything may be said to be a mystery, so also may it be said that everything is a miracle, and that no one thing is a greater miracle than another. The elephant, though larger, is not a greater miracle than a mite; nor a mountain a greater miracle than an atom. To an almighty power, it is no more difficult to make the one than the other; and no more difficult to make a million of worlds than to make one. Everything, therefore, is a miracle, in one sense, whilst in the other sense there is no such thing as a miracle. . . . Mankind hav conceived to themselvs certain laws, by which what they call nature is supposed to act; and that a miracle is something contrary to the operation and effect of those laws.—Paine.

WHY! Who makes much of a miracle?
As to me, I know nothing else but miracles.
To me every hour of the light and dark is a miracle;
Every cubic inch of space is a miracle;
Every square yard of the surface of the earth is spread with the same;
Every cubic foot of the interior swarms with the same;
Every spear of grass—the frames, limbs, organs of men and women and all that concerns them—
All these to me are unmistakably perfect miracles.
To me the sea is a continual miracle—
The fishes that swim, the rocks, the motion of the waves, the ships with men in them—
What stranger miracles are there?—Whitman.

I LOVE a soul not all of wood,
Predestinated to be good,
But true to the backbone
Unto itself alone,
And false to none;
Born to its own affairs,
Its own joys and own cares;
By whom the work which God begun
Is finished and not undone;
Taken up where he left off,
Whether to worship or to scoff;
If not good, why then evil,
If not good God, good devil.
Goodness! you hypocrit, come out of that!
Liv your life, do your work, then take your hat. —Thoreau.

WELL-DOING [taught Socrates] consisted in doing well whatever a man undertook. "The best man," he said, "and the most beloved by the gods, is he that, as a husbandman, performs well the duties of husbandry; as a surgeon, the duties of the medical art; in political life, his duty toward the commonwealth. The man that does nothing well is neither useful nor agreeable to the gods." And as knowledge is essential to all undertakings, knowledge is the one thing needful. This exclusiv regard to knowledge was his one sidedness as a moral theorist; but he did not consistently exclude all reference to the voluntary control of appetite and passion.—Bain's Moral Science.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 17. No. 19. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, May 10, 1890. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

WOMAN'S PERILS, PAST AND PRESENT.

Notes and Clippings.

THE attention of Senator Blair is called by the Ironclad Age to the fact that a "real old-fashioned hoe-down ball was held in the White House at Washington the other night! No Christian government can stand up under the weight of such wickedness. If God were in the Constitution such sa'anic carryings-on could be sot down onto, and hard. Only think of a nation that shuts God out, but takes the fiddler in! Verily Brother Blair has got much hard work before him."

THE case of R. M. King, chronicled in these columns three weeks ago, in which he was fined $75 for Sunday labor by Judge Swiggert in the circuit court of Obion county, Tenn., and appealed to the supreme court, will be argued on appeal during the present term of the court. The case will be reached some time in May. The similar case against L. A. Callicott in the circuit court of Dyer county has been continued to await the action of the supreme court in the appealed case of Mr. King.

CLYDE LONG, of Logansport, aged seventeen, says he is Jesus Christ, and that he must be crucified. He has repeatedly begged his parents and friends to nail him to a cross which he has erected. Upon their refusal he will take a knife and inflict severe wounds upon himself, stabbing his hands and body in a terrible manner. He also swallows carbolic acid in quantities sufficient to cause terrible pain, but not enough to kill him, and he asserts that he must die on the cross. Long says he has received orders from heaven that he must suffer on the cross to save the wicked people of his township.

WE learn from our brotherly Frisco contemporary that the Catholic newspapers are placing Lilian Leland's book, "A Woman's Journey Around the World," on the index expurgatorius along with the writings of Mark Twain. Miss Leland, in describing the Vatican paintings at Rome, was candid enough to admit that the pictures were well executed, but the most of the subjects portrayed were in bad taste, the old saints and martyrs wearing, as a general thing, "an expression of sublime idiocy." The Washington Church News (Catholic) is especially worried about the effect of that kind of treatment of sacred subjects.

A PAPER called Christian Science Thought, published at Kansas City, Mo., makes this statement: "A friend has just told me of a very remarkable case that came under her notice yesterday. A lady let a heavy window fall on her hand and it cut two of her fingers clear off. She was treated by a Christian scientist and those fingers hav grown on, nails and all perfect, and just as shapely as before." So the age of miracles is not past, comments Freethought, that is to say, there are still people mendacious enough to affirm the miraculous, and others credulous enough to believe them; and that is all that was ever necessary to any age of miracles.

THE Presbyterian Review, noticing the present avowed desire to be free from the bondage of old creeds, says: "The causes of this present-day unrest are not far to seek. Without attempting to enumerate all the various causes, we would put first, the influence of the French and German Rationalistic schools, which by denying the divinity of Christ seek to overturn the foundations of the Christian religion. Strenuous efforts are made to show that Christ's death was not an atoning sacrifice, and that it is possible for men to be saved without believing upon Christ and his finished work. If such teaching be accepted, it is evident a large part of the creeds of Christian churches must go."

SAYS G. W. Foote, president of the National Secular Society of England: "Mrs. Besant has definitivly resigned her vice-presidency of the National Secular Society, and I presume her membership as well. The reason she assigns is that she could not work in harmony with the new president. Behind this, of course, is the fact that she has become a leader of Theosophy. Greatly as I deplore the loss of Mrs. Besant I do not feel any shock at her nominal resignation. Her real resignation took place many months ago, when she gave her enthusiasm to the cause of Theosophy, and ceased attending the executiv meetings of the National Secular Society." The daily papers of this city allege that Mrs. Besant is now on her way to the United States to lecture on Theosophy and Socialism.

AN American journal says: "Let the people pursue their secular avocations or pleasures on a Sunday and the preacher's occupation is gone. Consequently the preacher is fighting for his trade as any other business man would do, and he proposes to boycott the daily papers having a Sunday issue. It is merely a struggle for trade between the preacher and the Sunday paper." Now, this is frank. The Sunday paper is struggling for trade whose effect is to be to make the people pursue their secular avocations or pleasures on Sunday; and if it succeeds, the preacher's occupation—which is, remember, to beseech men to be reconciled to God—is gone. A more deliberate declaration of war upon religion has surely never been penned. Well, it is worth while for us to know what the Sunday paper means.—London Methodist Times.

THE London Freethinker publishes these items of news from France: At the general assembly of the French Freethought Federation held at the Salle de l'Ermitage, 29 rue de Jussieu, Paris, on Sunday, April 20th, the statutes of the new federation were approved and the following persons elected on the commission: E. Pasquier, C. Cilwa, Madam Pasquier, G. Verone, MM. Beugnot, Schacre, Bevalet, Cottar, Okecki, Odin, Mlle. Chelega, Loevy, MM. Lebey, Dobelle, Cordeau, and Rouselle. The energetic secretary, M. Pasquier, and our good friend, M. Cilwa, were level at the head of the poll, and the rest followed in the order given. Our French friends also organized a Dernier de la Libre Pensée, for collecting money after the fashion of Peter's Pence for the propagation of Freethought. President Carnot, who is too much of a Freethinker to go to church, has had a splendid reception in the south of France. Boulanger, who coquetted with the church, is pretty well played out, while Carnot is daily rising in the esteem and affection of the people. At Corsica he was rather startled when the fishermen kissed his hand; it looked like treating him as a king; but it was only their fashion of treating the great. One of these fine fellows saved twenty lives in a violent storm. While Carnot is respected by such men he may laugh at Boulanger and the church too.

Communications.

Why I Am Opposed to Christianity.

Translated by G. N.

[For delivering this lecture, which we giv here in the author's own words but in condensed form, Viktor E. Lennstrand was sentenced to three months' imprisonment by Shanska Hofratten, to six months' additional imprisonment by Svea Hofratt, and to three months' further confinement by the King's court. The chief of Stockholm police prohibited it in Stockholm, yet it has since been delivered there as well as in Orebro, Gefle, Sodertelje, and other cities, and although those who delivered it notified the police authorities and demanded to be indicted, since they had committed the same crime as Lennstrand, yet these officers of law and justice chose to ignore the fact. The "blasphemous" passages are in italics.]

With regard to the infallibility of the Bible, a minister of the Swedish state church has informed me that in this book there hav been found no less than nine thousand mistakes in science, and double as many in history and chronology. Yet this is not all. In 1873 Rev. Pumarius Fehr stated in an essay on the antiquities of the New Testament, published in the magazine Loesning for Falket, that the interpolations and forgeries are no fewer than thirty thousand. . . .

The Bible informs us what year the universe, earth, and man were created. And this would hav taken place 5,892 years ago, as from Adam to Abraham there are, according to Gen. vi and xi, 2,008 years, and from Abraham to Christ, likewise according to Bible chronology, 1,996 years. But now, it cannot be disputed that Egypt had a highly developed civilization eleven thousand years ago—that is, five thousand years, according to Bible computation, before God created man. What is still more, in the deeper layers of the Mississippi delta human bones hav been discovered which fifty-seven thousand years ago constituted parts of living beings. These people must then hav lived fifty thousand years before man was made. But what do these bones, found six hundred feet under the surface and covered with layers of pine cones, amount to; of what importance is evidence gathered from the monuments and sculptures of the ancient Egyptians, when the Bible says that the earth and human family are but six thousand years of age? And should anyone doubt, and consider the discoveries of science of greater value than an old Hebrew story, let him pause and remember that the church has at her command such convincing proofs as fine and imprisonment. What is still worse, "he that believeth not shall be damned." . . .

We do not hav to read very far in the Bible to find the one extravagant story after the other. In Gen. vi and vii the flood is mentioned. The reason for its appearance is said to be the increasing wickedness of mankind. It seems that God at that time knew no means whereby to make mankind better, hence he became sorrowful in his heart; and then, finding a way to get those evil beings out of this world, he said, "I will destroy man whom I hav created from the face of the earth; both man and beast, and the creeping things and the fowls of the air, for it repenteth me that I hav made them." [Compare Gen. i, 31; Num. xxiii, 19.—Translator.] But even if God had reason to be angry with mankind, and resolve to destroy it, what sensible excuse can be given for his destroying both animals and birds? And if he, as it is stated, intended to destroy all, why did he then save four or seven pairs of each kind? How can this exemption be made to agree with the plan of the total destruction of all that lived? But no matter. God commanded Noah to build an ark, three hundred cubits long, fifty cubits wide, and thirty cubits high, and in this ark he was to take all kinds of living beings and food necessary to keep them. "Thus did Noah, according to all that God commanded him, so did he." It has been computed that if this is true, then did the ark contain 43,000 birds, 5,000 mammals, 1 000 reptils, 1,500,000 insects, amounting to 1,558,000 beings. One year and seventeen days were they in the dark, prevented from moving, and with one small window only. I will not now think upon how it could be with the atmosphere and cleanliness in such a menagerie, but I will suppose they were there, 1,500,000 lower animals and 8 human beings, more than a year in darkness, dirt, and want for food. But whence did all the water come which covered the whole earth, even the highest mountains? John Leslie states in the Encyclopedia Britannica, that even if the atmosphere at once poured down its whole quantity of water, yet this cloud-burst would not produce five inches of water covering the entire earth. And William Denton writes in one of his works, that to make it possible for the water to cover the highest mountains, it must hav rained at least seven hundred feet every twenty-four hours during forty days, or in other words, it should every day hav rained down one thousand four hundred times more water than the atmosphere contains. . . .

I am opposed to Christianity because it considers a book filled with mistakes, contradictions, and impossibilities to be a divine authority on all questions, both of fact and of justice. I combat Christianity because its Gods are just as imperfect and unreal as all other gods. The Bible is a human product, no revelation; and the Gods of Christianity are human fabrications.

Let me first speak about the Old Testament's God. There never lived a tyrant, a human monster, who has consigned to ruin so many fathers, mothers, babies, boys, and girls, as this God, in whose mouth are put the words, "Thou shalt not kill." I beg of you to read the fifth book of Moses and the book of Joshua. Read those as you would any other tale [rafvarhistoria; sarcasm lost by translation], and tell me then if I am a fallen being because I cannot kneel in devotion to and worship the God there depicted. . . .

And I come to the New Testament's God and ask you: What do you think of this God who takes care of the birds—but in a way that permits thousands of these to die from hunger and cold; who watches the lilies of the field—thousands of which die from drouth and cold; and who takes care of mankind—yet allows millions to suffer? I ask you, Can you love a God like him as your father?

But Jesus is also said to be a God. And it is said of him, that he was without sin. He is represented to us as an example worthy of following in all respects. I must say that from certain incidents in the gospels it is possible to create an ideal Jesus, but this one is not the real historic Jesus. I am sorry if I hav to say something that will place him not alongside of, but even far below, those whom we commonly rank as possessing moral excellence.

When you go home take your Bible and read Mark iv, 10–12. Jesus had spoken in a parable, which none of his audience seems to hav comprehended. They did not know what he meant. "And when he was alone they that were about him with the twelve asked of him the parable. And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God; but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables. That seeing they may see and not perceive; and hearing they may hear and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them." . . . It may by the authorities be deemed blasphemous, yet I ask you: Who of you can defend such conduct as in these verses is attributed to Jesus? Suppose Christianity is true. Suppose there is an eternally burning hell. Suppose that all people that do not believe in Christ will be punished during all eternity. Here stands Jesus and speaks to hundreds, yes, thousands, of people. They listen with attention to his words. They do their utmost to understand what he says. But he speaks to them in such a language that none of those present can comprehend his meaning. And when asked why he did so, he answers: I do it that the great multitude seeing may not perceive, hearing may not understand, lest at any time it should be converted and its sins should be forgiven. I speak to them in parables, that I on the judgment day may be able to say to them, You saw me, you heard me speak, but you did not believe on me—depart hence, you cursed ones, to the eternal fire. I ask you, was it their fault that they did not understand what he said, that they did not receive him and believe upon him? Who is it that, according to justice, is responsible for their damnation? You call Jesus the savior of the world. I ask you, was he the savior of those to whom he then spoke?

And what do you say to Jesus's cursing a fig-tree? He is said to hav cursed a fig-tree because it did not bear fruit on a time of the year when no fig-tree could bear. Does this not show a want of sense and a disposition so miserable that such a man, in place of being held up as a pattern to imitate, ought to be considered a warning?

You may say it is not right of me to speak of such traits of Christ, but when you worship him as a God it is my duty to show you that he was everything but a perfect being.

And then the Holy Ghost. It is said it is he who inspired the writers of the Bible, and if this is so then he must be responsible for all the mistakes, contradictions, and absurdities which it contains. . . .

Here is another little book, published by our energetic and courageous comrade in England, editor G. W. Foote. In this book Bible quotation is placed against Bible quotation. Four hundred different quotations contradict one another. I think that under such conditions I hav a right to state that there never existed so deceitful an individual as the Holy Ghost.

I stand wondering at and inquiring into the great secrets of nature, the world and life; I bow with respect and humility to these great questions, which we can not answer—but just therefore I am so indignant when the Christian comes with his dwarf-like Gods and says: it is these you shall kneel to and worship as the creators of the universe. Then I cannot help that my blood boils in the veins, that my cheeks blush from indignation; then I cannot govern myself. I must stand up and say: O you ignorant, you blinded, you foolish people, who really can believe that these Gods, which you yourselvs hav created in your own image, Gods burdened down with their own shortcomings and infirmities, Gods who belong to an age long passed and who do not approach our ideas of morality and intellectual development—O men who really do believe that these your small idols are the creators of the universe, enlarge your vision, look up in the starlight into heaven's boundless space and may the conception of the vastness, the infinity of the universe fill your mind with devotion. Go out in the night and see these millions of worlds, these burning suns, these constellations, and think upon this wonderful life whose powerful forces and incomprehensible laws are embodied in and govern it all, and then bow thy head with humility and confess thy ignorance, thy impotence to explain it all, to measure it all with thy mind's little yardstick! Acknowledge that figures do not suffice, and that no computation can cover the hights and measure the depths of this infinit space. . . . You may say, if you please, that I hate these small Gods, which are so holy to you. To be honest about it, I many a time cannot keep from smiling when I speak of them. And I know that your ministers when together alone sit and make themselvs merry over your ignorance. But so long as you pay them twelve crowns a year you must not be surprised to see them with a pious and devotional expression in the pulpit. . . .

I am opposed to Christianity because it teaches that we through prayers can get what we can in no other way. This teaching is an untruth. In this world there are found causes and effects, but no God that breaks the laws of nature. Are there not sufficient probabilities for a thing? Then it will not come to pass even if all the Christians of the world do nothing else but pray for it. Our own experience denies the existence of a prayer-hearing God, even if reason had not a word to state with regard to this question. In Mark xi, 24, we read the following: "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye shall receive them, and ye shall hav them." Here we hav a promis, without conditions, without limitations. It covers everything, no matter what. All right—who can stand up and say, "This promis is true; I hav received all that I in my faith hav asked God for?" Be who you may, you must remember at least once when you trustfully and earnestly asked God for a thing. No one knew your secret but yourself, but you thought that if God desired your welfare he ought to fulfill your wish. It was nothing sinful you asked for. but you knew your happiness depended upon it. You prayed during the long nights when you reclined on your couch. You prayed when morning came—prayed your heavenly father to giv you what your heart desired. You prayed with humility and in faith. You believed on God and you were convinced that he saw your anguish and that he knew your misery. You told no one but him. To him you opened your heart. Like a child going to its father or mother, you went to God. But I ask you, did you receive an answer? You prayed and hoped and prayed, and prayed again and waited days, years—yet you lost not your courage. You continued to pray and persisted in hoping. But I ask you, was there an ear up there which listened to your voice? Was there a heart up there which felt for you? Did any help descend from above? No! You had to remain forsaken in your misery, alone with your anguish—alone.

I am opposed to Christianity because it teaches man can be saved through blind faith and damned for honest doubt. Life is nothing, belief is all. . . . I ask you, can a more demoralizing teaching be preached than this, that it is better to depend upon the church's alms and to appropriate to one's self the merits of Jesus, than personally to be good and honest?

To-day in all churches, chapels, and mission houses the crucifixion of Jesus has been mentioned as a useful and good thing. I ask you, is it not terrible that one of the greatest crimes ever committed by man shall be considered a God-pleasing deed, a deed that reconciled God to man and made him friendly to him later; that on account of that murder only we receive forgivness for our sins and a place in heaven? Man! are you totally blinded? Hav you no conception of justice? Desist from stretching out your hands toward a savior on the cross. He cannot help you. In your own self are hidden the noble forces that shall make you better. Look at these powers and helps and be stronger and better. You can do it. Liberate yourself from all that is evil and bad and become a human being with reason and will. He only that uses his reason and shows that he has a will is a human being. . . .

I hope the day may not be far away when people leave the cold churches and cheerless mission houses; when the ministers and revivalists will hav to preach to empty benches, and when truth is taught in the Freethought festival rooms by men who are moved by love for the people's happiness.

But if that time is to arrive, then it is we who must prepare the way. Without battle the victory cannot be won. But through persistence in action the victory shall at last be ours. Beautiful future for our suffering generations! The darkness disperses. The clouds retreat. Morning arrives. The sun rises. A day with help to the suffering, joy to the sorrowful, light to all doubting minds, is here. Glorious day! No more miscalculations on God's providence. No fear of any hell. No trembling for any devil. All is content and joy.

VIKTOR E. LENNSTRAND.

God's Character.

When we look at the character given to the God of the Bible by its authors, it is strange how any well-informed mind can accept and believe in such a God for a moment, and the only way in which it can be accounted for is, that the mind has been trained up and indoctrinated in this belief from childhood, and has had it instilled into it at the mother's knee, in the Sunday-school, in the home, in the church, all along the journey of life; and if, in maturer years, the mind partly sees the folly, the inconsistency, the falsity, of these early teachings, they are so inwrought into the mental being of the individual, that it is next to impossible for him to throw them entirely aside. This is one reason why so many hold on to the Bible and its teachings.

Another reason is that the great mass of those who giv a tacit assent to the Bible do not know what it does teach, and when these absurd and ridiculous teachings are presented to them, they really doubt their being in the Bible. For this reason, Infidels should be always careful to giv chapter and verse, and not simply giv the quotation, so that all honest inquirers could appeal to the book, and satisfy themselvs whether it taught as charged. It is too common that Christians recklessly deny the quotation as an Infidel lie, and thus lead off the mind of the unwary from further investigation, when the text is not referred to.

I now propose to giv some of the most objectionable characteristics of the Bible God, and I shall giv reference to the chapter and verse, so that any candid investigator can turn to the Bible and see for himself whether it teaches as I charge.

The Bible teaches that God is timid, God is afraid—yes, afraid of what man may say or think of him (Deut. xxxii, 27; Ex. xxxii, 10–14; Num. xiv, 16; Ex. xiii, 17). That he is liable to forget, and hence has to hav a kind of reminder, like a child tying a string on a finger to remind it of something it wishes to recollect. God has to hav a rainbow to remind him he promised never to bring another flood upon the earth (Gen. ix, 15). And yet, as a general thing, he forgets to put his remembrancer in the cloud till after it has passed over and the danger is all past. Hence it is a mere burlesque so far as quieting the apprehensions of any poor, weak mortals who fear a flood in concerned. And frequently he hangs out his sign when a mere little flake of a thunder cloud has passed over with scarcely rain enough to lay the dust, and the most timid of mortals would hardly hav been reminded that there ever had been a flood by it had not the Bible given it such prominence. Yet God swings out his sign to remind himself to stick to his promis.

According to the Bible God gets tired (Ex. xxxi, 17). Now, anyone who is liable to fatigue is liable to be so overdone by it as to bring on utter exhaustion, hence death itself! Such an idea! God worried to death! Yet this is the legitimate teaching of the Bible.

God is limited in knowledge (Gen. xviii, 21; Ex. xiii, 17; Gen. xxii, 12). God did not know whether Abraham's faith was sound without testing him, nor whether the Sodomites were as bad as he had heard, till he went down to see, nor whether the Israelites would take a panic and go back to Egypt in spite of him if he attempted to lead them the near route to Canaan through the Philistines' land. He would not risk it lest, peradventure, when the Philistines made war on them they would go back to Egypt in spite of him, although he could make one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight (Deut. xxii, 30).

The Bible represents him as irascible. His wrath waxes hot (Ex. xxii, 24). He threatens to kill the men, make wives widows, and children fatherless. He laughs at the calamities of mortals (Prov. i, 26). If the Bible be true, God indorsed polygamy. He said to David: "I gave thee thy master's wives [Saul's] into thy bosom" (2 Sam. xii, 8). He gave laws regulating polygamy but none abolishing it (Deut. xxi, 15), and disregarded and violated this his own law (Gen. xxi, 12). He indorsed slavery and made laws regulating it (Ex. xxi, 6–21). He was not reliable, but would break his word (Num. xiv, 34; 1 Sam. ii, 30). He would not do what he promised.

He was the author of both good and evil (Isa. xlv, 7; Ex. iv, 11). He was liable to disappointment and grief and repentance. "It repented the Lord that he made man and grieved him at his heart" (Gen. vi, 6).

He was a swindler. He ordered Moses to number the first-born of the Israelites, and also to number the Levites, and said he (God) would after that take the Levites for his instead of the first-born of all Israel. He also ordered Moses to estimate the difference at five shekels a head and pay it over to Aaron for the Lord. Moses did so, and made the number of the Levites 22 300 (see Num. iii, 22–28, 34), and the number of the first-born 22,273 (see 43). But Moses, in adding up his own figures, made the Levites only 22 000 (39), and collected five shekels per head for 273 first-born, for the Lord, where he ought to hav collected five shekels per head off 23 Levites and paid over to Israel. Here Moses swindled Israel out of at least $195 and paid it over to Aaron for the Lord, and I suppose the Lord took it. If poor old Israel could now recover by a suit in equity, the principal and interest would help many a poor son of Abraham who is rather short of this world's goods. This transaction is found in Num. iii, 22, 28, 34, 43.

God is also represented as a polytheist himself, though he charged Israel that they must be monotheists (Ex. xxii, 28).

If the Bible represents him correctly, he is a deceiver, a liar (2 Chron. xviii, 21; Ex. v, 1, 23) Moses charges him to his face that he has not done as he had promised, and he takes it patiently (Ex. v, 23).

He loves the smell of roasting meat (Gen. viii, 21).

He goes to bed, for he is an early riser (Jer. vii, 25).

He has all the parts and passions of man—arms, feet, legs, eyes, hands, heart, soul, ears, back parts, fears, hates, love. He is jealous; he is ignorant of things (Ex. xxxiii, 23; Jer. xliv, 21).

Now, reader, is not this enough? I could giv you much more of a similar sort, but I think this ought to suffice. If you doubt that the Bible so represents him, refer to the proof texts and see for yourself.

Madisonville, Ky. COLEBY A. SMITH.

Been at Church.

As the Campbellites are having a protracted meeting and one of their favorit preachers was to preach, I thought I would go up last evening and see what he had to say. But as usual, I could not feel paid. The sermon was on the rising of Christ from the dead, and the preacher assured us if he was not risen, we were all lost, and no matter how pure, moral, and nobly good our lives were, if we did not believe this one "fact" we could not be saved. He was one of the old-fogy kind who believe all the old Bible just as it reads. That the whale swallowed Jonah was no miracle to him, nor would it be one that Jonah swallowed the whale, if it was only in the Bible. He "proved" all he asserted by the Bible, and eschewed common sense, reasoning, and philosophy.

He boasted of the proof of the story of Christ, as supplied by contemporary writers, and specially named Josephus as one, and quoted the extract as glibly as if it had never been proved a forgery and an interpolation. He seemed entirely ignorant of the fact that no educated preacher now pretends to quote Josephus as testimony that Christ ever existed. All intelligent preachers know that all volumes of Josephus that existed before the time of the wily old priest Eusebius, contain no mention of this famous passage. Eusebius carefully interpolates it and then makes a great handle of having found the all important testimony. He exultingly exclaims: "Wherefore, since this Hebrew historian hath of old delivered these things in his own writing concerning our savior, what evasion can save those who invent arguments against these things, from standing convicted of downright impudence?" Even Dr. Lardner himself pronounces this passage in Josephus to be an interpolation. It is rejected by Bishop Warburton, Faber, and other ancient writers. "Eusebius is the sheet-anchor of reliance for all we know of the three first centuries of the Christian history." Just think of it—the forger and interpolator the main proof of all the Christian scheme of salvation! No wonder our preacher ignores the opposition and teaches the tale that best suits his own schemes. He knew that very few of his audience had ever heard of the detected forgery, and that he was tolerably safe in quoting the only contemporary historian whose works speak at all of this mythical Jesus. What matters it if it be a lie, so that the lie abounds more to the good and glory of the church than the truth could possibly do?

The next speaker got up claiming that religion was free to all; that while books were published for the money there was in them, the gospel was purely a free offering. And in the next breath he asked for contributions to defray the expenses of the meeting! He failed to remember that he himself was preaching for a salary, and depending as much upon that salary for his living as authors and publishers do upon their books. He failed to tell the people that religion was the most costly luxury of the land; that even Infidels were taxed to keep up creed and church, and help support the false theology that wrapped the world in ignorance and barbarism.

Darling delusions are dear to the heart, and woe to the thinker who asks that they be examined and proved or disproved. The preacher sets up his men of straw and knocks them down one after another, and the congregation go away full of awe at the wonderful ability displayed in the feat.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Read This and Make Your Own Comments.

From the Christian Statesman, Organ of the God in the Constitution Party.

From the founding of the government our national legislature has been accustomed to worship God after the Christian manner. On the morning after Mr. Randall's death the Rev. J. G. Butler, D.D., the chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

We thank thee, O father, Lord of heaven and earth, for the refuge of the mercy seat, even unto the shadow of death. We thank thee for Jesus Christ, thy son, our savior, who has abolished death and brought life and immortality to light. We rejoice in the light that comes from heaven upon this dark pilgrim pathway. Teach us heavenly wisdom and sanctify to us, we pray thee, the ordering of thy providence.

We bless thee for the long and useful life of thy servant now departed, whose departure we mourn. We bless thee for his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, for his patient suffering, and that his end has been peace. We commend to thee those who now gather under the dark shadow in the home circle. Thou judge of the widow and father of the fatherless ones, comfort them in sorrow, lead them, keep them, and giv unto them thy peace.

Help us to meet each day's responsibility in the fear of God and in the service of men, that when the end of labor, and toil, and anxiety, and pain, and sorrow shall come, we may enter into rest. We thank thee for the past Sabbath. Follow with thy blessing the labors of thy servants everywhere, and do thou lift up this great land of ours, which thou hast led through all these years, higher and higher in the scale of righteousness. Make us a righteous and a God-fearing people.

Bless these thy servants to-day. Guide them in judgment. Fill them with thy spirit, and giv unto them a father's blessing We ask it all, with pardon and grace, in the name of Christ. Amen.

The chaplain of the House of Representativs, the Rev. W. H Milburn, D D., opened the proceedings of that body with the following words:

We bless thee, almighty God, that in the gloom which enshrouds us there is the clear shining of thy love, and that in the awful stillness about the mouth of an opening tomb, a voice clothed with almighty power speaks, "I am the resurrection and the life." Bowing with submission to thy will, we surrender to thy fatherhood our beloved friend and brother. His name is inscribed among the heroes, patriots, and statesmen of the country, upon the imperishable tablet of its history, and the memory of his deeds and character is enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen, for whose honor and welfare he so long and faithfully wrought.

Oh, thou who didst shed the precious drops of pity and of sympathy at Bethany's grave, wilt thou not come to the wife whose wedded life has been one long joyous act of self-devotion, and to the children bereft by this irreparable loss; bring home to them and to us the comfort and the consolation that no noble life is really extinguished by death, but passing behind the veil which sense makes, enters upon a higher and grander being in the glorious light of thy presence. Bring them and us into that higher life, we pray through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our readers will notice the frank and explicit Christian tone of these prayers. They are the official and formal acknowledgment of the Christian religion by the legislature of the nation. If the decision of the supreme court of Wisconsin that the Bible is a sectarian book is good American doctrin, then these prayers are also sectarian. If the silence of the national Constitution as to religion is to be construed as a deliberate and intentional renunciation of all religion by the American nation, then such prayers, or any prayers, in Congress or in any state legislature, are an impertinence and an anachronism, and ought to be abolished. And to this it will surely come. Such prayers, offered in legislativ assemblies and spread in full, as these were, on the pages of the "Congressional Record," are an educating power, and as fit ground for complaint and for legal injunction as the reading of the Bible in the schools. The real question is whether this nation, as a nation, has any God or not to whom it can pray, or any relations to Jesus Christ the delegated ruler of the world. All who object to the Bible in the schools and to the acknowledgment of Christ in Thanksgiving proclamations are striving to answer this question in the negativ.

It is sometimes said that these prayers are not official acts of Congress, but express simply the devotional feelings of the individual members. That is not correct. We were recently present when the House of Representativs was opened with prayer. At the hour of twelve the silver mace which symbolizes the authority of the House was lifted to its place, indicating that the session had begun, and the speaker took his place and said: "The House will be in order. The chaplain will offer prayer." We were pleased to see, moreover, that a large number of the members rose and stood reverently during the prayer, while other heads were bowed upon their desks.

The seat of the whole misunderstanding and confusion on this subject is in the Constitution of the United States. If that instrument had contained the religious acknowledgments which are found in nearly all state constitutions, no such war as is now waged would hav been made upon the Christian features of our government. It is an open question whether the silence of that great instrument, nourishing and supporting as it does the secular theory of government, will not yet avail to blot out every vestige of our national Christianity and to make our national life a Godless, Christless, unbelieving blank. Which may heaven forefend!

God of our fathers, be the God
Of their succeeding race.

Communications.

At the Liberal Club.

The subject chosen by the Manhattan Liberal Club for consideration Friday evening, May 2d, was a good one for a good many people. Speaking on the "Modern Press" the lecturer of the evening got even with the World for caricaturing him in its columns while he was discharging his duties as assistant district attorney; the critics who had had business with the lecturer's office got a chance to denounce Colonel Fellows, the district attorney, and the lecturer assistant; the lawyers of the Club found opportunity to denounce the courts in which they had lost cases; the friends of Mr. Harman had a sympathetic audience to which to recite his wrongs, and the newspapers of the city, for reporters galore were there, picked up material for some sensational writing. The World got over a column out of the lecturer alone.

Colonel Andrew H. H. Dawson, he of the flexible wrist, extravagant gesture, prehensil forefinger, and exclamation points, was the speaker. Since he electrified the Club with his oratory some ten or twelve years ago he has become assistant district attorney and portly. He has also allowed his hair to grow. He began his lecture by recalling his first acquaintance with the Club twenty years ago. He was passing Plympton Hall, he said, when Horace Greeley caught him and conveyed him inside the building to see the club that he (Greeley) had founded, and which he (Dawson) had since found to be the only place in the city where a man can tell his honest thoughts without being insulted. As a Southerner he appreciated liberty of speech, the more because in his nativ section of the country, in the years agone, it was unknown; but he thanked God slavery was wiped out, though he supported the custom of his state in ante-bellum days.

The press, said the colonel after these reminiscences, is endowed with power almost approaching omnipotence! It is a wonderful shedder of light, flashing to the ends of the earth, and illuminating the darkest corners! It wields more power than the pulpit, and there is no place where a bad man can do so much mischief and a good man so much good as in the editorial chair! But editors ought to hav their consciences educated! The press once upon a time was restrained by the proprieties of life; but now it is induced to be slanderous by a low, morbid type of Christianity! He had recently been in its hands, and had been most discourteously used! There is somsthing in human nature that rejoices in the misfortunes of our best friends! The foundation of the press is that most infamous of things—tariff—money! The press would be glad to sell a million lies if it could be paid for them! It is the object of a certain journal in this city to destroy the district attorney's office! To do this it had caricatured him, the lecturer, while he was engaged in trying a typefounder for arson, and made it appear that all the witnesses he called in the case testified for the defense! The place was insured for $27,000; the appraiser before the fire swore the foundry was worth only $17,000; at the trial the appraiser swore it was worth $60,000! Was the district attorney to blame? To destroy the district attorney's office the journal concealed the facts! Wicked efforts to injure! No remedy! Gloomy subject! The press gets the public mind full of p-o-i-s-o-n!! It renders it impossible, by its pragmatical propensities, to get an intelligent jury! If the press could sell scalps at $1 each the Liberal Club would go home hairless! Legislatures should restrict notices of crime, because now business men are cunning and read the papers, form an opinion, and render themselvs unfit to go into the jury box! Men who never before, in all their lives, had an opinion of their own, find one when called to serve on juries! The press was to blame! It was cowardly, mean, unprincipled, but it had to be borne because there is no remedy until the people are educated! In the South, there is a remedy! If a man insults a woman, off goes his head! That was a better state of things!

Along here the colonel stopped, and said he wanted to go home. He was getting into the sere and yellow leaf of life, and had no time to waste in preparing his lecture, or on abstractions or transcendentalism. He had been caricatured by the press and made to appear awful ugly; but he did not care. He had not seen his own face in five years, and if his wife didn't comb his hair it would never be combed. She and the barber were responsible for his personal appearance. He was riding in the horse-car the other day, when a woman pointed him out to her companion, saying, "See, that is Colonel Dawson, of the district attorney's office!" Her companion replied, "Why! I thought he was the ugliest man in the world! He is really handsome!" This, said Mr. Dawson, was all the fault of the press. In the World, in the report of the arson case, thirteen lines contained twelve lies! There should be some law to prevent such slanderous work!

The lecturer selected Mr. Wakeman to answer the critics of the oration. He had promised his wife not to try to make a speech, and he thought the audience would agree with him that he had kept his word. The public was to blame for the vileness of the press—people should not patronize the papers! He hadn't drank a drop, but was staggering from weariness from being confined in the fetid air of court rooms trying to get jurors from men who had been influenced by the press! "What there is left of me," pathetically added the colonel, "ain't worth burying," and he appropriately closed the speech he hadn't tried to make, but which nevertheless the audience enjoyed.

Before Colonel Dawson could get out of the hall City Marshal Goode was on his feet. He wanted to say something, and he wanted Colonel Dawson to hear it. He also wanted to thank God that there was a press to let sunlight into the dark district attorney's office. Pointing his finger at Colonel Dawson, Marshal Goode said: "That gentleman has been telling you that the press interferes with the course of justice in the district attorney's office. I tell you that there is no justice in that office. I am a public officer. More than a year ago, while serving a writ upon a man in this city, he crawled behind me, shot me through the body, and in the face. While still on my sick bed I was approached by people who told me that it would be worth thousands of dollars to me not to prosecute. I refused to compromise, and insisted that the district attorney should push the case against my assailant. The trial resulted in a disagreement of the jury, ten of them standing for conviction and two for acquittal. I had been offered $4,000 to $10,000 not to prosecute that case, and when I refused the money I believe it was placed where it would do the most good. Last December, without my knowledge, the man who tried to murder me was released on bail by John R. Fellows. I hav tried in vain to hav him retried, but what can be expected of a district attorney whom the press published before his election as a swindler, and who seems to hav been elected because he was so disreputable. If he had been running on any other ticket than the one he was he wouldn't hav been in it."

As Marshal Goode concluded Colonel Dawson took the floor. "Didn't I ask you to get the district attorney to assign me to the case you speak of, and didn't I promis you in case he did so to fix him?" "You told me," rejoined the angry marshal, "a lot of stuff about having the man tried, but the fact is, the district attorney won't try him." When the audience got seated again Colonel Dawson went on: "I want to say that I hav been two and a half years in the district attorney's office. Colonel Fellows has made me the keeper of his secrets. I never knew a more perfectly honest and honorable man than he. He passed into my hands the trial of O'Donovan Rossa, to prevent which all kinds of influence had been used. I convicted O'Rossa and am proud of it." Colonel Dawson then went home.

Mrs. Leonard said women ought to go on juries. She had tried to get on. When she went before Judge Lawrence she found he had been prejudiced against her by reading the papers. All the men in the Club put together had not had as much said about them in the press as she had. She didn't care. The press is a good thing, only it ought to be purified. People fear the press more than they do God.

The president of the Club, Dr. Foote, Jr., said he desired to read some resolutions about Mr. Harman. No greater outrage had been recently perpetrated anywhere than the sentencing of Mr. Harman to five years' imprisonment. The resolutions were as follows:

WHEREAS, Mr. Moses Harman, editor of Lucifer, the Light Bearer, of Valley Falls, Kan., at the age of fifty-nine years, after having led a useful, honorable, noble life devoted to doing good, has been forced through a farce of a trial without opportunity to fairly present his defense, convicted by an unjust and strained construction of the Comstock law, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment and three hundred dollars' fine.

Resolved, That we hasten to express our sincere sympathy for this unfortunate editor. That we regard him as a martyr to freedom of the press, an earnest, honest, and useful worker in a worthy, philanthropic cause—the emancipation of women from marital slavery and sexual abuse—and a victim of ignorant bigotry and partisan malice. That his conviction was a prostitution of the true purposes of law in order to serve the inhuman purposes of his enemies, and that the unusually severe sentence imposed is prima facie evidence of the judge's prejudiced state of mind and of his unfitness to preside in the court of a civilized nation.

Dr. Foote explained the matter for publishing which Mr. Harman is in bonds, and said that every woman in the country should stand by him; if they did not they deserved all the abuse they got.

Mr. Sutherland, treasurer of the Club, once upon a time had a man arrested for voting upon his, Mr. Sutherland's, name. Judge Duffy held the man for trial and Colonel Dawson was assigned to try him. But the colonel subpœnaed no witnesses. The jury was obtained and the case dismissed. It was tomfoolery, disgusting. He had hoped that the colonel would hav remained to hear him say this.

Mr. Chamberlain said that Colonel Dawson had complained because officials were ridiculed, but that was really the only purpose most of them could subserve. Mr. Chamberlain had been denounced as a baby-eater, a cannibal, by all the papers in the country, because of a remark he had made at the Constitution Club. He didn't care. Legislation would do no good, but make our censorship worse than it is now.

Moses Oppenheimer did not think that public officers were worthy of confidence. The district attorney had ten thousand excise cases pigeonholed, and out of that great mass he selected Justus Schwab for trial. Why did he do this, unless it were to persecute Mr. Schwab because he is a Socialist? Mr. Wakeman could tell some tales of his experience when, as a member of a labor committee, he endeavored to induce the district attorney to punish bribers.

Dr. O'Neil, of epistolary fame, got the platform. Mr. Harman, he said, had committed no offense. He is convicted under a press-gagging law, which was so contorted as to preclude the discussion of all physiological subjects. Mr. Harman is in prison for discussing these subjects in a pure manner. It is a damnable outrage. The district attorney's office is a den of thieves and the jury system all wrong. Judge Foster simply got angry at Mr. Harman and used the court as an instrument of oppression.

Mr. Wakeman had the summing-up. If he was to try to defend the office of district attorney of this city, he said, he might as well giv up existence. It is one of the most indefensible things on earth. He never had seen Colonel Fellows, and didn't think he ever should till that gentleman was out of office. The press, he said, is the best remedy for evil. How can Judge Foster be reached except through the press? The Liberal newspapers were the only ones in which justice could be had. The sentence of Mr. Harman is an enormous outrage, an enormous disgrace. Mr. Harman has never injured anyone; he is a harmless person who thinks woman should not be abused. The evil of the Comstock law Mr. Wakeman foretold long ago. The worst of it is that it is enforced by private agents, and is virtually ecclesiastical mob law. The press is the only remedy, and the utmost freedom of comment must be allowed. The trial of Mr. Harman was one of the most remarkable trials on earth. To call him insane was most absurd, and to go to a jury against his protest with that plea was practically a mistrial. As a joke it might do; but under the circumstances it was carrying a joke too far. The simple truth is that the conviction and sentence constitute an outrage. The judge in allowing the proceedings committed a greater offense than the prisoner. The remedy is to blaze away in the press at the whole Comstock business.

When Mr. Wakeman closed, the Harman resolutions were passed without dissent, and with loud acclaim. The cruel sentence inflicted has aroused the indignation of the Liberals hereabouts, and if Judge Foster could be buttonholed for a moment he would hear some mighty uncomplimentary things said about himself.

Mr. E. H. Heywood in Trouble.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: You know quite well the extent and malicious venom of tyranny manifest in the frenzied efforts of church bigots to supervise Freethought literature. In the annual report of his Vice Society—of 1878, I think—Anthony Comstock, who is that "society" to the extent of $4,000 annual salary, said: "Another class of publications issued by freelovers and Freethinkers is in a fair way of being stamped out. The public generally can scarcely be aware of the extent that blasphemy and filth commingled hav found vent through those various channels. Under a plausible pretense men who raise a howl about free press, free speech, etc., ruthlessly trample under foot the most sacred things, breaking down the altars of religion, bursting asunder the ties of home, and seeking to overthrow every social restraint."

As you know, Comstock then was intent on suppressing "Cupid's Yokes," "Fruits of Philosophy" (the famous Bradlaugh-Besant book, written by Dr. Chas. Knowlton, of Ashfield, Mass., and published by J. P. Mendum, of the Boston Investigator, more than fifty years ago), Trall's "Sexual Physiology," Bennett's "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," and other works which "still liv" and circulate widely here and in Europe. Commencing, of course, with poor and unpopular men, Comstock had expressed his purpose—after he had "stamped out" the Word, "Cupid's Yokes," and other publications—to "regulate" the Index, the Investigator, THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Banner of Light, and other heretic manifestations of "blasphemy." When he first came here for me, Nov. 2, 1877, he urged David H. Gregory, postmaster, to exclude our books from the mails, Josiah D. Gregory, Mr. Gregory's son, earnestly siding with Comstock in his "pious" purpose. Mr. Gregory, an old-time Whig, moderate and sensible, replied: "No. Mr. Heywood is a citizen here, minds his own business and harms no one, so far as we know. Leave the issue to the courts."

Now the father, D. H. Gregory, is dead, and the "earnest" son, Deacon Josiah D. Gregory, is postmaster, appointed by President Harrison to succeed Leonard Chandler, a thrifty farmer, Democrat, and a "tough old Infidel," as he calls himself. Now first, since 1873, Comstock has in President Harrison, Postmaster-general Wanamaker, and Deacon J. D. Gregory three "earnest" Christians subject to his will relativ to "stamping out" Princeton literature. Since April 15th more and more askings hav come to us from patrons of the Word why their papers did not appear, we knowing not why till last Monday afternoon, April 28th, when the first edition of our April issue was taken to the post-office to be mailed. After Deacon Gregory got his hand on that edition, he said he had been "instructed" from Washington to examin every issue of the Word hereafter, and exclude it from the mails, if he could not approve of its opinions or style; if he is in doubt, relativ to any given edition, he said, his "orders" are to "refer" the issue to Washington, and hold the paper for further "instruction." Since April 15th he has received, weighed, and we supposed forwarded to patrons papers, but unable or afraid himself to say that any given paper was "objectionable," he has been "referring" the Word to Mr. Wanamaker. He wished to take, overnight, to examin, April Word; next day he said he was unable to say whether the paper is mailable or not, and would "refer" it to Mr. Wanamaker, who may report back three, six months, or a year hence!

I said, "Since you decide not to mail the papers, I will take the April edition and also all previous issues that hav been accumulating in your hands since April 15th, and forward them to subscribers by express or otherwise." He refused to return them to us, saying his "orders" are to "hold" all the papers subject to Mr. Wanamaker's disposal. This, as you know, is flat violation of United States and state law relativ to the rights of publishers of newspapers and subscribers thereto, and freedom to circulate outside the mails. Our subscribers, and members of the Coöperativ Publishing Company, publishers of the Word, are considering what redress for this invasiv outrage can be had in Massachusetts courts. The conspiracy has been maturing several weeks; many citizens here think Deacon Gregory instigated this "regulation." When Comstock first "visited" us Deacon Gregory said, "Mr. Heywood ought to be imprisoned for circulating 'Cupid's Yokes.'" Though endowed with no natural or acquired intelligence to spare, he seems incapable of even "tolerating" anyone who differs from him in opinion; and, probably by Comstock's, Harrison's, Wanamaker's, and God's help hopes to bring me, Mrs. Heywood, and other heretics here "to Jesus" this time. I asked leave to copy Mr. Wanamaker's "order." Deacon Gregory refused to allow me to do so, saying the "correspondence" between him and the post office department is "private" matter. The "business" in hand is to suppress a newspaper; yet, though the plot is a blow at every citizen's right of opinion, the letters between Deacon Gregory and Postmaster-general Wanamaker are "private" matter! Deacon Gregory says it will be his "official duty" to "examin" not only all issues of the Word, but also stamped matter deposited in his office by our heretic people. To what extent he will feel it his "duty" to break seals, in search of "objectionable matter," in letters or other parcels, I know not. He is an intense Christian, a "high-toned," prohibitory, "anti-saloon" Republican, and will certainly do duty revealed to him, in prayer or otherwise.

From 1877 to 1884, seven years, I served in the jail phases of evolution; "Cupid's Yokes," "Leaves of Grass," the Word, all the publications indicted, were vindicated, all the points won in the courts, and the United States and state governments beaten on every issue. Now, a new mountain confronts us, to be crossed or tunneled. Four times in a quartet of cases the Word has been "suppressed"—once in West Virginia; once in Minnesota; once in Charlottetown, Prince Edward's Island, when the city marshal arrested Josephine Tilton, took all her publications, including Mr. Tucker's Radical Review, and burnt them in the public square; and, lastly, in my second United States case in 1882–3. During the eighteen years of its life the Word has survived considerable killing, and has plenty of breath left. For the present the post-office here is hostil and closed to us, but many other post-offices in Massachusetts are friendly, and "Barkis is willin'." The leading cities we shall reach by express and carriers. Excluding a newspaper from the mails is a deadly stroke at its life. From 1877 to 1884 the church bigots kept me and my family oscillating between prison and poorhouse, hoping I, at least, might die in jail, forgetting that "the woman in the case" would still be at large and outspoken. Imprisonment did not "reform" me, was not a success; but "he takes my life who takes the means of living." To stop the circulation of Princeton ideas by a single "order" from Washington would indeed be death to our life-work—surer means of extinction than imprisonment. What befalls the paper will light on any other reform newspaper whenever the Comstock-Harrison wire connects with the local postmaster. No nation on earth has such a cunningly devised, powerful, argus-eyed, vindictiv agency as the church now employs in these Comstock statutes to suppress soul liberty. That labor may hav and enjoy its own, opportunity and reciprocity prevail in business, language be ennobled by intelligent exactness, the origin and processes of life be studied, and physiological knowledge and discretion assure domestic felicity, we liv to work.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for all that yourself and your sainted predecessor hav done in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER for mental growth; rejoicing that increasing numbers of strong men and women stand together for the sacred rights of opinion assailed, and trusting that newspaper workers and readers, generally, will soon wake to realize the extent to which their liberties are imperiled by this blow at mental life, I am yours, for the overthrow of every hindrance to progress, EZRA H. HEYWOOD.

Apathy a Crime.

In the state of Washington, at cost of much labor, means, anxiety, and self-sacrifice, the justice of the demands of Liberals hav been conceded, and in some important particulars their claims allowed and their right legally assured. While all true friends of liberty rejoice at the victories won, the question that is agitating the workers, those who bore the brunt and fought the battles, is: Shall the triumphs of justice achieved, shall all the efforts expended, be rendered null and void through apathy and indifference on the part of the Liberals throughout the state as to the enforcement of the law? True, under the new law, the Hughes bill, all church property is to be taxed at its full valuation. But unless systematic effort is made by the united Liberals of the state, will it be?

Under the late law church property is exempt only to the value of $5,000. There is not a church in Seattle that is assessed higher than $4,000. So they all go free. Yet I doubt if ten of a half hundred of the churches in this city would sell out for twice, and many boast their church property is worth over ten times, that amount. Will churches be more conscientious in complying with the new law than the old? With demagog politicians or pious deacons for assessors, church valuations will be rated so low as to make the law nugatory. Churches realize this, and so are giving themselvs no anxiety about the matter.

Our state constitution reads:

ART. I, Sec. 11. No public money or property shall be appropriated for, or applied to any religious worship, exercise, or instruction, or the support of any religious establishment.

Yet in many public schools throughout the state children are punished for not committing to memory, or for lack of reverence in reciting, the Lord's prayer. In some schools children of Liberals, Jews, and Catholics are told to go out and stand in the hallway while "the blessed and holy Bible" is being read to the good Christian children. How would you like it if it was your child so treated?

Next August the assessment rolls in every precinct should be examined, and protest made in every case of under-valuation of church property. Simultaneous action in every precinct throughout the entire state is what is needed.

At once, wherever there are any religious exercises in any public school, demands for the discontinuance of such exercises should be made, and compliance with the law insisted on.

But that is just the difficulty. The Liberal of the neighborhood, best qualified to make these protests, feels diffident about rushing to the front and assuming so great responsibility; naturally hesitates to involve himself in dispute with neighbors, and possibly expensiv litigation. But if that Liberal is the chosen representativ of the responsible Liberals of his precinct, and has been elected a vice-president of the Washington Secular Union, to act as its authorized executiv officer; if instead of making the demand in his own name, as a private citizen, he does so as the accredited representativ, the trusted and honored officer, of the state organization of Liberals; and he knows, and can impress on those with whom he is brought into controversy, that he is backed by the moral and financial support of the united Liberals of the entire state, will it not make a big difference? Under such circumstances his duties would not be so very onerous. As the authorized representativ of an organization extending to every part of the state, he would be sure of respectful consideration, and as the law is clear and emphatic, would generally obtain prompt compliance with his demands without recourse to the courts.

But to secure the enforcement of the law we shall sometimes hav to go into the courts. To do so effectivly briefs must be prepared, counsel retained, legal fees provided for, so that should bigotry and church influence sway decision in lower courts we can promptly appeal to the supreme court.

Now, Liberals of Washington, you who hav hitherto been so profoundly indifferent, what are you going to do about it? Do you desire we should go into court, as a self-sustaining, powerful organization, with every precinct of the entire state represented, and thus effectually refute the church falsehood that Infidels comprise but a beggarly few, lacking in respectability, means, or influence, and destitute of any bond of unity or harmony of purpose? You do? Then hav you no immediate duty to perform? Should you not at once become a member of the Washington Secular Union, use all your influence to induce others to do so, and help elect the best Liberal in your vicinity as vice-president? Do you realize what a powerful help, what prestige, it would giv to Liberals in every part of the state, if as a united body we go into court demanding justice and compliance with the law? How it would change the tactics of press, politician, and church! They would thenceforth treat Liberals with respect, instead of insolently ignoring, ridiculing, or wilfully misrepresenting them. The Liberals of any precinct becoming members of the Washington Secular Union hav at once a bond of interest. Their coming together to select and elect one of their own number as vice-president of the state society, would be the first step toward better acquaintance, and greater mutual interest in each other's welfare, and lead to the formation of a local Union.

The Washington Secular Union is founded on strictly business principles—pay as you go; all receive benefit. The work done is for the advantage of all; all should contribute. The dues, in order to carry on the work and forward the aims and objects of the society, are $1 each six months, payable in advance—less than four cents a week. I accepted the position of secretary knowing it would at first be one of thankless, unremitting toil, with small and doubtful pay, but I hav confidence in the grand nobility of character Liberalism inspires in all honest hearts—they will sustain me in the work. I am not in the cause exclusivly for gain. When gain becomes my sole object, the church will gladly pay me ten dollars for every one paid me by Liberalism.

I know the mighty power of efficient organization, and that once established in Washington, the glorious results attained will prompt other states to follow her lead. Some one had to step into the breach and suffer and endure until the forces are all in good working order. Then any intelligent, zealous woman or man can fill the office of secretary, and I shall be only too glad to lay my heavy burden down, the work accomplished.

Dr. H. Doane, the distinguished electrician, one of the most able and successful physicians on this coast—and a stanch Liberal—warns me that my condition is most critical, and positivly forbids the least over-exertion. My appeal for help was not on account of personal needs, however much cause may exist for making such appeal—not for myself, who perchance ere the appeal is answered may be beyond its reach, gone to my eternal rest. No! I cry for help, but it is help for the cause, help for the Liberals of Washington so they may each and all realize the present needs and grand opportunities to place the young giant state in the vanguard of mental freedom and human progress. It is not in the power of the combined churches to defeat us, unless by apathy and indifference we permit the golden opportunity to pass. Apathy, then, at this time, on the part of any Liberal of Washington, is a crime. "The next few weeks is worth an age if rightly employed, but if the time is frittered away by procrastination, not alone the state of Washington, but the cause of human progress throughout the entire continent will partake of the misfortune." To continue quotations from the "Common Sense" of that noble hero, Thomas Paine, with whom to do good was religion—"And there is no punishment which that man will not deserve, be he who or what or where he will, that may be the means of sacrificing a season so precious and useful." "The sun never shone on a cause of greater worth. It is not an affair of a city, a county, a province, or a kingdom, but of a continent. 'Tis not the concern of a day, a year, or an age; posterity are virtually involved in the contest, and will be more or less affected even to the end of time by your proceedings now."

Now is the seedtime of earnest union, of practical organization. Liberals of Washington, duty is plain before you. In perfect confidence I await your action.

C. B. REYNOLDS,
Seattle, Wash. Sec. Wash. Secular Union.

Lectures and Meetings.

"THE Paradoxes of Humanity," is the title of a lecture by Mrs. Marguerite Moore, for next Friday evening at the Liberal Club, 220 East 15th street.

W. F. JAMIESON desires his Liberal friends of Minnesota and Wisconsin to correspond with him, as he desires to lecture in those states during the summer. Address at Des Moines, Ia.

Interesting and Entertaining.

From the Byron, Ill., Express.

We wish to extend our thanks to THE TRUTH SEEKER for an interesting little book entitled. "A Symposium of Freethought, Is it Conservativ or Destructiv"—an entertaining work, for sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER's office, 28 Lafayette place, New York city.

Communications.

Life of Satan.—Continued.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

We do not know how long it took Satan to traverse the distance between heaven and earth, but we do know, thanks to the industry of Luke, that (x, 18) Christ "saw Satan like lightning fall from heaven." The veracity of both the eye-witnesses as well as the relator can, of course, not be doubted, hence we are able to state that the velocity of Satan during his downward journey was 186,000 miles a second. Naturally a descent of such a kind would produce considerable heat and therefore friction, yet the latter seems not to hav affected Satan. Still, the descent was not without its consequences; on striking the earth he was so unfortunate as to break his leg. This accident did, however, prove to be more serious than might hav been expected, as, owing to the lack of good medical assistance, the broken limb was never properly set—a fact that seems rather strange since according to the medieval clergy's decision the art of healing was a black, a diabolical art—and Satan, like Loki, Hephaistus, and Typhon, has been lame ever since, a truth confirmed by Christian art, which always represents Satan as being a cripple.

The angels that followed the banner of Satan, shared in his misfortune and were likewise thrust out of the heavenly city. They reached the earth in a heap, and Jehovah, taking advantage of this, placed his little finger on them and consumed them.

Some time after these events had taken place Jehovah placed a man and a woman in the garden of Eden, and Satan, wishing anew to compare his power with Jehovah's, succeeded one day, probably during a temporary absence of the last-mentioned omnipresent being, in gaining entrance to the garden. Knowing how much the feminin mind is influenced by appearance, he, to impress her with the fact of his own importance and high station in life, saddled, according to Jewish authority, the serpent, which at that time was of the size of a camel, and galloped up to the woman, who afterward was called Eve (from the verb hayok, to liv). The result of the conversation is well known. Eve ate of the fruit, which according to some was of an apple-tree, to others a wheat-tree, while again others state it was a fig; still, this is of less importance. Finding the taste of it delicious she invited her husband, Adam (earth), to partake, and he, with a gallantry nowadays rare among husbands, accepted her invitation at once and ate of the fruit also.

Modern Christian theology has succeeded in confounding Satan with the serpent. It is more probable, I think, that he took possession of the latter, or perhaps transformed himself into a snake like being. But let us proceed in the narrativ.

Evening came, and the voice of the Lord God, probably wishing to take some exercise before it went to bed, was promenading in one of the alleys of the garden. And although we are informed by the clergy that the Lord God is omnipresent, all-seeing, and all-wise, it seems that on this occasion these attributes were employed somewhere else, for the voice had to ask Adam, "Where art thou?" Adam answered, and the other attributes of the Lord God having meanwhile arrived, he informed the culprits that he knew all, and was exasperated over the defeat Satan had inflicted upon him. Jehovah, full of love and mercy as he is, condemned the poor fallen beings, and turning to the snake, which, like Adam and Eve before the fall, knew not "good from evil;" and which, probably scared by the voice of God, that, as we know, is "like the sound of many waters," had remained as rooted on the spot, said to it, "Upon thy belly shalt thou go and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life." A most severe judgment, we should think, considering that the snake never was in possession of either feet or wings. But when the anger of Jehovah grew cool he probably saw the cruel character of this his first curse; at least, he seems never to hav enforced it, for at present the snake does not eat dust all the days of its life.

The idea of a Golden Age, of a former state of innocence, health, and purity from which man falls when he, tempted by woman, disregards the command of the supreme being, forms a part of almost every religion of antiquity. We hav not the time to dwell upon this fact to such an extent as we wish. We are obliged to restrict ourselvs to giving a few of the most striking instances, and direct those of our readers who desire further information to S. Baring-Gould's "Legends of the Patriarchs and Prophets;" Smith: "Chaldean Account of Genesis;" Colenso: "The Pentateuch and Book of Joshua Critically Examined," etc, and to that most excellent compilation, "Bible Myths and Their Parallels in Other Religions," which for accuracy and general excellence we hav found unrivaled.

According to the Bundehesh Ormuzd created a human couple, Mashya and Mashayâna, which he placed in an abode called Heden, through which ran a mighty river. In this region or garden of Heden stood a tree, Höm, which contained the power of resurrection, and which was guarded by several of Ormuzd's attendants. Long did the couple liv in happiness and peace, but at the last their hour came. Ahriman, the prince of devils, sent a demon, who in the form of a serpent approached Mashayâna and gave her and her husband fruit from the tree Höm. Thus the eternal happiness of mankind was lost.

The Babylonians possessed the same legend about fifteen hundred years before the Jews heard of it, and although those cuneiform inscriptions which treat of the serpent and the tree hav not been found, yet in the sacred grove of Anu we hav evidently the Hebrew tree of life, a supposition which is strengthened by a specimen of early Babylonian art now preserved in the British Museum, and which represents "two figures sitting one on each side of a tree holding out their hands to the fruit, while at the back of one (the woman) is scratched a serpent" (Smith: Chaldean Account of Genesis, p. 91).

The Hindoos had likewise a garden of Eden. It was the mountain Meru, on which no sinful being can liv. It is adorned with celestial plants and trees, and watered by four rivers. It was in this garden, which was guarded by a terrible dragon, that Swayambhura and his wife Satarupa liv in innocence and joy until Siva, who desires to tempt this the first couple, lets fall a blossom from the sacred fig-tree Sôma. Swayambhura, tempted by his wife, takes possession of the flower, and is for this act cursed by Siva.

But it is not alone among the Persians, Babylonians, and Hindoos we find a garden of Eden, a temptation and fall of man. The ancient Greeks, Egyptians, and Scandinavians, the Chinese, Mexicans, Thibetans, etc, hav likewise their versions of the same myths. In fact, it seems to be a universal belief that man, through his disobedience, has become a fallen being.

How this myth of a former happy existence of man originated, we cannot tell with certainty, yet we believe that in the pleasure with which aged people love to dwell upon the days of their childhood and youth, a tendency which has given birth to such phrases as "the good old days" or "the blessed olden time," we hav one of the creativ factors.

It must, however, not be supposed that there always existed a belief in the literal truth of these myths. Rabbi Moses Ben Maimon, one of the most learned men the Jewish nation has produced, expressly states that we must consider these myths as allegories only, and so do other rabbis. Even Christian fathers, as St. Augustine and Origen, do not hesitate to express the same opinion, and in our days the number of these skeptics has vastly increased, even among the ministerial ranks; and yet this in spite of the fact that on the myth of the fall of man is built the whole Christian theology. For if we take away the fall, what use is there then of an atonement and a redeemer?

It is said by Jewish rabbis that Adam was created double; that he was both male and female, had two faces and one tail. This may seem rather strange to a modern mind, yet it is nevertheless the truth. For does not the Bible tell us "male and female created he them" (Gen. i, 27), and in Psalms cxxxiv, "Thou hast fashioned me before and behind?" Now, that these passages can hav no other significance is proved by the words of Adam (Gen. ii, 23), "This is now bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh," which passage, translated into common English, means, Now I hav a wife taken from my own bones and flesh, which was not the case with my first one. But this fact of being obliged to take his wife along wherever he went, naturally enough did not suit Adam, any better than it would a modern husband. He could not go to the club, or a fishing, or to see the man around the corner, unless his wife knew it. Jehovah saw his misery, and resolved to release him from his matrimonial incumbrance, to which end he asked one of the cherubim to hand him his sword, which was a flaming one which turned every way. With it Jehovah performed the first surgical operation on record, and turned the one half of Adam away from the other half. Thus it came to pass that Adam's first wife, Lilith, enjoyed an individual existence. But Lilith was proved rather unmanageable. To tell the truth, she was a woman's rights adherent, and consequently believed herself to be as good as her husband. Such advanced notions—she was about seven thousand years ahead of her time—met with the decided disapproval of both her husband and Jehovah, who both believed that man ought to be the head of woman. The anger of God waxed hot, and I think he must hav repented of what he had done. For we know for certain that Jehovah does repent; he did so after the fall (Gen. iv), although we know also he is not "the son of man that he should repent" (Num. xxiii, 9). When his anger "waxed hot" enough he drove her out of paradise and told her to go to the devil. Lilith did as the Lord had commanded her, but before she was out of hearing distance she turned about and said, "Tell Adam that posterity shall be the judge between him and me." Posterity has given its judgment. Every believer in woman's rights, Dr. Mary Walker and the Women's Christian Temperance Union, look upon thee, O Adam, with withering scorn!

The reader will excuse this return to ante-fall days, but I believe it to be the duty of a biographer not to neglect any information that may throw light upon the life and character of his subject, and as Lilith became the better half, or rather fifth, of Satan, my proceeding is, I think, perfectly justifiable.

We know that Jehovah, after having precipitated Satan and the angels who rebelled with him from heaven, destroyed these latter and left Satan alone to mourn his fate. Although Burke had not written his work "On the Sublime and Beautiful" at that time, yet Satan thought, like him, that "the total and perpetual exclusion from all society is as great a pain as can almost be conceived;" and partly to get relief, and perhaps, also—I cannot deny this rather ignoble trait of my hero's character—to commemorate his late victory over Jehovah in the garden of Eden, he resolved to get married. Newspapers and matrimonial bureaus not having been invented yet, Satan was obliged to do his own wife-hunting. His choice fell upon Lilith, Adam's grass-widow, and she, enamored by his polished manners and attractiv appearance, stammered forth a yes, which made Satan the happiest devil in existence. The wedding took place the same day, but I am sorry I cannot satisfy the curiosity of my lady readers by describing the bride's toilet. Even tradition is silent on this subject. The bridegroom wore, besides his brightest smile, his go-to meeting suit—swimming-trousers and standing-up collar, while a length of stovepipe, which was not needed to carry away the smoke from his infernal furnaces, did service as silk hat.

Later in life—I cannot state the exact time, owing to the rather untrustworthy character of chronicles of that time—Satan took unto himself some more wives, Naama, the daughter of Lamech, Igereth and Macbalath. In these transactions Satan showed, I must admit, his moral inferiority to many men, among others to King Solomon, who had seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines (1 Kings xi, 3). By each of his four wives Satan became the proud father of a great number of devils, who, with their respectiv mothers, reign over the seasons of the year. At the change of the seasons there is a large family gathering, on which occasion the devils gather round their dear mother. It seems that to these gatherings the friends of the family are likewise invited. It is said that every St. Hans night innumerable witches are seen riding through the air, each sitting on a broomstick and accompanied by her black cat, and all are bound for Hazen or Blocksberg, in Germany, where the festivities take place. We will, however, warrant the truth of this assertion, since it is not vouched by the rabbis or church fathers, or by the gospels.

For several centuries after the marriage of Satan we hav but scanty knowledge of his sayings and doings. Then no American newspaper reporter ever called to interview him, and no Boswell took pains to note down those small traits and anecdotes which enable us to get an insight to the individual's inner life. But we do suppose that his duties as family father, and tutor for his many children—Lilith alone had 478 legions—occupied most of his time, and considering this we are sorely grieved by hearing so holy a man as the writer of Chronicles assert that "Satan stood up against Israel and provoked David to number Israel" (1 Chron. xxi, 1). And our grief is so much the deeper because this accusation is nothing but vile slander. For it is expressly stated by the writer of 2 Sam. xxiv, 1—and no one acquainted with Hebrew, Greek, and English grammar can deny it—that it was Jehovah himself, and not Satan, who "moved" David. Of course it may possibly be that the Holy Ghost, when he inspired the Chronicles writer, had left his memorandum book at home, and consequently made this mistake; in fact, we should not be the least surprised if this really was the case. Then we know, judging from the many contradictions in which both the Old and the New Testament abound, that the memory of His Ghostly Eminence is rather impaired, and only two things excite our wonder: First, Jehovah's patience with his blundering secretary, who, instead of attending to his business, spends his time not alone in seducing lonesome virgins—instances of which abound in the history of antiquity—but even in violating the sanctity of the marriage tie, an instance of which latter conduct is given us in the holy gospels; second, the forbearance of Satan in that he has not sued the secretary for slander, a course deemed perfectly justifiable by even strictly orthodox Christians of our time, and this although they are told, "Love your enemies."

At last Satan had completed the education of his progeny, and a more lively and mischievous lot of children never existed. In fact, they were full of deviltry. No wonder, therefore, that Satan, like any other father, looked upon them with pride. Yet it was not in his nature to pass his days in the bosom of his family. Even the best of Gods, devils, and men wants to know what is going on outside. Therefore, after taking a loving farewell from charming wives and beautiful children, Satan, turning his back to his warm, comfortable home, set out on his journey to this earth. After his arrival, having no special business on hand, he, being a lover of nature, made up his mind to explore that witness of Jehovah's power, wisdom, and love, the wilderness. Here he met a gentleman who gave his name as being Christ Jesus, a Galilean Dr. Tanner, who just had finished a forty days' fast. Further conversation revealed the fact that the gentleman was a son of Jehovah, and as old as his father the Holy Ghost, both of whom existed before the beginning of creation, while his mother, the Virgin Mary, who at the time of our narrativ was about fifty years of age, was the wife of his father, Carpenter Joseph of Nazareth, a direct descendant of King David. Satan, on hearing this, at once recognized him as one of the persons of the trinity. By the way, not being able myself to explain the relationship in which the different members of this three-leaved clover stand to each other, I subjoin an extract from the world renowned document known as the Athanasian creed, a perusal of which will convince any person possessing a tolerably well-balanced mind that there is nothing mysterious whatever about this trinity if she or he will only use their faith. Reason and every-day common sense are not alone perfectly useless, but even destructiv.

The extract referred to is as follows:

> We worship one God as trinity, and trinity in unity; neither confounding the persons nor dividing the substance; for there is one person of the Father, another of the Son, and another of the Holy Ghost. But the godhead of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one; the glory equal, the majesty co-eternal.

Viewed with the eyes of reason it reads:

We worship one God in the person of three Gods, and the same three Gods in the person of one God; neither mixing up the persons nor dividing the one substance of which the three persons are composed. For there are three persons, but these three are one and the same person. Only the father is self-existing; the two others derive their existence from the former; yet all three are equal and of the same age. Each of them has a character different from the others, each of them possesses qualities which the others hav not, yet in spite of this they are all three three perfect beings and one perfect being.

But this latter explanation of mine is of course erroneous, for I admit I do not possess the necessary amount of faith required, so I say with St. Paul (Rom. xiv, 5): "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

But to return to Satan. As soon as he had found out who his fellow-traveler was, he naturally tried to tempt him. He used various schemes, but was unsuccessful, so at last he took Christ Jesus "up into an exceeding high mountain," which latter has either totally disappeared or at least grown smaller, and lent him his telescope, by which he was enabled to see the edge and under side of the earth, that, we know, was flat at that time. While Christ Jesus was thus engaged in viewing "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," Satan addressing him said, among other things, "All these things I will giv thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." But Christ Jesus was obstinate; he did not care for the good things of this world, a trait in his character in which he differs very much from his present representativs. And then Satan, perceiving he was "left," left him.

This highly instructiv and moral narrativ is found in the writings of the divinely inspired, and therefore truthful, writers of Matthew iv, 1–11, Mark i, 12, 13, and Luke iv. 1–13. Yet, we do not know really what to think of it. For the likewise divinely inspired writer, John, who certainly would tell the truth as well as the others, says that on the day after the baptism Christ Jesus was yet "hanging round" Jordan (i, 35), while on the second day he tramped through Galilee (43), where he on the third day provided wine for the guests at a marriage feast in Cana (ii, 1–10), after which he went down to Capernaum and thence to Jerusalem to take part in the Jewish passover (12, 13). Yet in spite of this evidence, I lean toward the belief that the three first-mentioned authors are right; then, supposing this, we hav an explanation of Satan's subsequent conduct. Taking this ground, it is evident that the splendid victory of Christ Jesus vexed Satan considerably; at least, we hear nothing more about him for quite a while; for the story told in Matt. xiii, about the devil sowing tares, I consider as a deliberate falsehood, invented purposely to soil the reputation of my hero. For after making the most diligent inquiries as to his character, I hav not found the slightest trace of his ever being on a "tear" and much less on a regular succession of "drunks," nor do I know of his ever walking from saloon to saloon treating himself to small drinks. Being acquainted with the clergy's mode of explaining the sacred text, I am fully convinced that such exposition is possible. The passage which runs as follows: "But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way," can easily be explained thus: "But while the men [the rational faculties of Satan] slept, the enemy [his passion for strong drinks] came and sowed tares [that is, influenced him to call for several small drinks, a sufficient number of which will make a person "get on a tear"] among the wheat [it is well known that people of that country use wheat bread, hence, in the figurativ language of the oriental the taking of a drink between every few mouthfuls of wheat bread is expressed by the phrase, sowing tares among the wheat].

But if the devil himself was not activ, his dear children made up for it. They were all over—now in the country of the Gergesenes (Matt. ix, 28–33), where two of them entered the bodies of two men; now in the land of Gadarenes, where one, by name Legion—"for we are many," said he—had taken possession of a poor fellow (Mark v, 1–14). But on both occasions they were driven out by Christ, who, using his word (Matt. viii, 16)—how I do not know, but I suppose for a fork or a shovel—made them leave their habitation. Yet for some reason or another he did not kill them, but allowed them to enter a herd of swine, among which they raised such devilish disturbance that the innocent four-footed beings got afraid and committed suicide by drowning. I do not know whether Christ ever paid the owners for the loss they had sustained. These small devils would sometimes be mean enough to say to Jesus, when he drove them out, "Thou art Christ the son of God" (Luke iv, 41), which always was sure to annoy him, since he wished no one to know what a "big bug" he really was. Yet we know only one instance where he did not suffer them to speak, and it is related by Mark i, 24. At other times the devils would be deaf and dumb, an instance of which is told by Mark ix, 17–27—yet these afflictions would not prevent them from either hearing or crying. It was not always necessary for Jesus to speak to them. Thus, the devil who plagued the Syrophenician woman's daughter left before Christ came; but he was evidently new in his business and consequently rather timid.

GUSTAVE NELSON.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

"Church Taxation."

I hav just read Miss Craddock's appeal to Liberals to circulate the forthcoming pamphlet on "Church Taxation," by President Westbrook. I shall want a dozen, but where shall I send for them—to THE TRUTH SEEKER office, or where?*

I wish, however, to criticise Mr. Westbrook's sixth "point," which reads as follows: "The taxation of church property would make very little difference to church-goers, as they are already mainly taxpayers, and what is saved to the church by exemption is added to the duplicate of personal taxation." This is a truth which is virtually untrue. For instance, Queen Victoria gets $5,000 per day; this, with other enormous sums, is raised mainly by taxing farmers. The farmer pays it and yet he does not. In order to pay the tax laid upon him, he grinds it out of the poor slavish men and women, the latter working in the fields for sixteen cents a day. (Send ten cents to John Davey, Kent, O., for "The Union and its Flag," and see how these poor women suffer.) The heavier the taxes the more the farmer must cut down labor in order to pay the taxes. It is, then, the toilers who pay the taxes. Who will deny this? Farmers, in England, seldom ever pretend to work for themselvs. They are a species of "middle men," taking the products of labor, deducting a fat living and enough to sport with, and handing over the balance for the support of idle parish priests, and to maintain the army and navy and the monstrous imposition of royalty. We are drifting into the same ruts in this country. The exemption of church property from taxation is a step in that direction.

Trusts, corporations, and even the ordinary business men never calculate to be minus in their own profits on account of taxation. No, sirs; the price of labor must be lowered or the products of labor must be raised. I belong to no labor organization and take no part, directly, in the conflicts between capital and labor, but the facts which I hav just stated are so plain the most uninformed cannot help realizing the truth of them. Our village, Kent, a few years ago was noted for the "liv and let liv" wages paid by the railroad company. Now the officials of the road hav got to imitating European nabobs, building "royal dog cars" to haul themselvs and officials of other roads over the United States "inspecting roads," etc., as if an ordinary Pullman car was not good enough. To meet this enormous expense, the wages of the men had to be cut down. Some are working at eighty cents per day. Whenever mansions, palaces, and cathedrals begin to be reared, the price of labor goes down. In the nature of things it must be so. This side of facts should not be omitted in presenting the question of "Church Taxation" to the public mind. The building of costly churches means high-salaried preachers; the presence of silks, broadcloth, cant, hypocrisy, stock-gamblers, rotten gentility; a general prostitution of the teachings of Christ, and an indirect repulsion of the masses from whose hard earnings the money has been extorted to erect those gaudy buildings. The masses of day-laborers and mechanics realize these facts, and a feeling of revenge is rising within their breasts against this return to priestly rule and despotism; hence a strong effort should be made by the Liberals to get all the facts before their minds.

The Jesuit priesthood is zealously at work to bring into the Romish church all the main moneyed men of the country and its governmental officials. That means continued exemption of church property, Catholic framing of our laws, and, after a little while, the laying of these United States at the feet of the holy father, the pope, as they are sworn to do. Liberals should distribute at least a hundred thousand of these pamphlets on taxation of church property.

Kent, O. JOHN DAVEY.

* Send to secretary American Secular Union, 930 N. 17th street, Philadelphia, Pa.—ED. T. S.

The Sympathy of Nature for Man.

In the issue of the 19th inst. Mr. I. S. Bradley, among your "Letters from Friends," proposes the following questions, to "corner" disbelievers in immortality with no doubt, but which I will dispose of in short order:

First: "Is man sympathetic?"

I reply in the affirmativ, only adding that the intensity of his sympathetic inclination depends upon the affinity or congeniality of those with whom he comes in contact.

Second: "Is man a product of nature?"

I emphatically answer Yes, without any qualification whatever.

Third: "Is nature sympathetic?"

It is so in a limited degree; her constituents, atoms, having an affinity for congenial particles, which tendency is essentially sympathetic in its character.

Fourth: "Is nature non-sympathetic?"

I reply that wherever atoms or forces are uncongenial in their character they are essentially unsympathetic.

Fifth (and last question): "Is it possible for a non-sympathetic element to produce anything containing sympathy?"

This question is already answered in the above. Nature is partly sympathetic and partly unsympathetic, these opposit tendencies manifesting themselvs in attraction and repulsion. From these two opposit forces of nature were evolved the loves and hates of organic beings, and the more pronounced sympathetic inclinations of the human species—though not all are "drawn together by a fellow-feeling that makes them wondrous kind," as Mr. Bradley is probably aware, many showing a decided repugnance to each other at first sight. Love and hate are therefore but questions of congeniality in man as well as in ultimate atoms. Sympathy in man is but the developed form of the sympathy existing inchoately in nature or in its constituent particles. It is sympathy that impels atoms to cling together, forming the bodies which clash upon our senses as matter, though nothing but aggregations of immaterial force particles which through their various molecular arrangements assume the multitudinous forms pervading space. If this sympathy existing between the particles of matter were suddenly destroyed their bond of union would be severed and disintegration would instantly ensue. How then can nature be unsympathetic while the bodies comprising it, great and small, are clinging together in a loving embrace until "death," i.e., encroaching inimical elements, doth them part? In man, the product of nature, we will find therefore in a developed form what is innate in the tiniest molecule.

If Mr. Bradley is answered, and "turn about is fair play," I would propose the following questions, to which I invite the attention of believers in immortality:

1. Can a finite being giv birth to an infinit one?
2. Are souls or spirits a substance?
3. If so, from what source is this spirit substance derived?
4. Does a spirit occupy the same amount of space as when in the flesh, i.e., the same number of cubic feet?
5. Can two or more spirits occupy the same space simultaneously; or in other words, must they make room for each other as they did while in the flesh?
6. Will spirits outliv the life, decay, and disintegration of their parent planet?

If these questions are logically answered I will embrace Spiritualism and resign myself to the horrible fate of being condemned to pass all eternity singing hosannas to an "unknown quantity," or cudgeling my brains solving the mysteries of the universe. What a pleasant pastime, by the way, this must be for those who cannot sing, or "never cared the snap of their finger" for the universe! But for "sich like" some other employment will hav to be found, no doubt, else they will soon be in the predicament of

> The wandering Jew,
> Who wanted to die,
> But didn't know how to.

Marengo, Ill., April 22, 1890. H. WETTSTEIN.

SEND for catalog of our publications. Sent free on application.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY. - - - MAY 10, 1890

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Pictorial Arguments Against the Church.

A FOUR HUNDRED PAGE CARTOON BOOK.

Two Hundred Pictures and Two Hundred Pages of Reading Matter.

Price, $2; advance orders solicited.

A Brief Interview by Mail.

Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers of the Voice, a Prohibition journal of the ultra-orthodox and tyrannical sort, hav sent out a circular, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, with a question attachment, our answers to which will be found hereto appended. The publishers of the Voice say: "Will you not help us to awaken public opinion in favor of the purification of politics? Senator Ingalls says, 'The purification of politics is an iridescent dream.' Are the business men of America—the men who do not care for office, but do care for the welfare of the republic—ready to settle down to the conclusion that to seek after clean politics is the chasing of rainbows? We do not believe it. If conscience cannot be forced into politics, if at least the honor that rules in business cannot be made to rule among the men who control the ballot-box, there is indeed gravest reason for apprehension. Will you not help us to make public opinion against political corruption and in favor of clean politics by writing us your answer to one or all of the inclosed questions?"

We are quite willing to do anything legitimate that shall make for honor and honesty, that shall benefit the country, enhance liberty, and help to hasten the time when all men shall be free, shall be equal before the law practically as well as theoretically, and possess the opportunity to express their unpurchased sentiments and deposit their votes uninfluenced by priests and politicians at the polls on election day. But we are not very strongly in favor of the plans of the pharisees who are behind this Prohibition circular. It is their desire to run the country themselvs in conjunction with the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the God-in-the-Constitution party, and fellows like Senator Blair of New Hampshire. The evils of the liquor traffic are but the pretext for their ambition.

These are the questions:

"1. Do you not believe that to conspire against the purity of the ballot-box should be regarded as treason against the republic, and should be most severely punished?"

We believe that influence through fear or bribery of electors is a crime. And we believe also that when Archbishop Corrigan or any other priest commands his church slaves to vote as he desires them to he is a criminal. The ordinary political influencing of votes is not so great a treason against the country as the machinations of the Roman Catholics.

"2. Is not the present domination of the liquor power in politics an exceedingly great evil, and one to be most resolutely resisted?"

The domination of any one power in politics is necessarily an evil, and inevitably leads to tyranny. That is why we oppose the efforts of Blair, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and the National Reform Association. Let these people hav their way, and liberty in this country would be something unknown. The liquor dealers seek "domination" for only one thing; the churches are seeking to dominate us in all things—schools, holidays, taxes, even our printed thoughts and spoken words. A blasphemy law is more invasiv of liberty than a saloon; a Sunday law interferes more with a man's rights than a license law; the practical destruction of our public school system is more dangerous to the welfare of the country than the construction of whisky stills. If the liquor dealers were seeking to force everybody to use their goods, then we might compare them to the religionists who are endeavoring to force men to submit to them. At present, however, there can be no doubt at all as to which is the more dangerous element in politics.

"3 What do you think of the purchase of the public press in Pennsylvania and elsewhere by the liquor men, as confessed in the 'confidential' letters published in the Voice."

We think that if an editor has sold his opinion he is a dishonest man. We think also that the methods of the liquor men are dishonorable. But their immorality is as virtue compared to the miserable actions of the hypocrits who present a petition for a Sunday law, claiming fourteen million signatures, when in fact, less than three hundred ever signed the petition. And their action is compsarativly harmless beside the provision of Senator Blair's prohibition bill which would invade the home, the shop, the ships, the very closets and cellars of every man in the country in a search for the forbidden article. There is such a thing as a remedy being worse than the disease for which it is applied.

"4. What do you deem the most important practicable step towards the purification of politics?"

Get the priests of the Roman Catholic church and the fanatics of the Protestant church out of it. Let Senator Blair and Frances Willard go into retirement. Let the pharisees of the Prohibition party be honest and show their full hand. Let the God-in-the Constitutionalists disband their National Reform Association. Let the Sabbath Union cease its endeavors to make the Senate believe that the people desire the reënactment of puritan Sunday laws, and stop lying about their petition. Let the Methodists quit boasting that their church once elected a president, and can do it again. These are a few practical steps toward purifying politics—steps which the Voice may hav some influence in inducing the people named to take.

"5. If you hav no objection, please state with which political party you usually act?"

With the party we think is right, and for the men we think to be honest.

With the fanatics and the pharisees, Never!

Sunday Law Idolatry.

We frequently meet with the expression, "the American Sunday." According to common sense and the Constitution of the United States we should naturally conclude that this was a Sunday which every American was free to observe in any manner he pleased or not observe at all. It is difficult to imagin the existence of anything more un-American in spirit than the enforcement of Sunday laws. Yet there is one thing that equals even this in inconsistency. That is the observance of Sunday as a Sabbath by Christians professing to find their religion in the Bible.

Setting aside one day at least out of seven for purposes of rest and recreation is no doubt to be commended as a public benefit. Sunday is as suitable for that purpose as any other day, and for the convenience of those who may wish to attend public worship may be considered more suitable. There is, therefore, no reason to object to the prohibition of the employment of labor on that day, where such prohibition is not accompanied by any serious inconvenience. But to prevent any individual or number of individuals from themselvs doing on Sundays what would be lawful at any other time is politically tyranny and religiously idolatry.

When keeping Sunday as a religious day is made the chief point of practical piety, it ceases to be Christian, and becomes an idolatrous rite. It is idolatry to worship the work of our own hands, and this is what the Sunday-law persecutors are doing. Cessation from labor and business on the first day of the week is the main article in their religion. According to their own Bible they are commanded to work on that day. "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work. But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made the heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; whereupon the Lord blessed the seventh day and hallowed it" (Ex. xx, 8–12). In Genesis i we learn that the days were to be kept from evening till morning, and we know from Jewish practice that they were so kept. The time the Bible God commenced his rest was Friday evening, and, in memory of it, the Sabbath was to be kept from that time until Saturday evening, when the first day, with its obligation of work, began. There was a Sabbath of years for the land commanded by the same authority as the weekly Sabbath for man (Lev. xxv, 1–16). If the one is absurd, why not the other? Both are Jewish institutions, and there never was a Sabbath which was not Jewish.

The Christian Sabbath is a ridiculous misnomer. To the majority of Christians themselvs, the very name is unknown. The early Christians observed the Saturday until they discovered that they were no longer Jews. In later ages the Roman church established a festival to be kept on the first day of the week in memory of Christ's resurrection, which was believed to hav occurred on that day. But it never was, and is not now, in that church, confounded with the Sabbath. In the breviaries of the church the offices for Saturday are appointed under its old name of the Sabbath, and Sunday under that of the Lord's day. If Christians wish to be consistent they should either keep the Sabbath at the time and in the manner commanded in the Old Testament, or consider that it is entirely abolished under the New Covenant, and not keep it at all.

The time appointed in the Old Testament is from Friday sunset till Saturday sunset. The manner is by entirely resting from all work ourselvs and forbidding any work to be done by our servants and cattle. We must also, if we keep the Old Testament's Sabbath, make the breach of its observance a capital crime. "Ye shall keep the Sabbath also: for it is holy unto you. Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death" (Ex. xxxi, 14). We must visit with death the offense of lighting a fire upon a Saturday. "Whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitation on the Sabbath day" (xxxv, 2, 3). But there is no commandment respecting any form of worship to be carried on upon that day. If we stay at home and do nothing we keep the Sabbath. If we ride to church we break it and should be put to death.

But if this Jewish Sabbath is abolished under the Christian dispensation, there is not one word in the Bible or anywhere else, save in human laws, about keeping any Sabbath at all. The Romish church has commanded that servil works, i.e., works usually performed by slaves, shall be abstained from, and the sacrifice of the mass attended, on the first day of the week, and the Roman church claims authority to make ceremonial laws, but how about those who reject her authority? By what curious logic does the Protestant hold himself bound to abstain from work on Sunday, and not bound to abstain from meat on Friday, when the one observance has exactly the same authority as the other? The New Testament does not contain either command. Two or three times it is mentioned that the apostles were together on the first day of the week, but nothing could be more natural than to suppose that they would be, as that day commenced on Saturday evening, and throughout the Saturday they had been together to keep the Sabbath, which had not then ceased to be observed.

Even if this extremely probable cause of their assembling together had not existed, the mere fact of their being together on any day of the week would be a poor excuse for observing that day in place of another to which a strict commandment was attached.

But the truth is that, all other religious observances having nearly died out with religious belief, the superstition inherited from the religion of the past makes people cling to the observance of one day as having a religious significance. And this superstition is so far consistent with its religious origin that it appoints a day for the observance of which as a Sabbath there is absolutely no reason at all. If the Sabbath is of obligation, it must be kept at the time and in the manner commanded. If kept at any other time, it is done in compliance with human laws. Those who keep Sunday as a Sabbath are complying not with the commands of their God, but legal enactments made by men. They are worshiping not God, but laws which are the work of their own hands. They are not Bible Christians, but Sunday-law idolators.

Mr. Harman's Sentence.

Moses Harman has been sentenced by Judge Foster to five years in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of three hundred dollars.

When our readers comprehend the meaning of these words, those of them especially who hav read the articles upon which he was convicted, their indignation will be deep and furious. A sneak thief gets a few months in jail; a burglar a year or two in the penitentiary; a man guilty of an atrocious assault thirty or forty months in the state prison—and they all, perhaps, deserve it, for they hav seriously injured their fellow-men. But Mr. Harman has done none of these things: he has stolen nothing, assaulted no one, injured no man. The crime for which he suffers this malignant sentence is in fact no crime at all. Admitting that wilful obscenity should be punished; admitting, even, for the sake of rendering the case clearer, that Mr. Harman's publication of Dr. O'Neil's communication deserved punishment, this imprisonment of five years for printing the articles upon which conviction was secured is an abominable perversion of justice, brutal in its magnitude, and undeniably evincing a persecuting spirit. The judge has obtained his revenge for the presumption which Mr. Harman displayed in instructing him in his duties.

The Comstock law ought to be swept from the statute books of the nation. The local courts are amply competent to inflict punishment upon evil doers, and therefore this villainous law serves no useful purpose, and is, besides, as unconstitutional as would be a statute authorizing treasonable actions. From the time of its enactment to the present it has been used by its procurer for tyrannical purposes only. It is the knotted club with which the despicable agents of the Vice Society beat out the brains of better, and a thousand times purer, men than themselvs. No state court in the country would inflict such barbarous punishment for no crime whatever as this United States district court has inflicted upon Mr. Harman. The sentence bears no relation to justice; it is beyond the pale of humanity; it is wanton cruelty. If its victim had been as guilty as he is innocent, five years' imprisonment would hav been a merciless retribution to hav visited upon him.

The articles upon which Mr. Harman was convicted are two. One of them is a letter which we described a few days after Mr. Harman's arrest (February 23, 1887) as a "coarsely written and exclamatory denunciation of the abuse of marital rights," but in which the "obscenity" is concentrated in the use of one word common in all medical journals. But as we said then, so we still maintain, that, yielding to Judge Benedict's definition of obscenity, the article could not corrupt the morals nor deprave the mind, and if the use of the word is in this case obscene, then it is in every case, and the publishers of all medical books may be prosecuted. The other article is a letter from Mrs. Celia B. Whitehead, a Christian lady, to Mrs. E. D. Slenker. Mrs. Whitehead's letter is a protest against the use of contraceptes and a plea for austerity of life. Though a Christian, Mrs. Whitehead is a humanitarian, and her work is always for humanity's good, as she sees it. It will probably shock her, and may or may not injure her church standing, to be legally convicted of writing articles too obscene for public print. But neither of these letters can, by any legitimate stretch of any decent imagination, be confounded with that vile class of publications which the honest part of the congressmen had in mind when they passed Comstock's law. Compared with numberless passages in the Bible the letters are refinement itself; and it is without question that the writers of both intended only good by their inditing—one to make men more gentle toward their wives, the other to induce perfect chastity on the part of both sexes.

At the beginning of this action, we said that if Mr. Harman should be convicted for the publication of these letters it would be no less an invasion of personal rights, no less an outrage, than that inflicted by Judge Benedict upon the founder of this paper—D. M. Bennett. As it has turned out, the invasion and the outrage are as much greater as five years are longer than thirteen months. Mr. Bennett was a perfectly innocent man. So is Mr. Harman. Mr. Bennett did not hav a fair trial; neither did Mr. Harman. The latter's defense was aptly described by Mr. Walker as a "botch." He was not allowed the counsel of his choice—a right which even the determinedly bigoted judge who tried C. B. Reynolds for blasphemy would not deny his prisoner. The counsel whom Mr. Harman was almost compelled to accept knew nothing of the case and showed no conception of the magnitude of the issue involved. He defended Mr. Harman as a police court lawyer would defend a sneak thief who was caught in the act and who hoped to escape punishment by claiming to hav been drunk when arrested. The best of all defenses—that the matter complained of was not indictable under the statute—was thrown away, and Mr. Harman was virtually forced to plead guilty, his lawyer denouncing the article and claiming Mr. Harman to be insane. Yet even after this fatal admission, three of the jurors—so they now affirm—agreed to a conviction only on condition that all the twelve jurors should sign a request to the judge to inflict the lowest penalty named in the law! Where is this request? Why was it not given to the judge? Or, if it was, what shall be thought of a judicial officer who would disregard such an appeal and substitute five years' imprisonment and three hundred dollars' fine for the comparativly small pecuniary penalty to which he could hav confined the sentence? On the face of the matter the conclusion is irresistible that the bench was vindictiv and misused its power.

Yet, if such be the case, we think the judge has defeated himself. The sentence is so excessiv, so out of proportion to the crime, if it be admitted to be a crime at all, that the pardoning power, rigorously Calvinistic though it be, can hardly refuse to act in the matter. If the sentence had been but a few months, probably little hope in that direction could be entertained. But that any president with human feelings in his heart will allow a man of Mr. Harman's character to suffer five years' imprisonment for so trivial an offense, is incredible. For the honor of our government, if for no other cause, the penalty should be remitted.

A Prospect.

The Catholic Review does not mince matters in the following paragraph:

"The author of the letters in the Sun signed 'Rabbinicus' is very much troubled, or perhaps delighted, over the discovery that the Catholic church will never be able to make the imperium in imperio a success. 'Rabbinicus' does not look at the matter from the proper point of view, which is the Catholic view. There must always remain a distinction between the spiritual and the physical orders, and in practical life the spiritual must always take first place. The Romans had to suffer from the imperium in imperio, and it destroyed them because they opposed it. In the same way, it will destroy every force which opposes it, which is the same as saying that Christianity is the only indestructible religious principle in the world. Governments must agree with, not attack Christianity, if they wish to liv and progress. 'Rabbinicus' would not hav so much to criticise in Christianity, but for his uneasiness that the Christian principle is destined to possess the world in the future even more thoroughly than the past."

That is to say, Christianity owns the world; Roman Catholicism is Christianity, therefore Roman Catholicism owns the world. Again, the spiritual is above the material, and must rule it. The spiritual is the Roman Catholic church, the material is the government; ergo, the Roman Catholic church must rule the government. Thirdly, the Republic is the imperio, the imperium is the Roman Catholic church; the imperium destroys all who oppose it. And it follows, plainly, that unless the imperium in imperio is allowed to be a "success," the Republic is to be destroyed.

Now, read this from Senator Blair to the Mail and Express—his regular weekly Washington letter:

"I do not believe that it is possible that the American nation will develop in the direction of toleration of all religions—that is, so-called religions. Whether the general public conviction shall be right or wrong, I yet believe that instead of selecting and finally tolerating all so-called religions, the American people will, by constant and irresistible pressure, gradually expel from our geographical boundaries every religion except the Christian in its varied forms. I do not expect to see the pagan and other forms existing side by side with the former, both peaceably acquiesced in for any considerable length of time. I do not think that experience will satisfy the American people that the inculcation of any positiv religious belief hostil to the Christian faith or the practice of the forms of any other worship is conduciv to the good order of society and the general welfare. There may not be an exhibition of bigotry in this. I believe that religious toleration will yet come to be considered to be an intelligent discrimination between the true and the false, and the selection of the former by such universal consent as shall exclude by general reprobation the recognition and practice of the latter.

"No religion which interposes any agency between man and God is Christianity. No other religion than Christianity—and Christianity as I hav thus defined it—is consistent with the existence of human liberty and republican institutions. This country will not long exist as a free country if any other religious teaching comes generally to prevail. No one human being is the superior of any other human being in kind, however much we may differ in the extent of our several endowments, and no religion which finds space for an authority between the creature and the creator can prevail without destroying the republic. Now, religious belief is a matter of education, and hence no free people will, or at least can, safely permit a system or a practice of education which sets up any human master of the human soul—save only the supremacy of each soul over itself.

"This does not imply that the people will undertake to teach affirmativly the dogmas of religion in the sectarian sense, or perhaps, even, in the most general and fundamental sense. But it does imply that the people of the republic will see to it that certain things are not taught to the American child. The people will not rest until they hav subverted all schools and teachers who create in the soul of the child a belief in a power greater than the right of private judgment and less than the authority of God—an allegiance to any spiritual power except the highest, or any prince, potentate, or power, save only the eternal king, which can inflict pains and penalties of a spiritual nature, or in any other life than this on earth.

"The people will not rest in their study of the subject, nor in the regulation of the educational forces of the land, until they hav compelled all citizens to be the masters of the English tongue—until they hav secured the eradication of all religious teaching which enslaves the soul of the child to any other master than its supreme father, or which clothes a mere man with powers which partake of the prerogativs of God."

That is to say, all religions but Christianity are to be suppressed; Protestantism alone is Christianity, therefore nothing but Protestantism shall exist in the country. Secondly, religion being a matter of education, the schools must teach religion. Protestantism is religion; therefore the schools must teach Protestantism. And once again, as Christianity is nothing without people to believe it, as Protestantism is the only real Christianity, as all religions but Christianity are to be suppressed, it follows that all who do not join the Protestant church are to be in some way gotten rid of!

The prospect, however it is viewed, looks dismal for everybody. 1st, The Roman Catholic church will rule or ruin. This means destruction to Protestants and Agnostics and pagans alike. 2d, The Protestant church will rule, which means suppression of everything else. This also is rough on the Agnostics and pagans and Catholics. And here comes in the question, what will Senator Blair do with all the folks who don't join his church? And how will the Catholic Review's imperium destroy the fellows who don't help make it a "success?" Are we to hav, on the one hand banishment, as Senator Blair's Puritan ancestors practiced it on the Quakers and Baptists, or hanging as they practiced it on witches; and on the other burial alive, beheading, tortures, dungeons, as the Catholics practiced them on the Protestants; or shall we hav the stake, the gibbet, the persecution and killing by soldiery, as both sects practiced them on each other, as opportunity offered and power permitted? We really wish the Review and Senator Blair would be more explicit in explaining their programs.

One thing, however, is learned with certainty from these representativ utterances—and that is, that the persecuting spirit of Christianity is not dead; and that had it the power each great division of the Christian church would be cutting the other's throat; and that with either in plenary power, the country would be one vast cemetery, for there is only one way to destroy or suppress heresy, and that is, the death of the heretic.

Letters from Friends.

BARTLETT, DAK., April 25, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me the book of pictures.

Very truly yours, E. SMITH.

FORNEY, TEX., April 21, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2 for the book of pictures when ready. Respectfully, WM. BONDIES.

ELMO, MO., April 19. 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, for which please send me the picture book as soon as convenient. W. S. LAMME.

FORT WORTH, TEX., April 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is $2, for which please send me a copy of the pictorial arguments against the church.

Respectfully, J. M. BROWN.

NEVELON, MONT., April 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am greatly in favor of the illustrations. I consider the paper the best of any I take or see. Long may you and the cause prosper in the bright, sunny way.

F. H. LOVERING.

HOUGHTON CO., MICH., April 26, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 25 for the picture book and Ayer's "Secular Funeral and Marriage Handbook." I hav had the grip for eight weeks, and want funeral ceremonies clear of orthodoxy. Good luck to Heston.

Yours, H. S. BEESLEY.

DETROIT, MICH., April 21, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find $2 for one copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER pictures when issued. I think you hav struck the right nail on the head, for, as I send all my papers away, it is what I hav long wished for. DAVID FLEMING.

FREEDOM, April 12, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me two ANNUALS for 1890 and one for 1889. We hav just been having a series of night sweats in our little village, of the Methodist persuasion, with the usual results, which I hav written up and had published in the Earlville Leader of an adjoining town.

D. M. STEVENS.

WESTFIELD, N. J., April 11, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I send a new subscriber. This man was born and raised a Catholic, but has subscribed and paid for THE TRUTH SEEKER to-day. I know that "many a mickle makes a muckle," and so shall try to send you a few more names before long. Yours very truly, M. L. NICHOLS.

SUNSET, TEX., April 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I will inclose in this twenty-five cents for the ANNUAL and my vote for the pictures in my Bible. Before the year is out I will send a little to help to keep them up. And if the picture book is published and I liv I must hav one. I remain, Yours truly, HARRIET DAVIS.

CENTRALIA, ILL., April 13, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hope to be able to send you names of new subscribers soon. We hav four churches here who hav imported one or more evangelists each. Now we hav had a revival running for one or two weeks each. They hav reaped a large harvest of converts, a very large per cent of whom are children. F. D. REXFORD.

MOLINE, ILL., April 11, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: As I consider you are working for the benefit of all the human race, trying to giv new light to the blind dupes of the thousands of that class that should serve a life sentence in the prisons of our country for obtaining money under false pretense from their ignorant, unthinking victims, I feel thankful that you liv. Y. E. MCCLENDON.

WHATCOM, WASH., April 17, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 for the book of cartoons when published. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a kind of kindergarten, as the illustrations make impressions that, coming only from type, would be overlooked by the ordinary psalm-singer, and consequently causes discussions that would not otherwise occur. J. Y. COLLINS.

SLOMAN, WASH., April 12, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Send me your paper and Ingersoll's address, "Crimes Against Criminals." I hav only seen your paper for four weeks, but esteem it very much. I was induced to take it by one Frank Lillie. I can learn more from one paper than I could from the old riddle-book all my life. I think it a grand, good paper. GEORGE STEEVES.

NEW YORK, April 26, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 19th, Kellar the magician has got on the right track for the elucidation of Bible mysteries. The south represents the winter solstice, or Capricorn (the zodiacal sign), the goat, death, gloom, hades. As the ancients always depicted the gods as men, so the sun in this sign was represented by a satyr—horns, hoof, and tail. This is the popular devil or Satan.

J. F. TONKS.

HARMONY, IND., April 3, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing the team you hav hitched to your wagon, I thought I would try and take a ride, inasmuch as this theological wagon is not safe. Some of these theologians ask me if I do not believe I hav a soul. I tell them I do not know what they mean by a soul. I tell them if I had one and it was as much trouble to me as theirs seems to be, I would try and trade it for a good, sound body, if I could get an even trade, or I would not mind giving some boot. The soul grows with the body, I think. If ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise.

If you answer questions, I would like to know if the Bible is any more of an inspiration than Josephus, and how many votes Josephus lacked of throwing the Bible over the fence and being itself elected as the standard to regulate our consciences. Fearing I might be tiresome, will quit. More anon. Yours in the cause, JESSE MAURER.

WATERLOO, KAN., Apr. 28, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: If Liberalism can do something for the farmers and laborers, let it do so. And I believe it can, and will. We can no longer depend upon the selfish, bigoted Christians or their merciful God to do it for us. Self-reliance is what we want, and honest Liberals at the head of the government. Equal rights and impartial liberty is what I want. I remain,

Yours for truth, light, and liberty, JOHN T. POWELL.

COSUMNES, CAL., April 17, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to express my pleasure over the announcement that the pictures are to be published in book form. It occurs to me that it would add strength and force of argument to the cartoon book to hav a full-page picture of each one of the instruments and modes of torture inflicted by the church, as is represented on a small scale in your ANNUAL. This ought to be done, even if some of the others had to be dispensed with. Please find inclosed $5 for inclosed list of books and tracts.

W. R. GRIMSHAW.

EXCELSIOR, IA., Apr. 19, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me the ANNUAL for 1890. I will say that I am expecting to get three or four new subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER shortly. I can hardly get time to read it till they want it from me. We are all coal miners, and I take my paper to the mine, so that the boys may see it. It is a wonder I am not scared to take it down the mine, when I know God is likely to get so angry as of yore.

We hav been talking about trying to get Mr. Jamieson, of Des Moines, to come here. We think he would create a stir in the orthodox camp, as this is a very pious place.

D. ORGAN.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., March 8, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: John E. Remsburg recently delivered his lecture, "False Claims," in this place. The Lord gave us some pretty foul weather, but the horrid Infidels turned out just the same. If it had been a pleasant night, the hall would hav been entirely too small, but as it was, the house was well filled and I do not believe there were over a dozen Christians in it. A few men whose mental calibers were not up to the occasion left the hall in disgust. After the lecture a large number of Freethinkers remained and a temporary organization was perfected, with a membership of sixty. The San Antonio Freethinkers are just beginning to rouse and rub their eyes after a long, long sleep. Everybody was well pleased. OTTO PRAEGER.

PORTVILLE, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Well, now, about this school question, and about reading the Bible in schools, why not let the Catholic books be read in Protestant schools and Protestant Bibles in Catholic schools, so as to let them see what they are quarreling about? It is nice stuff to quarrel about, anyway. Why not let the big scholars, young ladies and gentlemen, read in school parts of the Song of Solomon and the place describing where David danced before the ark of the Lord? I think that that would disgust them so much that it would do away with such things as quick as anything.

Yours for truth, JOHN R. COATS.

CONCORD, N. C., March 14, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: A tramp preacher by the name of Bill Fife, called the Drummer Preacher, struck this town March 3d, and carried on a gospel racket for seven days. Business men closed their stores to go to hear him. He had a crowded house day and night—crowded by persons eager to hear their neighbors lampooned à la Sam Jones. The result was, Bill Fife carried off $280 of the people's money. This is not the worst. One lady, Mrs. F. A. Archibald, who was made sad several months since by the death of her two children, has lost her reason and will be sent to the asylum. How sad, how sad to the family and friends of this estimable mother and wife, to see her reason dethroned by a gospel tramp! Will he, can he, restore her reason, and her happy smiles to her family? No, never. J. W. MEHAFFEY.

LOWELL, MASS., April 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: About two years ago I wrote you a letter which received some criticism because I believed in restricting freedom. If that critic happens to see this he will see that I hav got my eyes open a little wider, for I am now as free from political as from religious superstitions. I do not believe any man should hav or enjoy what is not his own, except by inheritance or gift, and believe that rent and interest do giv men that privilege. I do not believe ten million men hav any more right than one man to dictate to me what I shall do. I do not believe that a government by force can be reconciled either with Freethinking or with Christianity. I believe, moreover, that the freest thinkers are the best Christians. I believe also that speculation in land is as wicked as speculation in air would be if that were possible. Each one is entitled to all he can use and no more. I believe that forcible taxation is robbery, and that voluntary contributions would be freely given for public objects if taxation was not imposed upon people by force. I do not believe in free love as commonly understood, but as understood by modern Anarchists I believe in absolute individual freedom in every respect. I believe every law ever enacted is a bar to progress, and that public sentiment and Freethought will do more for the world than all the courts of justice in the universe. G. A. CHAPIN.

FORD CITY, KAN, April 20, 290.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5 25 for one new subscriber and myself, with the ANNUAL. Continue the pictures. They astonish the nativs like a clap of thunder from a clear sky. I think the picture book will be a splendid thing. I believe a panorama of those pictures would be of immense value to assist lecturers. It seems to me that I could take a panorama of them and do some good. At least, I should be willing to try one provided they could be got up at not too great an expense. I would like to comment on some or all of those pictures before an audience. I do believe with a panorama ten to one could be converted to our side, the side of truth. I do not know or think of anything that would lead them out of the ditch of ignorance and superstition as quick as that. And a little good music with it would carry them to a grander and higher temper of civilization. What would be the probable cost of a panorama of that kind? It would only be necessary to hav a few of the leading characters. I would like to hav an expression from the other readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER as well as yourself.

H. B. VON VOORHEES.

WESTERN BRANCH NATIONAL HOME,
LEAVENWORTH. KAN. April 2, 1890

MR. EDITOR used to see THE TRUTH SEEKER on file in our library, but it has disappeared in the las three month I believe I am the only regular subscriber of the twenty-two hundred members. We are quartered in thirteen companies quarters, or barracks, and only in our company, Company G, the following order was put on the bulletin board:

COMPANY G, WESTERN BRANCH, Jan. 30, 1890.

Reading aloud in the barracks is strictly prohibited, also religious and Atheistic discussions. By order of the governor, HENRY MUSSLER SERGANT.

I would politely ask you, who is ruling this institution? Is it the pope in Rome, or the czar of Russia, or a Bismarck? I am not able to see where it came from. I wonder if a prisoner in Siberia is allowed to read aloud and speak about religious matters or not.

My income is $2 per month. I am unable to work. I am sixty-nine years old. But I am bound to spend another twenty-five cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL of 1890.

P. MINKWITZ.

NEW CASTLE, PA., April 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The following is an editorial observation appearing in the Youngstown, O, Vindicator:

There is a foolish story going the rounds in certain quarters of the town that, while several inches of snow fell last Friday night, not one flake lay upon the neglected grave of Sterling, the murderer, who was hanged in the jail a few years ago. Probably the story is not true, or if true, the exposed place of the lonely grave in the Potter's field sufficiently accounts for it. But there are people credulous enough to believe that kindly nature declines "to hide that guilty front with innocent snow," thus making supernatural what is merely unusual, and thereby pressing closer to themselvs the everlasting cloud of mystery which at best lies close enough about us all.

The truth of the matter is that the body of Sterling found its way to the dissecting-room of a Cleveland, O., medical college within seventy two hours after the burial.

I will add a comic verse:

A mischievous urchin, named Whittleton White,
Tied a shoemaker's tool to the tail of his kite;
The cobbler looked up, with countenance wan,
And sang, "Jesus! my awl to heaven has gone."

J. EDD LESLIE.

ROCKY RIVER, O., April 25, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed non-political paper slip, with yours in a late TRUTH SEEKER on the Persecution of Mormons subject, make two only to the thousands of newspapers in approval. Oh, Christian virtue as practiced by the clergy!

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the paper of papers for truth and fair play. Long may its Editor liv. S. GLEASON.

No more extraordinary and far-reaching opinion was ever handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States than the one on the Idaho test oath case. Idaho has a law which aims to deny to Mormons the right to vote. The citizen who cannot subscribe to an oath that he does not belong to the Mormon church is barred from the suffrage. This law the Supreme Court of the United States holds to be good. Under it one who believes in the Book of Mormon, whether he be a single man or a man with one wife only, is disfranchised along with the Mormon who has violated civil and moral laws by acts of bigamy or polygamy. This is punishing men for opinion instead of for acts, and that is why it is extraordinary. Because there are tens of millions of other people in this country besides Mormons who believe in other alleged sacred books which teach the propriety of bigamy and polygamy, it follows that this ruling of the Supreme Court if carried to its logical extreme would apply to all such as well as to Mormons. For this reason the decision may justly be said to be one that is far-reaching. It has always been held that government does enough when it punishes acts. Now, the courts can claim the right to say what a man thinks, to say that what he thinks is criminal, and having done so punish him for his alleged thought. Without doubt those guilty of bigamy or polygamy are unfit to exercise the right of suffrage whether they are Mormons or not. Upon conviction of such crimes they should be punished. As part of that punishment they could be and should be disfranchised, as is done in the case of convictions of other crimes. But when punished in that way without trial and for no reason except for having opinions, or for being suspected of having opinions, the natural question is, Whither are we drifting? Manifestly to an ultimate status in which it will only be safe to belong to the majority. The world has tried that sort of thing several times and found it very disagreeable as well as unprofitable.

BUNDYSBURG, O., April 14, E.M. 290.

MR. EDITOR: As a subscriber to your sheet, I wish to say that I fully approve of the pictures. Why not? Do Christians respect our rights guaranteed by the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States? No, sir, they do not. Shall we respect their rights? Yes, sir, but not those fool, lying principles contained in their calendar, the Bible. Thos. Paine said, "Some people can be reasoned into sense; others hav to be shocked into it." There has been a discussion pending for some time here, between one O. H. Pennell and myself. First he wanted to hav it on the Bible and two on a side, each to hav two speeches of twenty-five minutes, and I to close in ten minutes. This I would not agree to, and then he desired to affirm that "Christianity has been the greatest civilizer known." This I agreed too, and he has backed down on that. He told me he would show "Ingersoll was gradually yielding in his views" by a paper that John Lewis, of Girard, O, takes. I wrote to Mr. Lewis; he says he never made such a statement—never told anyone such a thing.

B. O. FENTON.

LAKE CITY, IA., April 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: For many years I hav taken the noble old TRUTH SEEKER, and hav ever been looking for the article that could do the most good, put into leaflet form, with least expense, and hav made up my mind the article written by War en Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., in a late TRUTH SEEKER, is the article I hav been looking for. The article is written under the title, "Heathen or Christian—Which?" and is a perfect stunner and no mistake. Put into leaflet form so as to fold nicely, with a blank spot on back of leaf for name and compliments of sender, it could be slipped into an unsealed envelope and sent out by the thousands. I know of many now who were playmates of mine nearly sixty years ago, that I hav seen but once in forty years. How I should like to send them an eye-opener. Although too old for much activ work, two or three hundred of such leaflets I could put out—at least from one to two hundred to fine advantage at our home town. There ought to be one million of those leaflets spread broadcast over the world.

Mr. John E. Remsburg has been of great benefit to every truth-loving man in America, in snatching from the robbers' hands one of the brightest jewels that will crown Abraham Lincoln's immortal name in glory to generations yet unborn. Nobly has he performed that great work, and it ought to be put into pamphlet form. Is there a Freethinker in America who wants to die and not hav that pamphlet in his home? I hope not.

Inclosed find a dollar for the pictures. J. L. TOMPKINS.

BRAMBLE, IND., March 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: As I am living in an orthodox Christian community composed of both Catholics and Protestants, and I am opposed to any of their dogmas, and am almost a lone Freethinker in these parts, it naturally follows that I often hear their barbarous doctrins argued. The majority of them are in favor of crime. That is, if one man kills another in cold blood, these saintly Christians are ready, without the least particle of mercy, to destroy his life in just as cold blood as the first killed in. I claim that a man who exterminates his fellow-man for money, without any malice toward his victim, suffers from a disease of the brain, and there is a removable cause of such disease. I believe to take his life by hanging or otherwise does not cure others of the same disease. I believe if it is a crime for the first party to kill, that it is a crime for the second party, or the state, to kill him. One thing I know, that to hang a man for murder does not bring back the life of the murdered, nor does it retard crime. Where do men get authority to commit a deed that they forbid others committing? The law says we shall hang them and it is right to do so, cry these Bible, godlike, saintly, Christian believers. I will say, can a few men meet and make a law to take life and make it right to do so? Can might make right? Is crime a cure for crime? My mind is so I cannot think that it is. These good Christians tell me if a man kills in cold blood, that if he repents even at the gallows he will go to heaven. If he does not repent, he will go to hell. They do not wish him to liv, they wish to hurry him off to one of these places. They also tell me that most of these murderers repent and go to heaven. A pretty place to send a man whom they think sane and not fit to liv with them here. Yet they expect to go to heaven and liv with him there. Can any Christians think it wrong to kill and then think it right to kill, and be right in both hypotheses? Can or do they really believe that God will send them to heaven for taking life? It seems that they do, for I see many of them carrying revolvers and dirk-knives, and there are no wild beasts in this country either. They, the Christians of this community, still hav a great deal of the old barbarism and superstition in them. They think it right to take life, but they seem to want the right to take life themselvs. Anyone else taking life is wrong. I think as long as men make laws to take life, just that long will other men believe in mob violence. They will say, We know of a man who is guilty and we will just stretch him up without any law in it, and avoid expenses. We hav as much right to hang and punish as the law. For myself, I do not believe in taking life at all. I think if one commits murder he should hav a life sentence, or if such persons could be placed on some island they could in time be cured of the disease. Furthermore, I think when laws quit killing people it will hav a a decidedly good effect upon society. It will make better people.

I would like to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but am not able now. I hav bought several copies from you, and like it very much. I read them with great interest. I do not think it could be better. I hav read copies of the Twentieth Century, Freethinkers' Magazine, Secular Thought, and other Liberal papers. I would like to take all of them, but cannot take any of them. I hope I can in the future. I hav emerged from dark superstition by the light of my own brain, with only a week's schooling, therefore I am not educated. If you consider this worthless, send it back, and I will hav it printed in pamphlet form and circulate it over this priest and preacher ridden country.

CHAS. A. GLENN.

MARTINSBURGH, W. VA., Apr. 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In the great controversy between Christianity and unbelief the evidence is gradually but surely accumulating on the side of unbelief. I am by this time convinced that there is no God; that the teaching of Christianity that there is a God, heaven, and hell, is all a humbug. And I wonder and wonder why millions of people who investigate everything else in life so readily and persistently cling to the Bible and the churches. It is positivly amazing to witness their position on this ever greatest subject of life and death. To those millions, intelligent and ignorant, rich and poor, the existence of God and a heaven and hell is a matter of course, a closed question. "As true as gospel," they say in what they assert. And Freethought and unbelief are shocking to their fine Christian sensibilities. In all other subjects and affairs in life the intelligent, shrewd Christians and nominal believers will inquire and investigate in order to be made secure. In all dealings in business, political, and social matters investigation and security is sternly carried out. Things and propositions not clearly manifested to their understanding and approval are rejected. They are doubtful when there is room for doubt, but when they come to the mighty question of life and death, why, of course the Bible is true and there is a living God who created all things and all are subject to him. It is the fool only who says there is no God. This is the claim and position of millions of Christians and nominal believers, sensible enough on other questions than religion. It is astonishing to brave, independent thinkers. Christianity, as the powers that be, happen to hav almost all the wealth, all the power and influence, and almost all the number of people on its side. But just simply because of its vast power and numbers it is not necessarily true. The eternal truth cannot be changed. But this great material and mental force swings the world in all things pertaining to human rights, happiness, and welfare. The only basis for universal freedom is individualism. We must declare ourselvs absolutely free as distinct sovereign individuals to think for ourselvs entirely on all questions, and do all we can for the preservation of liberty. Christianity is no friend of liberty. Its whole teaching is to command and enslave. And the worst of it is that it humbugs millions by its promises of future bliss and threats of an eternal hell.

Life is thrust upon us. We exist a wonder to ourselvs. Whence we came and whither we drift, we know not. There is one common destiny for all. In the very nature of things all cannot believe alike. We believe what we must believe. This is sincerity, as Colonel Ingersoll says. What we are, we are, and cannot be responsible for. We are not free agents, but helpless beings, ever at the mercy of cruel fate.

I cannot see how any sensible, observing, just man or woman can still believe in God, as their experience surely ought to dispel this delusion. Intelligence ought to banish old traditions of the supernatural, and superstition, the curse of the people. As I review the past I feel how badly I hav been humbugged when too young and inexperienced to think and judge for myself all this absurd teaching of God, heaven, and hell. But, thanks to knowledge and experience, I am enjoying sweet mental liberty. This happy result came from no teaching of any man or book, but from my own honest doubts. That unbelief has not millions on its side to-day is wonderful, taking into consideration the impossibility of proving there is a God. This is a beautiful world, and heaven and hell are here. Many hav their heaven here, and many their hell on this earth. Until universal equality, just conditions, and perfection exist there can be no God. We as impartial inquirers giv the claims of Christianity a fair trial. We as lovers of the truth seek for it, whatever it may be.

Not one promis in the Bible is fulfilled or comes to pass. No prayer is ever answered. No elders in the church heal the sick by anointing in the name of the Lord. No sight is given to the blind, no healing to the deaf. No angel appears even to the most pious when dying. No miracles are worked. There is no consolation to the mournful; no God's grace; no knowledge of him whatever. THOMAS J. CONNERS.

IN THE FAR WEST, April 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot comply with your request and furnish names of Liberal-minded people. I circulate fifty-two numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER where they do the most good. The reason I do not giv names is because I do not know what the coming TRUTH SEEKER may contain. Such infamous expressions as were made by one Downes, from Ohio, and Swan, of Chicago, and Winter, of Cincinnati, would simply not do. It will not do in an intelligent community to revile our naturalized citizens as the above-named social pests did a few months ago. We owe more liberty to our foreign-born citizens than we generally giv them credit for. The intelligent Germans hav stayed our fanatical, perjury-breeding Prohibition, which has made countless liars not only among common people but leading statesmen. We hav no Sunday laws in California, and none agitated till the fanatical Yankee made his advent. Wherever we hav plenty of foreigners in large towns, we hav Sunday liberty. The daily Oregonian, a few years ago, urged Oregon to induce Swiss people to settle its foothills in Willamet valley, saying in looking over their success in California that one thousand Swiss would be more useful to Oregon than three thousand Missourians or five thousand from Tennessee and North Carolina. And the same holds good all over the Union. Where no foreigners hav settled, from the Carolinas to New Mexico, we hav no civilization nor intelligence, nor progress, mentally or industrially, but fanaticism and cut-throatism, in place of justice and liberty. We owe liberty and all progress to foreigners, says Senator Morrill in the senate. New York and Chicago hav ninety-one and eighty-seven per cent foreigners and their children. What American is not proud of those gigantic metropolises of commerce? Set that in contrast with decaying Yankeeism in New England.

History tells us that Washington was assisted by officers and men of all nationalities. In the last war we had some two millions of men armed in four years; out of them seven hundred and odd thousands were of foreign birth. Yet the St. Louis Globe-Democrat stated that ninety-five per cent in the Union army were nativs, and that the foreigners amounted to little. Can a person be an American and not be a liar?

Stephen Girard, the great philanthropist, was a Swiss, born and raised in western Switzerland—not a Frenchman, as is erroneously supposed. John A. Roebling, the builder of the Niagara Falls, Alleghany, Covington, and New York and Brooklyn suspension bridges, was a Swiss engineer and architect. L. Agassiz, the founder of fundamental sciences in our country, was also a Swiss, and not a Frenchman. A Swiss senator, three years ago, in urging the adoption of a patent law, stated that through neglect they had driven many of the best mechanics to the United States, and showed to the Swiss senate that her watchworkers alone took out sixty-eight patents on watches in our country up to that time. The founder of the Smithsonian Institute was an Englishman. Henry Shaw, who donated Shaw's park to the city of St. Louis, was an Englishman, while one of our Yankees would hav sold the same for about six million dollars. John Erickson, the inventor of the monitors that saved our country when it tried men's souls, was a Swede; also the inventor of the steam fire-engin, and the most powerful and destructiv torpedo-boat, refusing a great fortune for the patent from foreign nations. The author of the San Francisco Crystal Palace is a German. One of our greatest railroad managers is a German school-boy, Henry Villard. There is but one Delmonico's in the world—in your city, founded by Chas. Delmonico, from Canton Tessina, Switzerland. The artist and donator of the Bartholdi statue is a Frenchman. The manager of the New York World was a Swiss, that brought that journal among the first in the nation in a short time. The architect of the New York city criminal courthouse is a young Swiss, competing among nearly forty, the best architects of the country. Captain Eads, the builder of the steel bridge at St. Louis, and the Eads jetties, had for his chief engineer a German for years. While the former did the political lobbying, the latter carried out the work and showed plans for great works. Theo. Thomas, our greatest concert musician, is a German. For years we tried to plan a railroad up to Pike's peak. Swiss engineers a few years ago were sent for. They made out plans, but our builders would not adopt them. Self-conceit did not permit at first. But after three years the capitalistic projectors ordered their adoption, and look, they are building now on the Pike's peak railroad. And next summer we shall ride up to said peak on the cars, built after the Swiss mountain system, and there I invite the leading Freethinkers of our country to celebrate the Fourth of July at nearly sixteen hundred feet hight. Some time ago the American Inland Lake and River Engineers sent a petition to Congress complaining that nearly all such engineers are foreigners, and calling the attention of Congress to what might arise in case of war. Did you hear anything more silly? Since we hav more foreign engineers, we can travel with more safety. We do not hav so many blow-ups on lakes and rivers as we had twenty years ago. I remember the horror of Westfield in your harbor—came near being blown to sheol myself. In all our wars foreign officers hav been numerous in our defense.

The foreigners do not furnish food to Jesse James's, Rube Burrows's, and Redmond's bands, who killed men by the hundreds. They do not join Moonshiners, Ku-Klux-Klan, Bald Knobbers, White Caps, Knights of the Switch, regulators, and similar shotgun midnight assassins; nor join that Yankee abomination, Prohibition spies, that cause so many murders; nor join in the Kentucky feuds that bred murders for fifty years. Twenty-one years ago the secretary in Texas reported 367 murderers being pardoned from the penitentiary and nearly one thousand not being tried yet at large, and there were no foreigners among them. So this silly Yankee from Ohio wants all foreigners debarred from justice, and Winter, of Cincinnati, toots his horn and blows, "Me too," because the Clan-na Gael killed one of their members. Did Mr. Downes raise his voice when our nativ Freemasons killed the Chisholm family in Mississippi fourteen years ago, and when numerous other murders were committed, always on innocent victims? or when the lower-class Freemasons and Odd Fellows hire Texas voters from place to place, as is done in eastern Colorado? And does he exclaim when the mail is interfered with under Holy John? We are ashamed of American justice, that we hav not a jury system like that of other civilized nations. The infamous history of Chicago does not exhibit enlightened justice. The Anarchists were hanged for what was not proved (I despise Anarchism). As the great Barnum said, "No people love to be humbugged like the American people." There is also an old saying that "there is no fool like an American," but I do not know the author of the latter. MUGWUMP.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Mamma's Valentine.

"I wish I had some money,
Most a bushel I'd want, I fink,
Enough to buy a valentine
All bootiful and pink.

"I'd send it to my mamma,
Way in the mountains there,
For I know her's awful lonesome
Without me and little Sair."

Said Sair: "Let's write one, Bobby,
I think they're most as nice;
Then as they don't cost anything
We won't hav to stop for price.

"Now here's some nice pink paper,
And here is pen and ink;
Now you tell me what to say
And I'll write it quick as wink."

"We'll say: Dear mamma, I love you,
And love you awfully well,
And so does little Sair—
More than we can tell.

"So we send you lots of kisses"
(Little O's between the lines)
"As a token of the love
Of your little valentines."

Then they mailed it to "My mamma"
And it started on its way;
But whether it reached her safely
I am sure I cannot say. L. L.

About Boys.

[Respectfully dedicated to Mary Foster.]

As boys are becoming so important, I would like to say a few words on the subject.

Miss Mary F. said something about the evolution of boys. Perhaps they did originally come from the lower animals, and probably girls came from the same source, only boys hav more fully developed "polls."

James made a good point when he mentioned Manchester, for man has chased her, by his superior headwork, nearly to Hel ena, and the only way she can reach his level is by copying after him. Girls are now learning to row, fish, and swim, and some of the older ones are trying to vote, and others are adopting our style of clothing.

The capital of the United States is named after "The Father of his Country," and where can you find a mother of her country?

I suppose Miss Mary never heard of Charles Town or Phil Adelphia—never read of Alex Andria, James Town, Will Mington, Frank Fort, or Frederick Sburg.

And, besides these, we hav Louis Ton, William Son, Georg Ia, Edward Sville, Jack Sonville, and Frank Lin.

Among the rivers we are represented by the grand old St. Lawrence.

It is not necessary to go to the Isle of Man for boys, for this country is overflowing with them, and perhaps that is the reason why the United States ranks at the head of all civilized nations.

The people of this country seem to hav used good judgment in naming places. In addition to those named above, we hav Napoleon Ville, William Sburg, Dick Inston, King Ston, Mans-field, and Trini-dad.

We do not object to improvement in girls, but think there is great chance for it. If they would stop tight lacing, powdering and painting their faces, wearing shoes two sizes too small, and adopt our simple, healthy, and common-sense styles, I think it would be an improvement.

Girls are good for playing with dolls and such things, and it would not be unnatural for them to take to rocking babies, but "the hand that rocks the cradle [with a boy in it] moves the world."

We boys don't want the earth, but I would advise Mary to emigrate to the isle of Sici-ly, for it is plain that this country is no place for girls. WALTER W. CLARK.

Progressiv Theology.

A certain evangelist in Western Virginia organized a Sunday-school, and by dint of diplomacy obtained a goodly following of youngsters, into whose uncombed heads and pliant hearts he instilled the rudiments of religion. Neither did he spare the correctiv rod in case his charge failed to come to taw with the catechism.

One Sunday a new arrival was discovered over in the boys' corner. He was called down before the teacher and cross-examined with a view to learning his religious acquirements.

"How many gods are there?" asked the teacher.

The boy thought a moment, and ventured the assertion that there were two.

"Wrong!" said the teacher.

"Three!"

"Oh! you must know better than that! Try again. How many gods are there?"

"Four!" whimpered the boy.

"Wrong again!" shouted the instructor. "I will giv you one more chance. If you don't answer right this time I will tan you. Now, for the last time, how many gods are there?"

"Five!" wailed the unhappy towhead.

Smack! The teacher gave him a thorough dressing down and sent him from the room in disgrace. A belated scholar found him sitting by the roadside howling at the top of his voice.

"What's the matter, Jack?"

"Teacher licked me."

"What for?"

"'Cause I didn't know how many gods there were."

"Huh! that's easy enough."

"D' you know?"

"Course."

"How many are there?"

"One, you stupid."

"One, eh. Well, just you go in there with your little one god and you'll catch it. I 'lowed there was five, and he nigh killed me."

Subjugated.

The word subjugated is of Latin origin, sub jugum, under the yoke. Although oftenest used in a figurativ sense, it might hav been applied in all literalness to a certain Maine boy, whose singular experiment with a calf, as described by the Lewiston Journal, may recall to our readers the recently published story of "Bub and Broad."

This farmer lad had always taken a special interest in oxen and delighted to brandish the goad stick over his father's good-natured pair. His great ambition was to own for himself a pair of steers.

Last summer he became the proud possessor of half a pair; in other words, his father gave him a young calf. Of course the steer could not be yoked up by itself. What did the youthful Cincinnatus do, therefore, but place one end of the yoke round his own neck and fasten it there?

The result may be imagined. The other half of the team started, and pretty soon a passing neighbor heard a shrill outcry:

"Stop us, Mr. Smith, stop us! We're running away!"

The neighbor came to the rescue, and was attempting to unyoke the boy, when he called out:

"T'other one, Mr. Smith, t'other one! I'll stand!"—Ex.

No Error.

Young Mr. Hale is one of the people who think it must be the easiest thing in the world to write a book, or at least a poem.

"You hav your desk, your paper and pens," said he, hopefully, in discussing the subject of literature with a more experienced friend, "and there you are!"

"Yes," said the friend, dryly, "but you've omitted one implement of the trade which ought to be in the hands of beginners—an eraser, to rub out what they hav written. Now take this petition you hav just drawn up for the Widows' Mite Society. Look over the paper with me. You havn't explained your object with clearness, and you've repeated the word 'charity' nine times in thirteen lines."

For a moment the ambitious young man looked disturbed; then suddenly his composure returned.

"Oh, well," said he, "I don't consider that repetition a mistake. You can't hav too much charity!"

Correspondence.

STONY FORD, N. Y., April 6, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My uncle Willie takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I see so many letters in the Children's Corner, so I thought I would write one, too. I am eleven years old. I go to school. I study arithmetic, geography, reading, and spelling. I hav three bantams. I call them Billy, Grover, and Annie. They are too cute for anything. I think I hav written enough for this time. I remain,

Your little friend, SUSIE YOUNG.

[Write again, Susie.—ED. C. C.]

McLOUTH, KAN., April 1, 1890.

MISS S. H. WIXON: I thought I would write a few lines to the Corner. My father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like to read the Children's Corner and look at the pictures. And when you read this I hope you will think another Freethinker is growing up. My father has sixteen lambs and I like to take care of them. As this is my first letter, I expect I will make a good many mistakes. My sister has the "Story Hour," and I like it very much. I will close, for the first time.

Yours respectfully,
LEONIDAS J. WILLITS.

[We are proud of our little band of Freethinkers. They are better than gold.—ED. C. C.]

May 1, 1890.

MISS WIXON: I like the Children's Corner and never fail to read it. As so many girls and boys write to the Corner I thought I would try. I hav not been to school this winter. I am going this summer. I am in the Fifth Reader, and study arithmetic, geography, and spelling. I hav six sisters and three brothers. I am nine years old; my birthday is June 3d. My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER a long while. As this is my first letter, please do not throw it into the wastebasket. Your little friend,

GOLDIE MAY DUTTON.

[Welcome to the Corner, Goldie.—ED. C. C.]

[Rose, take notice.—ED. C. C.]

INWOOD-ON-HUDSON, N. Y., April 28, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Two weeks ago M. Rose Foster wrote to the Corner and asked some girl to write to her. I did so, but as I hav received no reply, judge that she did not receive my note. If this is the case, or if not, will she please either write to the Corner and tell me, or write to me.

We hav always taken THE TRUTH SEEKER, and like it very much. I am a Liberal, as are all our family. I will not write any more this time for fear it will be too long to print, but if you would like I will write again and tell you about the place in which I liv.

Your friend, JOSEPHINE BRIDGE.

[Yes. Write again.—ED. C. C.]

A PLEASANT LETTER.

FOREST HOME, April 21, 1890

MISS WIXON, Dear Friend: I received your letter and the order three days ago, and you cannot think or realize how happy I am over the money. It is the first I ever earned that way. I got my order readily cashed in Sacramento for its face value. And do you know, I was not expecting any money for my composition. We only thought maybe you might publish a part of it for the amusement of our little band of Freethought readers. And so now you may know that I will remember you and the grand old TRUTH SEEKER always. And now, dear friends of the Children's Corner, let us all do what we can for the noble cause of freedom. If our letters never get into the paper, still they may do much good. They will giv our patient editor courage. She will know that there are others trying to hasten the "glad morn whose early twilight Hypatia saw in times of old." You will see by my address that we are not at Elk Grove now. I think I hav left many friends there, but none I love better than Miss Gay, my school-teacher. She was not afraid to let us read our compositions. There are four sisters and two brothers of us—

James M. and Jacob T.,
Happy Lou and Mary V.,
Jennie Joy and Fairy Lee,
And papa and mamma,
As you may see.

MARY V. FOSTER.

FOR SWEET CHARITY.

GRANTFORK, ILL., April 10, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I wish to write a few lines to let the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Children's Corner know that there are two old, sick, helpless Freethinkers who are badly in need of help. One is Mr. R. M. Casey, at Five Forks, S. C., and the other is Prof. J. H. Cook, Columbus, Kan., who is in very destitute circumstances. If the boys and girls could see their letters they would respond immediately. Mr. Casey was suddenly and very violently seized with La Grippe, and in four days it turned to broncho-pneumonia. He had the best medical treatment, but his life was despaired of anyhow, and he was five days in a state of unconsciousness. Professor Cook is without friends and without money, and he is very sick and has nothing to liv on, and they both hav worked hard for Freethought. Mr. Cook has risked his life and health and money in going about lecturing, and it is the Freethinker's duty to help them along in their old age. Please print this song at the same time you print this letter. I think it is a song that ought to be sung in every home, and let them especially remember the chorus. Let the readers of the Corner send in their dimes to Miss Wixon, and she can publish them, providing Miss Wixon has time and is willing to take up the work.

Please let us know whether you will take it up or not. Yours for humanity,

NICHOLAS J. KRAFT.

[It is very hard when one has spent time and money in a good cause to be left poor and desolate in old age. The two cases referred to above should receive immediate attention from the friends who in former times hav received benefit from them, and from all who are benevolently inclined. A few dimes from children who do not hav much money, not being old enough to earn it, would not amount to much. Our children of the Corner, under the leadership of Sadie Thorpe, not long ago purchased a cow for Mr. Casey. Perhaps Sadie would lend her aid again in the matter broached above, as the time of the editor is wholly taken in other ways, and she could not attend to it. We think, however, while we know our children of the Corner are charitably inclined, that Mr. Casey's and Mr. Cook's condition should be investigated and looked after by older persons, who hav more means at their command than little children. We trust this will be done immediately. None in our ranks, or in any rank, should be allowed to suffer for the necessaries of life when old and feeble, or unable to work.—ED. C. C.]

OLD AND ONLY IN THE WAY.

[Words by P. J. Downey. Music by L. T. Billings.]

As we walk through the street,
How often we meet some poor old man,
Whose life is naught but woe!
With age his form is bent, in his pocket not a cent,
And for shelter he knows not where to go.
Their relations by the score
Keep all such men from the door,
And meeting on the street pass them by;
If you ask them why it's done,
They will answer you and say,
"We're poor; we're old, and only in the way."

CHORUS:

So let us cheer them on,
They won't be with us long;
Don't let us sneer because they're old and gray;
And remember while we're young,
The day to us may come
When we'll be old, and only in the way.

There was a time when the young were not so queer,
But since that time there's come an awful change;
Young men in health and might
Their old parents e'en will strike,
And it happens every day—it's nothing strange;
Take this poor wreck of time, his children him do spurn,
For death I'm sure he oftentimes does pray;
Himself and faithful wife, after toiling all their life—
When old they find that they are in the way.

CHORUS.

My little song I'm sure is for the rich as well as poor,
For take a rich man when he's growing old,
His friends will shake his hand,
His relatives round stand
Awaiting him to die: they want his gold.
Then let us from this hour do all that's in our power
To make the road of old folks light and gay,
And if they trouble on us cast, why, let us be the last
To say, they're old and only in the way.

CHORUS.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.

THE
Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, . . . $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

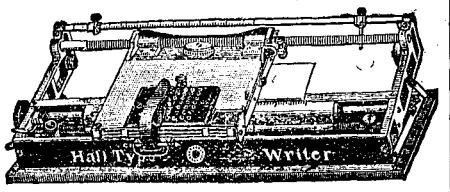
HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3,
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.



Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

tf

New Model Hall Typewriter

The Best Standard Typewriter in the World. Cheap, Portable, No Ink Ribbon, Interchangeable Type in all Languages, Easiest to learn and rapid as any. Agents wanted everywhere. WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED. Address

National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. P. O. box 5159.
Send for catalog and specimens of work.
18.10

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND, LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking usefnl precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT

IS IT

DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?

A SYMPOSIUM

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAMS,
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,	THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:

Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?

PRICE 25 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M BENNETT.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

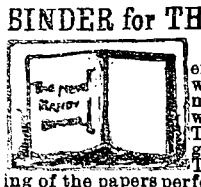
This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.



It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Charles Watts's Works.

The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of Mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.

A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.

Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.

The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.

Saints and Sinners—Which? 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Nature and the Supernatural; or, Belief and Knowledge. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3 Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.

NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.

Christianity: Defective and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,

OR, THE

Conflict between Reason and Superstition.

BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Price, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Candle from Under the Bushel

(Mark iv, 21); or,

1,306 Questions to the Clergy:

And for the Consideration of Others.

Instructive, Interesting, and Laughable.

BY WILLIAM HART.

Price, - - - 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

AN ADDRESS

By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE

New York State Bar Association, at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1890.

The only Complete and Authorized Edition.
PRICE, TEN CENTS.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Every Liberal Should Read

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.

INTRODUCTION.

Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution; Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.

Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

IRON-CLAD AND MANNA SERIES

IRON-CLAD SERIES.

1	Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
2	Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake.	5
4	Influence of Christianity on Civilization. Underwood.	25
7	Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Mueller.	10
8	Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison.	15
9	Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall.	10
10	Epidemic Delusions. Marvin.	10
11	Philosophy of Spiritualism. Marvin.	50
12	Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural, and Portrait.	25
13	Essay on Miracles. David Hume.	10
14	Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
15	Were Adam and Eve our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh.	5
16	Why do Men Starve? Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
17	Logic of Life Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. George J. Holyoake.	10
18	A Plea for Atheism. Chas. Bradlaugh.	10
19	Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake.	5
20	Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake.	5
21	Defence of Secular Principles. C. Watts.	5
22	Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts.	5
23	The Christian Deity. Charles Watts.	5
24	Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts.	5
25	Freethought and Mod. Progress. Watts.	5
26	Christianity: Its Nature, and Influence on Civilization. Chas. Watts.	5
28	Thoughts on Atheism. Austin Holyoake.	5
29	Is there a Moral Governor of the Universe? Austin Holyoake.	5
30	Philosophy of Secularism. Chas. Watts.	5
31	Has Man a Soul? Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
38	Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh.	5
39	Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
40	Poverty: Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H.	10
42	Science and Bible Antagonistic. Watts.	5
43	Christian Scheme of Redemption. Watts.	5
44	Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake.	10
47	Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Chas. Bradlaugh.	5

MANNA SERIES.

1	Original Manna for "God's chosen."	5
3	New Life of David. Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
4	Why I was Excommunicated. Barnard.	20
5	200 Questions Without Answers.	5
6	Dialogue between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin.	10
7	Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian.	10
8	Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake.	5
9	New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
10	A Few Words about the Devil.	5
11	New Life of Jacob.	5
12	Daniel, the Dreamer. Austin Holyoake.	10
13	Specimen of the Bible: Esther. Holyoake	10
14	Acts of the Apostles: A Farce. A. H.	10
15	Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. H.	10
16	Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
17	Who Was Jesus Christ? C. Bradlaugh.	5
18	What Did Jesus Teach? C. Bradlaugh.	5
19	New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh.	5
20	New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh.	5
21	A Secular Prayer. Holyoake. Per doz.	10

On orders for Iron Clad and Manna we will send $1.10 worth for $1; $2.50 worth for $2; $5 worth for $3, and $10 worth for $5.

New Publications.

Unless otherwise specified, all publications noticed here can be had of THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, at the prices named.

CÆSAR'S COLUMN. A Story of the Twentieth Century. By Edward Boisgilbert, M.D. Chicago: T. J Schulte & Co. Cloth, pp. 367. Price, $1.25.

This volume we will giv a first classing with works on the labor question; and in further specification we will state that it is a work of fiction, and that the action is supposed to take place, like that of "Looking Backward," in the next century. The author, who is said to be a man of capital writing under a pen-name, represents that concentration of wealth in the hands of a few which labor agitators affirm to be now advancing rapidly, to hav reached, by the time the story opens, a degree unbearable and fatal. The corruption of legislatures and courts having increased so as to render these institutions totally valueless and null, recourse to arms is had by a vast association of workmen called the Brotherhood of Destruction. But desperation and Anarchism hav unfitted these men for wise and temperate exercise of power, and scenes of misrule and license ensue. After a battle in New York streets, the quarter of a million of dead are heaped in a huge pyramid on Union square, covered with cement, to remain as a monument to future generations of the death and burial of modern civilization. This erection, being directed by a revolutionary leader aiming at kingship, and called Cæsar, takes its name from its deviser, and is called Cæsar's Column. The object of the author in portraying these tremendous catastrophes, is to warn men to avert the calamities before it is too late. The book is full of action, and highly stirring and interesting.

Mr. Frank Q. Stuart has severed his connection with the Denver Individualist. As Mr. Stuart and his notions comprised the major portion of the Individualist plant the loss is great, though the present managers are able men.

Another of the countless cases of mis employment and waste of labor for which the Bible is responsible, is "The Precessional Year of the Ancients, as the Basis of the Bible and the Monuments." A. Brensinger, London, is the writer and publisher.

A workingman of Brooklyn has published his thoughts on labor and other matters, in a pamphlet entitled, "The Naked Truth." To our thinking, Truth is not in this production displayed in a very shocking state of nudity; rather, she here undergoes a Comstockian muffling quite equal to any that we hav seen. Price, 25 cents.

"The Economics of Anarchy," is an account by Dyer D. Lum, one of the ablest writers of his party, of the doctrin and aims of Anarchy. We do not believe in Anarchy. But Liberals like to examin for themselvs all positions; also they are aware that there can scarcely be a mass of error from which some mite of truth, not elsewhere acquirable, cannot be gathered. If any that so think would like to see what there is in the Anarchistic idea, they will find this a perspicuous and serviceable exposition. Price, 25 cents.

Among the many schemes of phonetic reconstruction of the English language proposed of late, is "Sound-English," devised by Augustin Knoflach. He sends us a book developing it, entitled, "Sound-English, a Language for the World." The work is published by G. E. Stechert, 828 Broadway, at 25 cents. The difficulty of learning the present spelling of English is illustrated by a remark from Mr. Gladstone: "I often think that if I were a foreigner and had to set about learning English, I should go mad. I can honestly say I cannot conceive how it is that he learns to pronounce English, when I take into account the total absence of rule, method, or system." Price, 25 cents.

Mrs. Lucy N. Colman's "Reminiscences," which appeared some months ago in these columns, and are now being reprinted by Mr. Green in his magazine, will soon be issued in book form, price 75 cents. These reminiscences are exceedingly valuable as historical reminders, and are remarkably interesting to the present generation, which knows so little of the details of the great antislavery struggle that these stories will seem to it like chapters from another age. Few young men and women realize what negro slavery was, and how heroically that splendid band of humanitarians, the Abolitionists—of which Mrs. Colman was a daring and leading member—labored to compass its extinction. Her Reminiscences giv a better appreciation of those times when Garrison scolded and Phillips thundered against the sum of all villainies than any other book we hav seen. Send 75 cents for it to Lucy N. Colman, 412 Griffin street, Syracuse, N. Y.

Mr. Clarence L. Swartz will conduct Lucifer during the retirement of Mr. Harman. Mr. Swartz was the editor of the late Voice of the People, at Kingman, Kan. In introducing him to his readers Mr. Harman says: "Mr. Swartz is comparativly a young man, but old enough to thoroughly understand the buisness of publishing and editing a reform paper. He has now been at work in the office something over a month, and has proved himself one of the very best compositors and general workmen we hav ever had in our employ. He takes hold of the business in all its departments with a will, with an energy, and with a precision that show him to be the right man for the place. He is in perfect accord with the objects of Lucifer, and I confidently believe he will do his utmost to keep its banner afloat in this the most trying time it has yet been called to pass through." It has been the fortune of THE TRUTH SEEKER Editor to take the place of a victim of legal tyranny, and, knowing the difficulties of the situation, we extend to Mr. Swartz some genuin sympathy, and presume to offer him the advice to read contributions before passing them to the printer.

Of the "Handbook of Freethought," bv W. S. Bell, I can say. this is truly a handy and useful volume for all who wish to argue or write against the errors and superstitions of Christian mythology. It is well arranged and classified, so that facts for reference are easily found. It contains the gist of many volumes all in one, and will supply a long-felt want to many an investigator into the "sacred mysteries of godliness."—ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

WILLI M LLOYD GARRISON'S BIOGRAPHY.

I hav just finished reading the third volume of William Lloyd Garrison's biography, written by his children. This volume includes the years from 1841 to 1860, and the reading of it has served to throw me into a melancholy state of mind. This life of Mr. Garrison is beautifully written, and very justly, and the cause for which he and his followers so faithfully labored was partially attained in the abolition of chattel slavery at the close of the late war. Then why should the reading of this history produce sadness? Why? Alas that it is so! Though I was more or less acquainted with nearly all the persons mentioned in this work, I am, with the exception of a half-dozen or so, the only one of all this number of workers of whom this biography speaks left to read the story. Such is the penalty which one pays for outliving one's generation—to find yourself alone, not living much in the present, not at all in the future, but only in the past. And as to that past, so full of interest to an activ worker in it, who is there to enjoy with you the reference to scenes which had a life and death interest in the time to those who were in them or cotemporary with them? There is much in the history of the war with slavery—the moral warfare, I mean—that it seems to me would be interesting. could they find time to read it, that would be instructiv even to those persons who to-day are engaged in a warfare upon superstition. As with the Abolitionist, the Freethinker who is of any use in the struggle is self-pronounced. His principles hav been duly weighed in his own mind, and he is sure he is right, and he sometimes forgets that though he is in principle right, he may be entirely wrong in the methods by which he would make those principles help the world. And so, with the best intentions, he insists upon his plan of action, and by and by there are divisions and subdivisions, and the cause which both parties hav at heart is dwarfed by the non-agreement of its able workers.

It is of the utmost importance to the reformer that he keep good natured. But I must not allow my pen to write a sermon. I took it to say to my friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER, who are all, or nearly all, younger than myself, do not be too anxious for long life. Its infirmities are not pleasant. Keep as young as possible, and when you are old, if old you must be, know that you hav done all you could to help the world upward.

LUCY N. COLMAN.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE
MARTYRDOM OF MAN.
A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.
By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 548pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

PIONEER PITH.

THE GIST OF LECTURES ON RATIONALISM.

By CAPT. R. C. ADAMS, President of Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club; author of "Travels in Faith from Tradition to Reason,"
and
"Evolution—A Summary of Evidence."

A compendium of scientific and critical lore. Best handbook for introducing the general reader to the principles and data on which Rationalism is based.

Paper, 12mo, 100pp., 25 cents.

EVOLUTION THEORY.

Three lectures by PROF. THOS. H. HUXLEY.

Paper, 10 cents.

Thirty DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE STORIES, ESSAYS, and LECTURES.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Pap., 760pp., 75 cents.

BENNETT-TEED DISCUSSION.

"Jesus the Lord God, Creator of Heaven and Earth."

By D. M. BENNETT and REV. MR. TEED.

Paper, 30 cents.

BESANT-HATCHARD DEBATE.

BETWEEN

ANNIE BESANT AND REV. A. HATCHARD

ON

Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity.

Price, 25 cents.

BIBLE BALANCED.

Comparing the Bible's Best Teachings and Sayings with those of Philosophers who Lived previous to Bible Authors.

By G. C. DARLING.

Paper, - - 50 cents.

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED.

Errors Exposed.

By O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES and VICES Sanctioned by Scripture.

By J. E. REMSBURG.

Price, 25 cents.

CRIMES OF PREACHERS in the United States and Canada.

By M. E. BILLINGS.

Price, . . . 25 cents.

BUDDHIST NIHILISM.

By MAX MULLER, M.A.

Price, 10 cents.

GOLDEN MEAN in Temperance and Religion.

By JOHN E. BURTON.

Price, 10 cents.

INSPIRATION OF BIBLES.

By JNO. E. BURTON.

Price, 10 cents.

Christianity and Materialism.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 15 cents.

CHRISTIANITY A REWARD FOR CRIME.

By O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 10 cents.

CHRISTIANITY from a SCIENTIFIC and HISTORICAL STANDPOINT.

By W. N. MCLAREN.

Paper, 50 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus.

Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. New Scripture (evidently inspired) Discovered by I. N. FIDEL and A. HOOK.

Price, 25 cents.

THE CRISIS.

By THOMAS PAINE.

Written during the American Revolution, and by order of General Washington read to the army.

Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75.

CULTIVATION OF ART.

ITS RELATIONS TO

RELIGIOUS PURITANISM AND MONEY-GETTING.

By A. R. COOPER.

Paper, 20c.; flexible clo., 35.

THE DARWINS. A Domestic Radical Romance. By Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

Pap., 50c.; clo., 75.

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BURGESS-UNDERWOOD DEBATE

ON CHRISTIANITY.

Between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O A. Burgess, Pres. of N. W Christian Univ.

Paper, 188pp., 50 cts.; clo., 80.

COMMON SENSE

By THOMAS PAINE.

Written in 1776.

Price, . . . 15 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 10 cents.

IS AMERICA THE NEW WORLD?

By L. L. DAWSON.

Price, . . 10 cents.

DEACON SKIDMORE'S LETTERS.

(Zion Hill Baptist.) His Evolution out of Christianity. By D. M. BENNETT. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

ECCE DIABOLUS.

Jehovah-Worship and Devil-Worship Identical—i.e., Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings.

By the Very Rev. Evan Davies, Arch Dru'd of Great Britain.

Price, . . 25 cents.

RELIGIOUS POSITIVISM;

OR, POSITIVIST CALENDAR. Brief Exposition of the Comtean System.

Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50.

Eight Scientific Tracts.

EVOLUTION, DARWINISM, etc.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD and others.

Price, 20 cents.

EPIDEMIC DELUSIONS.

By F. R. MARVIN, M.D.

Price, 10 cents.

Essay on Miracles.

By DAVID HUME.

Price, 10 cents.

ESSAYS AND LECTURES.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Paper, 300pp., 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

By T. E. LONGSHORE.

50c., 50c. per doz., 25 for $1.

THE UNSEEN WORLD.

By PROF. JOHN FISKE.

Price, 10 cents.

GOSPEL OF ATHEISM.

By ANNIE BESANT.

Price, 10 cents.

GOTTLIEB: HIS LIFE.

A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell.

By S. P. PUTNAM.

Price, 25 cents.

Heathens of the Heath.

RADICAL ROMANCE.

By WM. MCDONNELL.

500pp., paper, 80 cents.

HOLY BIBLE ABRIDGED.

The passages unfit for family reading.

Pap., 30c.; clo., 50.

THE LOGIC OF DEATH,

OR,

WHY SHOULD THE ATHEIST FEAR TO DIE?

By J G. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

THE LOGIC OF LIFE,

DEDUCED FROM

THE PRINCIPLE OF FREETHOUGHT.

By G. J. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

Secular Responsibility

By G. J. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

GENESIS I, II:

BIBLE NARRATIVE OF CREATION

By A. R. GROTE, A.M.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

Godly Women of the Bible.

A History of

ALL THE WOMEN WHO FIGURE IN THE BIBLE.

BY

An Ungodly Woman of the XIXth Century.

Pap., 50c.; clo., 75.

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Due Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No.2. Rev.Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps. 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Bible-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell. 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Capphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 5
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology..... 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wan Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
10 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
13 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrative is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR BOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper. 8vo, 25 cents.

SPECIAL SALE OF WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2.50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4.50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.50; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels, $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart-shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can hav their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 58th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,
Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union
Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.: LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club
Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Milwaukee, Wis., Liberal Club
Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 216 Grand ave., (Fraternity Hall). Lecture followed by debates. The public cordially invited.

Brotherhood of Moralists, No. 903, Prairie City, Ia.,
Meets every Sunday in the Liberal reading-room hall at 2:30 P.M. All Liberals are cordially invited. F. V. DRAPER, Cor. Sec.

San Francisco, Cal., Freethought Society
Meets every Sunday evening at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Seats free.

Des Moines Secular Union
Holds regular meetings at Good Templar Hall, Flynn Block, S.E corner 7th and Locust streets. Lectures followed by discussion. Friends from abroad heartily welcome.
FRANKLIN STEINER, Pres.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 25 cents Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indescretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT.

"Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N.J.

Inquiries are frequently received asking what we know about Dr Fellows, of Vineland, N. J., First, we know that he is a reliable gentleman of rare professional skill, who has earned success by good work. Second that he fulfills all his agreements to the letter. Third, that he has performed cures of hopeless cases that in the olden time his skill would have been called miraculous. Fourth, and last, we know him to be an honest man and a stanch Liberal.—The Better Way.

News of the Week.

THE Episcopal diocesan convention which will meet at Charleston, S. C., May 7th, will hav again to wrestle with the negro problem. In 1886 nearly one-half of the delegates seceded from the convention because the bishop admitted a negro clergyman. The fight promises to be warm and bitter.

PARLIAMENT has voted down a bill to disestablish and disendow the church of Scotland.

THE Italian senate has prohibited the clergy from belonging to charitable commissions.

WILSPOINT, Tex., was struck on the 3d by a hurricane that damaged every house and killed two persons.

THE Woman Suffrage party of New York state hav thanked Parnell for asking municipal suffrage for women in Ireland.

ON the 2d, on the South Carolina coast, a sailor attempting to desert jumped overboard and was eaten by two sharks.

CATHOLICS say that if Emperor William will turn one of their faith and be crowned by the pope, they will giv him highly advantageous support.

IN Germany Bismarck's methods are already falling into disesteem. Protection will be reduced, and perhaps abolished on breadstuffs; and the Socialist persecution will be slacked.

MAYOR GRANT, of New York city, is being exposed by an investigating committee as having been engaged in much corruption while sheriff, and his party, Tammany, is disconcerted.

A COMMITTEE has ascertained that in a certain square mile in New York city there are 270,000 people, 8,000 more than in any other square mile in the world.

RUSSIA is having much trouble to suppress revolutionary thought among the students in its colleges. Police hav been put on permanent duty at St. Petersburg University.

THE bill legalizing marriage to the sister of a deceased wife, which since 1841 has been periodically passed by the English Commons and defeated by the Lords and the clergy, has entered the Commons afresh.

EMIN PASHA has taken with him into Africa, to coax the chiefs into cession of their domains, presents that include gunpowder, helmets, breastplates, model steam-engins and steamboats, and a clockwork bear.

AN arbitration treaty has been signed, in Secretary Blaine's office in the department of state, by representativs of nine American nations, viz., the United States, Guatemala, Nicaraugua, Salvador, Honduras, Bolivia, Ecuador, Hayti, and the United States of Brazil.

THOSE who are doubtful of the character of the Brazilian provisional government, exclaim against a decree that subjects to a court-martial "all persons who originate or aid in circulating, by means of the press or telegraph or in any other way, in Brazil or in foreign countries, false reports and alarming rumors, such as refer, for instance, to the disciplin of the troops, to the stability of the institutions of the country, and to public order."

IN England the eight-hour demonstrations and strikes on May 1st were slighter than in any other European country, but on Sunday London had the greatest labor manifestation since 1866. There were 170,000 men in procession and 500,000 around the speakers' stands. All was orderly, and resolutions for eight hours were passed. Throughout Germany, Austria, and France strikes and agitations were begun on the 1st that still continue. In Germany there was no violence; in Austria there was some; in France there were many conflicts with the military. Vienna had out 25,000 troops; Paris, 64,000. Spain has at last been reached by radical labor notions, and Socialists and Anarchists are making a great stir there. In Barcelona 20,000 men refused to resume work after May day, and were incited to pillage, but were dispersed by soldiery. There were strikes through this country, many of which succeeded. The carpenter trade is the one that struck most extensivly. In Chicago many trades struck, and the city is much disturbed.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Givs a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

No error is fully confuted till we hav seen not only that it is an error, but how it became one; till, finding that it clashes with the principle of truth established in our own mind, we find also in what way it had seemed to harmonize with the principles of truth, established in that other mind, perhaps so unspeakably superior to ours.—Carlyle.

THE first duty of a wise advocate is to convince his opponents that he understands their arguments and sympathizes with their just feelings.—Coleridge.

THE productions of a great genius, with many lapses and inadvertencies, are infinitly preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author which are scrupulously exact.—Addison.

TRUTH gains more even by the errors of one who, with due study and preparation, thinks for himself, than by the true opinions of those who only hold them because they do not suffer themselvs to think.—Mill.

GIV me the storm and tempest of thought and action, rather than the dead calm of ignorance and faith.—Ingersoll.

FIRST of all is the question as to the Ethical Standard. What, in the last resort, is the test, criterion, umpire, appeal, or Standard, in determining Right and Wrong? In the concrete language of Paley, Why am I obliged to keep my word? The answer to this is the Theory of Right and Wrong, the essential part of every Ethical System. We may quote the leading answers: 1. It is alleged that the Arbitrary Will of the Deity, as expressed in the Bible, is the ultimate standard. On this view anything thus commanded is right, whatever be its consequences, or however it may clash with our sentiments and reasonings. . . . 6 The theory called Utility and Utilitarianism supposes that the well-being or happiness of mankind is the sole end and ultimate standard of morality. The agent takes account both of his own happiness and of the happiness of others, subordinating, on proper occasions, the first to the second.—Bain's Moral Science.

UTILITY would enjoin, first, that laws and social arrangements should place the happiness, or (as speaking practically it may be called) the interest of every individual, as nearly as possible in harmony with the interest of the whole; and secondly, that education and opinion, which hav so vast a power over human character, should so use that power as to establish in the mind of every individual an indissoluble association between his own happiness and the good of the whole; especially between his own happiness and the practice of such modes of conduct, negativ and positiv, as regard for the universal happiness prescribes: so that not only he may be unable to conceive the possibility of happiness to himself consistently with conduct opposed to the general good, but also that a direct impulse to promote the general good may be in every individual one of the habitual motivs of action, and the sentiments connected therewith may fill a large and prominent place in every human being's sentient existence. If the impugners of the Utilitarian morality represented it to their own minds in this its true character, I know not what recommendation possessed by any other morality they could possibly affirm to be wanting to it: what more beautiful or more exalted developments of human nature any other ethical system can be supposed to foster, or what springs of action, not accessible to the Utilitarian, such systems rely on for giving effect to their mandates.—John Stuart Mill.

As ten million circles will never form a square, so the united voices of myriads of men will never giv the least reality to what is false.—Goldsmith.

THE Catholic church did not, it has not, it cannot triumph over the intellectual world. To count its many millions does not tend to prove the truth of its creed. On the contrary, a creed that delights the credulous givs evidence against itself. Questions of fact or philosophy cannot be settled simply by numbers. There was a time when the Copernican system of astronomy had but few supporters—the multitude being on the other side. There was a time when the rotation of the earth was not believed by the majority.—Ingersoll.

JONATHAN ADVISETH DAVID TO HIDE HIMSELF.

But Jonathan, Saul's son, delighted much in David: and Jonathan told David, saying, Saul my father seeketh to kill thee. Now, therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in a secret place, and hide thyself.—1 Sam. xix, 2.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1890.

(E. M. 290.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

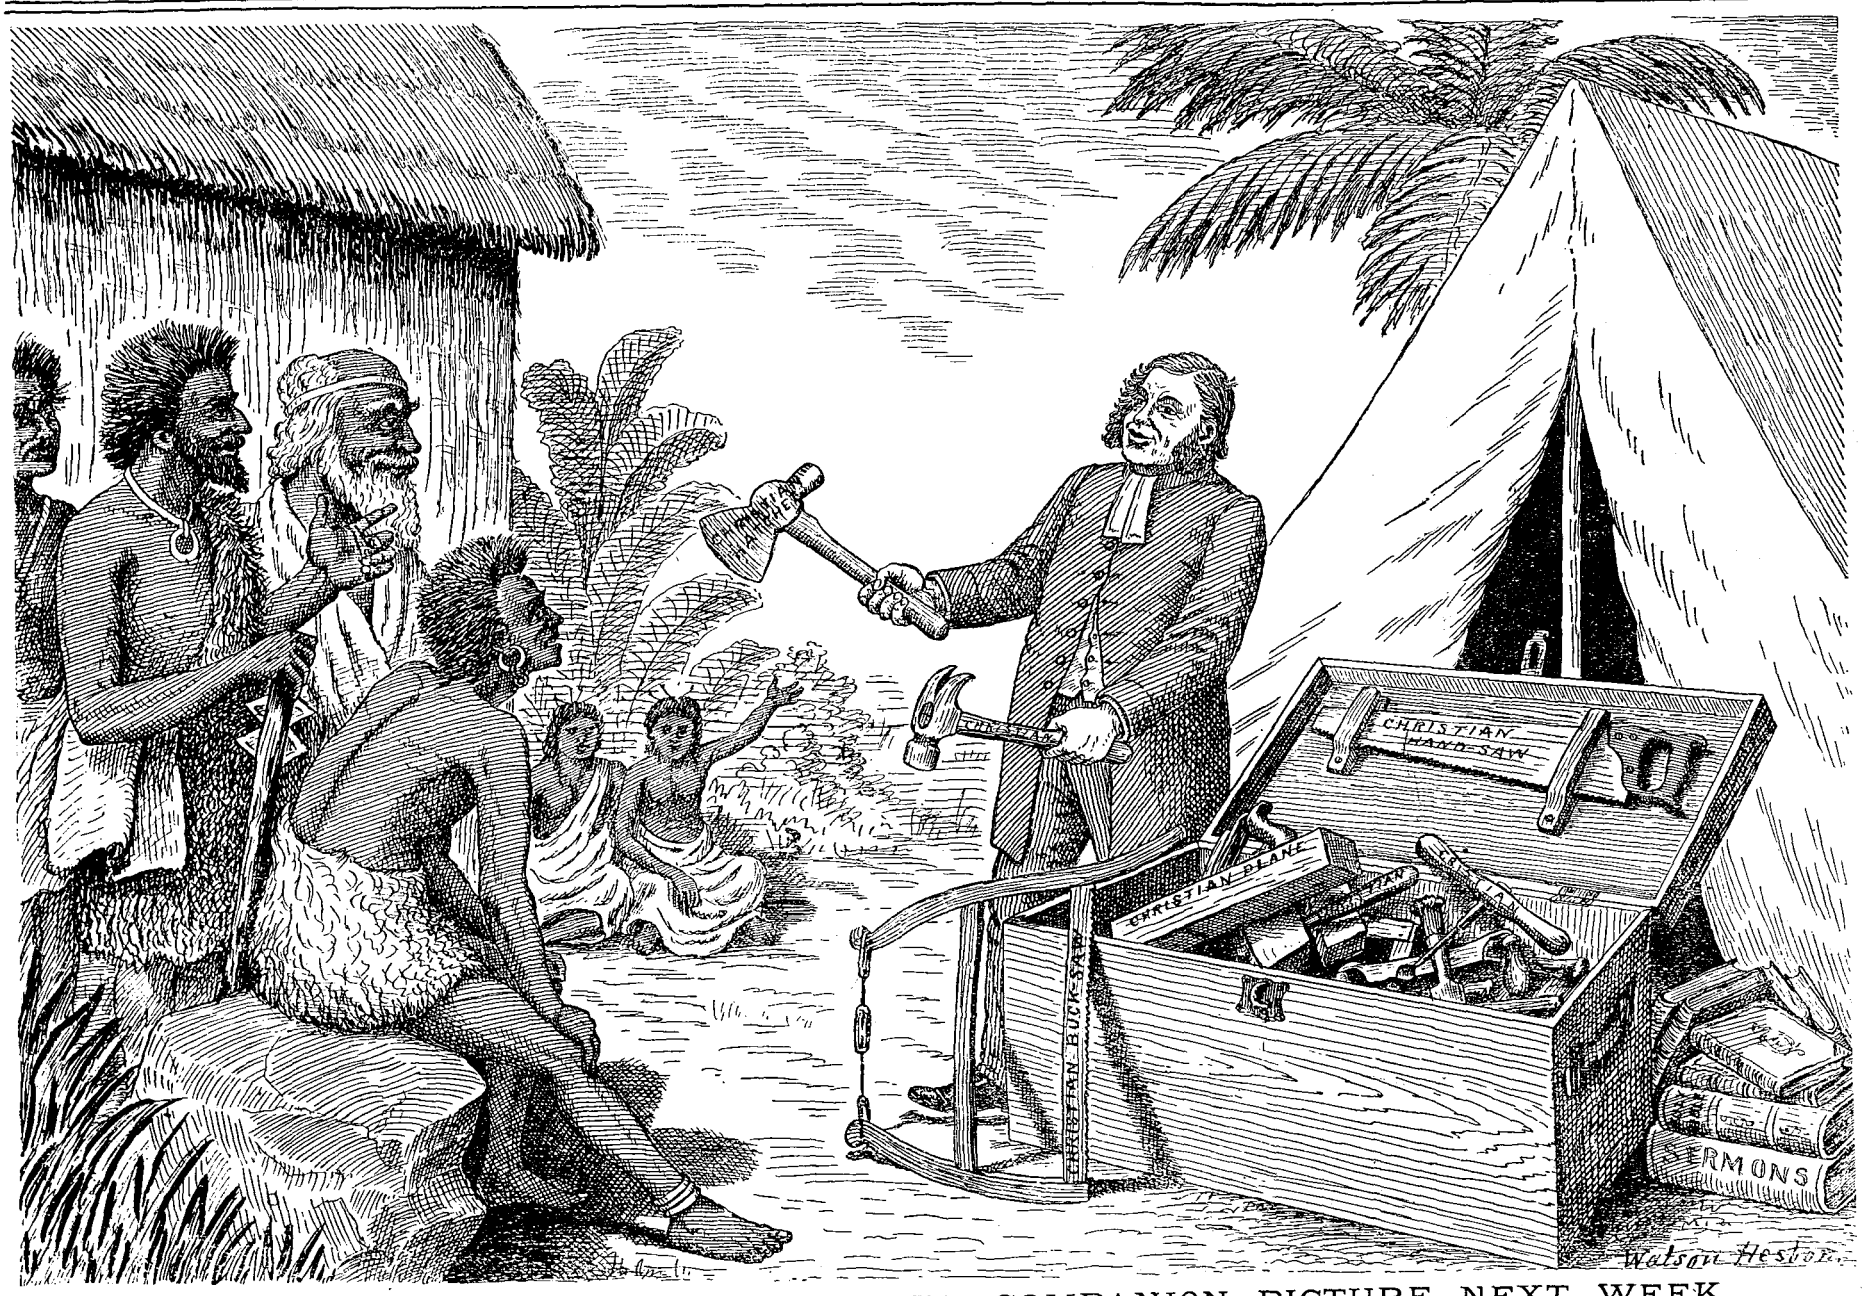
CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Calendar for 1890,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1889,	17
Faded Flowers. Poem by J. E. Remsburg,	24
The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue. T. B. Wakeman,	26
Mostly Fools. W. Stewart Ross (Saladin),	36
Record of the Spanish Inquisition,	44
Dates of the Fabrication of Some Roman Catholic Dogmas,	44
The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a Moral. Helen H. Gardener,	45
The Middle Ages. Illustrated,	69
The Priest,	70
The Supernatural World,	71
The Reformation,	73
Future Terrors,	77
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated,	79
Freethought Journals in the United States,	96
In Search of a Spirit. E. M. Macdonald,	97
Why I Left the Church. H. O. Pentecost,	109

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.



PRICE, 25 CENTS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 17. No. 20. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, May 17, 1890. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

A YANKEE WAY TO MAKE CONVERTS.—COMPANION PICTURE NEXT WEEK.

A Yankee missionary once confessed that he had won the confidence of a Fiji Islander by presenting him with a set of carpenter's tools and describing the several instruments as a Christian hatchet, a Christian claw-hammer, a Christian buck-saw.—Oswald's Secret of the East.

Notes and Clippings.

In England in 1868–69 there was one known thief to every 1,000 persons; in 1887–88 the percentage had fallen by nearly half, and there was only one known thief to every 1,945 persons. The decrease in the receivers of stolen goods is still greater. In 1868–69 there was one to every 8,430 people; in 1887–88 there was one to every 25,599. In 1869 there were 1,962 houses kept by receivers of stolen goods; in 1888 there were only 778. The number of suspected public houses, beer shops, and coffee shops has fallen within the same period from 3,197 to 753. Such are the last statistics.

I was asking the venerable bookseller, E. W. Stibbs, who was the most indefatigable reader of books in London, and he answered, "William E. Gladstone, unquestionably. Everything that comes to his net is fish. He is the biggest book buyer we hav; not that he indulges in rare and costly books, but that he keeps himself fully informed of everything in current literature. As soon as a new book appears he buys it, no matter whether it be a novel or a history or a philosophical treatis. He is not a rich man, yet he spends large sums of money for books; his library must be a large and curious one."—Chicago News.

At the Episcopal diocesan convention in Charleston, S. C., the following protest was presented: "We, the undersigned, members of the Protestant Episcopal church in the diocese of South Carolina, for themselvs and those in accord with them, respectfully request to record this their protest against the adoption of the amendment to article third of the Constitution, as it appears to them to impair the safeguards already existing in the Constitution (construed according to rules laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States), without affording in their stead any sufficient fulfilment of the pledges given in Anderson to effect a separate organization of the races."

Editor Moses Oppenheimer of the Emigrant, a German weekly published at 38 Broadway, New York, has a little wooden image which, he says, is a genuin statue of Buddha. It was stolen from a Buddhist temple in Ceylon by an Alsatian traveler, at the peril of his life. Had detection followed, the Alsatian would hav been put to death in a caldron of boiling oil, that being the penalty for the mutilation or surreptitious removal of Buddhist idols. The Sun says that "Col. Robert G. Ingersoll has seen Editor Oppenheimer's Buddha, and is willing to accept it as the genuin article, although he does not take any stock in Buddhism."

"One day, a dozen years ago," said a stoop-shouldered tramp, as he rubbed his hand over the deep pits in his face, "I came along to a house in the outskirts of Pekin, Ill. I wasn't much struck with the house, but what did hit me was a lot of coats, vests, and pants hanging on a clothes line. I was on my last pins for clothes, and as I saw them hanging there I said to myself: 'Moses, old boy, I've allus told you to trust in providence, and you now see the result. Them duds was hung out there for you. Go and git 'em.' I crawled along a fence, got over among some bushes, and after a little trouble I got a whole suit and got away with 'em. Nine days after I blossomed out with one of the prettiest cases of small-pox you ever saw, and some farmers drove me into an old barn and let me fight it out. When I knew what had got hold of me I says to myself: 'Moses, old boy, I've allus told you to trust in providence, and you now see the result.'"

The doctrin of the divine right of kings was not much heard of till the accession of James I. The extreme doctrin of divine right which Shakspere puts into the mouth of Richard II. is an anachronism. It belongs not to the fourteenth century, but in germ, perhaps, to the closing years of the sixteenth and the commencement of the seventeenth, to the Tudors and Stuarts, and not to the Plantagenets. In the words:

Not all the water in the wide rough sea
Can wash the balm from an anointed king;
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord—

it is noticeable that it is not the hereditary title but election by the Lord, the consecrating balm and not primogeniture and rule of birth, on which an inalienable right is based. So in Hamlet, the usurper and murderer, Claudius, avows himself safe in the shelter of that divinity which doth so hedge a king that treason can but peep to what it will.—Contemporary Review.

Rev. Robt. Collyer speaks, in describing how he came to leave the Methodist pulpit, of "going to a protracted meeting and hearing a young man preaching on the text, 'God is love.' I'd been worried for a long time about the way the Methodists viewed God. They made the almighty such a terror that you couldn't understand his love. The young man whom I speak of was just out of a theological seminary, and he had it all right. He talked of the necessity of accepting religion right away. He said: 'There's that fire. I might hold my hand in it for five minutes and my suffering would giv not even a faint idea of what the sinner suffers who dies in his sins.' I said to myself: 'I won't stand it. It's blasphemy against the most high.' I began to grumble, for I wasn't brave, and then I was summoned before the general conference. I said I didn't believe in total depravity. There's good and bad in all of us. We've got to cultivate the good and put our heels on the bad. I've been happy in the Unitarian church. . . . Everything in the Bible is not to be taken for true. My little grandson, when he heard the story of Jonah and the whale, said: 'I don't think that is a likely story,' and it isn't. We can't believe these things. I was puzzled over the story of Joshua having the sun to stand still at Ajalon while he hammered the poor fellows that he had no right to hammer, and that other one of the ram's horn that battered down the wall. They may do for the meeting-house, but they wouldn't do for the world."

Communications.

Life of Satan.—Concluded.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

Before Christ Jesus died he had given to both his apostles and disciples the power of chasing devils out of persons inhabited by them. The devils when driven out would generally lift up their voice and weep. Strange as it may seem, yet it is nevertheless the truth, that even a devil who appeared friendly to the apostles by proclaiming, "These men are the servants of the most high God, which show us the way of salvation," even he had to suffer forcible ejection (Acts xvi, 16–18). It must not, however, be supposed that Christ Jesus and his disciples were the only ones who could cast out devils. King Solomon was an excellent hand at it, so Josephus tells us; and he likewise relates that he himself and a multitude besides saw Eleazar do the very same thing. But Josephus is not the only one that affirms it. All the Christian fathers likewise "allow this power both to the Jews and to the gentiles, as well before as after our savior's coming" (C. Middleton, D.D.: Works, vol i, p. 68).

It seems that Satan had, about 200 A.D., an attack of dementia, or perhaps periodical amnesia—I am not sure which, as the only testimony given is furnished by the fathers of the church, and is therefore not of very scientific character. Yet it appears, judging from the description of the actions of Satan given by the above-mentioned gentlemen, that he has suffered a great mental change. In fact, he seems to hav been transformed; he is a man of mature years—several thousand years old—yet his mind is like that of a child ten years of age. This deplorable state lasted for several centuries; and although our knowledge of it is very deficient, yet enough is known to establish the fact that Satan, hence also his progeny, is in possession of a nervous system analogous to that of man. This incontestable fact has, I believe, never been noted by any other writer, although it is of the greatest importance, proving, as it does, the close mental and physical similarity which exist among man, devil, and trinity. For it must not be forgotten that when two subjects are like one and the same third subject, they themselvs are like each other. Hence, since Satan and the trinity both are like man (God created man in his image), it follows that Satan and the trinity are also like each other; a conclusion I am sure no student of the Old and New Testament will dispute. Satan, who previously had been a man of undoubted courage, could during his turn of sickness be frightened away by being shown the cross—yes, simply by making a form of it by the finger in the air. Though malicious, he never appeared malignant toward man, and I know one instance only in which his joking if carried a little further would hav resulted in bodily harm. I refer to his visit in form of a blackbird to St. Benedict, on which occasion he nearly blinded the saint by flapping his wings. One time his sudden appearance as a negro boy nearly caused St. Anthony to fall into a swoon. But generally, knowing the weak point of ecclesiastics, he assumed the form of a beautiful woman, and as such caused sad havoc in the hearts of Jerome, Augustine, and Benedict, compelling St. Augustine, in an almost Adamic costume, to use himself as a thermometer to ascertain the temperature of a snow-drift, while in the form of a former sweetheart of St. Benedict he pursued the latter until he, as the only means of escape, rolled himself in thorns. Of course the mind of Satan was not always equally affected. He had his comparativly bright moments, and it was during these that he performed such tricks as above stated. At other times he appears to hav been no more than a common imbecil, possessing an extraordinary appetite and an equal taste for strong drinks. And it was owing to the last trait that Gambrinus defeated him by offering him some lager beer, which caused him to fall in a drunken sleep, over which he, when he awoke, was so mortified that he forgot to take Gambrinus along when he left. On another occasion he met a man who was molding buttons, and on asking him what he was doing, received in answer, "I am making eyes." Hearing this, Satan, whose eyes were injured from exposure to the heat from his infernal furnaces, asked the man to make him a couple. He did as he was asked, and pouring a stream of melted lead in Satan's eyes deprived him of sight. But I will not linger any longer on this painful period of my hero's life. Enough has been told. At last a change came. His former vigor of mind returned, though only gradually. Still, a great improvement had taken place with him already in the time of Luther, who, we know, received a visit from him on which occasion neither crosses, prayers, nor holy names could drive him away, and it was only when Luther, grasping the ink-bottle, hurled it at his head, that Satan was induced to retire. On the wall in Luther's room in Castle Wartburg in Germany the spots of the ink are seen to-day.

In the seventeenth century Satan, I am happy to tell, had regained the full use of his mental faculties, and as a gentleman, profound scholar, and theologian he is more than a match for the clergy.

Yet a life so long and activ cannot fail to tell its tale even on a constitution like Satan's. Trips to the earth; the baleful results of too close application to his studies; his cares and burden as husband and father; not to mention the severe strain caused by his official position as owner and manager of that great establishment formerly known under the name hell, but which now, thanks to the revisers of the holy Bible, is called sheol—all these causes hav combined to break down his youthful strength and confine him to his ultra-tropical home, where he remains, the object of his family's love and devotion. Rumors to the effect that Satan, as well as his whole family, hav perished by the explosion of hell, hav reached my ear, and although no official information of the story has arrived yet, I am grieved to state that the entire disappearance here on earth of Satan and his progeny, and the total disregard of him among intelligent people nowadays, tend only to confirm the supposition. Hence, I think that mankind in general, and the clergy especially—since the latter hav derived immeasurable profit from his existence and activity—should start a subscription to erect a monument in honor of Satan, and commemorate to future generations the name and deeds of mankind's greatest benefactor, the originator of every progressiv movement, the father of liberty, the first in peace, the first in war, and the first in filling the clergy's pockets with weak-minded persons' money.

Before proceeding any farther we will inquire into the opinions of science and Rationalism regarding devil-possessions and mental visions in general, so far as these touch upon the subject treated of.

To primitiv and savage man, the whole world is peopled with spirits, which manifest themselvs in numerous ways. In fact, every occurrence or phenomenon the cause of which he cannot understand is attributed to them. The appearance in dreams of an absent or perhaps dead person, be he relativ, friend, or enemy, causes, in connection with his own seeming activity in a dream, the belief in a double personality of human beings. Here is a particularly slippery, and therefore dangerous, passage in the rock bordering the river. A man endeavors to pass this place on his return from the chase. He slips, falls in the river, and is drowned. Some time later another man undertakes the journey and is subject to the same fate. The ghost of the first victim, malignant because his body was not buried, dragged him down, argues the savage. But it is not alone in this and similar ways that the belief in duality makes itself known. During his sleep a savage is dreaming; he raises himself partly up from his couch, he speaks, he gesticulates, etc., and then he lies down without having gained consciousness. When he awakes he remembers nothing of what has taken place, yet he is told he acted in such or such manner. Now, knowing that during sound sleep, swoon, etc., there is almost complete abeyance or absence of his own self, he and his friends at once conclude that his strange behavior was due to the fact that a strange spirit had entered his body during the absence of his own. The character of this ghost can be either good or evil, according to the physical manifestations produced by the person possessed. This being the case, then it is evident, reasons the savage, that a person who while awake acts in a manner different from his usual behavior is likewise possessed of a spirit; which, if the person is hysterical or epileptic, or suffers from amnesia, hypochondria, or the like, must of necessity be an evil one.

This belief in good and evil spirits we find among all the nations of antiquity which I hav had occasion to mention in this essay. Innumerable ghosts surrounded the Jews, and since, as Herbert Spencer says, "the possessed were said to frequent the burial-places and as demons were supposed to make tombs their favorit haunts" (compare Mark v, 3), we may conclude that by Jews in general the possessing spirit was at first conceived as a ghost; a statement supported by Josephus, who claims that demons were spirits of wicked dead, entering the bodies of the living. According to other Jewish writers demons are the progeny of devils and mortal women, yet this latter belief is not found previous to the Babylonian captivity.

We see how insanity, or mental derangement under any form, was naturally believed to be caused by the possession of an evil spirit, a demon.

This view held itself for centuries, and soon, by a very natural development, it was made to include not alone unusual actions but likewise diseases. Yet, as I hav stated, the ghost was not always an evil one. The great writers of antiquity were supposed to be inhabited by a good, a divine spirit. And the same belief was not alone held by the Jews, but is tacitly admitted by Christians of our time, for what were the "inspired" writers of both the Old and New Testaments but men inhabited by a divine ghost? And from whom does the pope receive his infallible judgment? From a Holy Ghost. Hence we see that to-day, in an age of inventions, science, and general culture, even intelligent people hav not ceased to believe in the superstitions of primeval and savage man. When will the sun of reason arise from behind the cloud of mental darkness?

Connected with the idea of spirits and demons, is the belief in the existence of persons possessing supernatural powers—sorcerers and witches. This belief, sustained by the scriptural passage, "Thou shalt suffer no witch to liv," has existed for nearly two thousand years among the Christians, and has given rise to the well-known witch persecutions by which thousands of innocent women hav suffered the most horrible death. But I will not linger upon this painful subject, which forms a large blot upon the already soiled pages of the history of Christianity—a blot which excuses, falsifications, yes, even time herself, cannot make disappear—and will turn my attention to visions.

Anyone who has observed a hysterical person must hav been impressed by the seeming lack of will power in the person thus afflicted. He or she is never the same; the character is continually changing. Yet the patient is by no means insane, but he is capable only of producing automatic acts and such as are the result of emotions and passions, and these only, thus excluding every act dictated by reason. Such persons are often under the influence of a fixed idea. Some refuse to speak, thinking that an exercise of the organs of speech will hurt them. Others, again, suffer from an imaginary paralysis of the locomotory organs and refuse therefore to leave the bed, etc. The existence of such fixed ideas proves conclusivly that the hysterical person's will power is impaired, and while it is impossible to convince such persons by reasonable argument that they are victims of a mental delusion, yet a cure can be, and is in most cases effected either by a moral shock or by the command of a strong-minded and feared individual. Of such kind were probably many of the "miraculous" cures effected by Christ Jesus and his disciples, by the fathers of the church, and by mediæval and modern priests and relics.

But while we in the case of hysterical persons hav to deal with an impaired will power only, we find in mystics and ecstasists a total extinction of the will. A person can become an ecstacist either through an excess of cerebral activity, which may or may not result in general hysteria with a fixed idea attached, or the ecstasy can be produced by a continued contemplation of a certain object. Yet in both cases the subject absorbing the mind must do so to the exclusion of every other. That is, while perfect consciousness can exist only where there is a continuous change or opposition of the different elements of consciousness, a preservation and reproduction of previously existing elements and a connection between these and later ones, consciousness is entirely absent in the ecstasist owing to the unvaried and continuous presence of one idea. Thus, during the ecstasy the person afflicted has lost all knowledge of his surroundings. His reason, memory, and therefore feelings—so far as these relate to any other subject than the one occupying his mind—do not exist. Hence we can understand how religious maniacs and martyrs of all ages and religions hav been capable of enduring the most severe tortures without uttering a cry of pain—they were unconscious.

When with the return of memory, reason, and feeling, the plurality of conception and thereby consciousness comes back, the ecstasist is able to describe his sensations during the attack. Hence ecstasists like St. Theresa, Anthony, Benedict, Augustine, and Luther hav been capable of noting down their individual visions, to the great consolation of the faithful, whose belief in the supernatural and in heavenly visions, likewise caused by a distorted mind, was thereby strengthened; and to the joy of the scientist, who in these descriptions, not written by Infidels, finds additional proof of the non-existence of divine interposition in human affairs, and of the fact that everything relating to mental manifestations in animate beings, the origin of consciousness excepted, can be explained on natural grounds.

Before closing this essay, it may not be without interest to dwell for a few minutes on the names and home of Satan. Being a person of eminence, Satan, like the crowned and noble heads of Europe, can glory in the possession of many names. Before he was precipitated out of heaven, where he held the office of a seraph with six wings, his name was Sammael, which is derived from the word semmé, to blind or deceive; still later he was called Asael Leviathan, the unclean spirit, the old serpent, Eblis, Satan, devil, etc. But I will not try the reader's patience by tracing even in outline the history of these words. I will confine myself to a few remarks concerning the last name. In ancient Sanscrit we hav a word, div, to shine, from which are derived the nouns dyu (sky, day), dyaus (personification of the same), and deva (god). When Iranian dualism came into existence, the word deva, in Zend dev, came to signify evil spirit; thus a Zoroastrian had in his confession of faith to say: "I cease to be a deva worshiper; I profess to be a Zoroastrian worshiper of Ahuramazda, an enemy of the devas, and a devotee to Ahura." Hence we see that among Aryan nations a God of a former religion was regarded as being a deceiver of mankind, vanquished by a later or true god, and regarded therefore as an ex-god—a fact proved by the German and Danish words for idol, abgott, afgud. From the Zend word dev is derived the Teutonic words teufel, djöfull, djœvel, diuval, djeuful, devil, demon, etc., but from it is likewise derived the dewel, the gipsy name for the supreme being; the Latin deus; the Greek theos; the Lithuanian diervas; the French dieu. Thus it is plainly seen that originally the names for the supreme good being and the supreme evil one were the same. Both of them can be traced to the word dyu, meaning sky and day, from which fact it follows that primeval man did not possess a conception of either a good or a bad spirit, but that he was like the Bods and Dhimáls, who are so "honest and truthful," and yet hav no word either for God, for soul, for heaven, for hell, or like the Santál, who "never thinks of making money by a stranger," and "feels pained if payment is pressed upon him" for food offered, but who has no conception "of a supreme and beneficent God." It is of these savage tribes of the present day that Mr. Herbert Spencer speaks when he says, "What a pity those heathens cannot be induced to send missionaries among the Christians!"—a wish seconded by every lover of true morality. For certainly "something is rotten in the kingdom of Denmark." Christianity has been given an opportunity, and that one of nearly two thousand years' duration. She has failed. Let, therefore, either science and Rationalism be heard or the heathen Bods, Dhimáls, Santáls, Lepchas, and Arafuras, all of whom hav no god or devil.

Variable as is the name given to Satan, no less so is the character of his abode. Among the ancient Jews the word sheol merely signified the grave. Later it came to mean, although in a vague way, the place of the dead. During the Babylonian captivity sheol designated a kind of Hebrew hades, a place dreary and comfortless, a conception which later was developed so as to represent a place of torture, gehenna. This last conception, which was derived from Babylonian and Egyptian sources, was, when adopted by Christians, still further strengthened by infusion of Greek and Roman ideas. Among these nations, as among all others possessing a belief in future life, we find an underworld, reigned over by Plutôn. In this underworld ran a stream Acheron—a name for running water, which contains the root aqua, but to a Greek this word Acheron called up the idea of pain and grief, hence the stream was supposed to be covered with ashes and woe. Still farther, the frequent volcanic eruptions which took place in the countries east and north of the Mediterranean sea, in connection with the belief in the flatness of the earth and the situation of hell below the surface of the same, gave rise to the supposition that gehenna, hades, or hell was a place where the human souls were tortured forever by fire. Vulgar and clerical imagination added large kettles filled with fire and brimstone, in which hairy, horny, tailed devils stirred round wicked human beings with pitchforks. Yet this was not all with theological logic. Hell, although under the earth, was still placed in such position as to enable the frying victims to be within hearing distance of heaven, which place likewise was visible to them in spite of the fact that heaven was placed somewhere above the clouds. Verily, if it was not that nothing is impossible for the Lord Jehovah, I should be very apt to disbelieve these statements as to the geographical situation of heaven and hell, even if it is supported by the story about Lazarus and the rich man.

I hav now arrived at the conclusion of my essay, which necessarily suffers from several defects, owing principally to the lack of space, yet I shall be amply repaid for my trouble if the perusal of the "Life of Satan" can convince only one being that the devil is but a mythological being, born of human ignorance and fostered by heartless avarice and credulity. Life is but short, and it givs to each and every one sorrows, misery, and pain enough; let us therefore not increase these by allowing to remain, to be taught to our children, the belief in a superstition which for barbarity of conception and woeful consequence has not its equal. Let us remove the coffin now placed by the cradle and cut down the cypress whose gloomy branches cast a shadow over the face of the innocent baby. Let the sun of sympathy and love shine upon it, and let lilies and roses bloom at its feet.

GUSTAVE NELSON.

A Fable.

Jam Jee, the Thug, lay on his bed dying. He called his sons and grandsons to him and thus spoke:

"I am now one hundred years old, and my last hour is come. I can lay my hand on my heart and say, I die at peace with all mankind. I hav endeavored, with all my might, to serve our God. I can truthfully declare since I was old enough to wield the cord and knife, I hav never allowed a traveler to escape with his life. When I was sixteen years old, being large, strong, and activ for my age, I began my career, and since then for eighty-four years I hav killed one hundred persons on an average every year. Think of it, my sons, a number equal to eight regiments of soldiers.* Thus, am I wrong when I say that I hav won the favor of our God? I hope, my children, you will all liv long and emulate my example. In this world you see two things always going on, viz, Reproduction and Destruction, and one is as much a part of the plan of nature as the other. She is always under a necessity of destroying a number of human beings, in each thirty years, equal to twelve thousand millions, or one generation. The means nature employs are infinit—war, pestilence, flood, famin, disease, storms, and a thousand other means of death. You observe, in history, the greatest men hav been the greatest destroyers, and in proportion to the number they hav killed, they are honored by mankind. Millions of sharks traverse the seas destroying other fishes; millions of birds traverse the air destroying other birds, and millions of men hav traversed the earth destroying each other. All great families of nobles and kings had their origin in the slaughter and robbery of men, and many of them hav flourished for thousands of years. Nature loves the destroyer.

"One thing in my life has given me pain, and I hav ever thought of it with mortification. In my youth I visited Calcutta, and was invited by an English gentleman, who did not know that I was a Thug, to dine with him. I had been told that no greater offense against good manners could be committed among Englishmen, than to put your knife to your mouth. I had been taught to observe the proprieties among all persons, and I endeavored to avoid this offense; but I forgot myself, and found that I was eating with my knife. I looked around and saw the eyes of all the company fixed on me in dismay. I fled from the table and the city; but the memory of this mistake, ever since, has burnt in my soul like fire."

*Perhaps the memory of the aged man is not to be trusted.

The Situation.

The mind of man is disturbed. Old assertions are half believed, and dogmas once openly defended are now being revised or thrown aside.

Honesty belongs to no particular time or place. He who candidly examins the religious doctrins for consolation and consecration and finally rejects them all, is just as honest as he who accepts and believes them all.

The time has passed—and I am proud of it—when a man can be tortured for a religious belief.

Facts are revolutionizing the world faster than ever before. New ideas crowd old faiths and fancies to the wall. Times are changing.

The Methodist minister, with fine clothes and haughty bearing; the Baptist divine, cold in manners and harsh in denunciation; the Catholic priest, with one eye on heaven and the other on the beauties of woman; the Presbyterian clergyman with a John Calvin grin, pondering over the damnation of infants—you are all strangely slow in recognizing the true situation. Your churches need strong defenders as never before. The noise of battle grows louder and more distinct. Infidel sharpshooters are doing infinit harm on all sides. Agnostic pickets are marching on sacred grounds. Grape-shot and cannon-balls discharged by unbelieving brains are crippling the faithful on a thousand fields. There is no sense in ignoring this. There is no judgment in passing over these facts with a scornful smile. You richly clad divine standing in your magnificent pulpit looking upon your flock, how astonished and grieved you would be to know that fully one-third of the congregation do not believe what you preach. The churches are honeycombed with doubters, and thousands of men giv money to sustain them only on account of their wives and children. "My wife enjoys going to church and my children are employed Sundays at the Sunday-school. This is my reason for giving $50 to the cause. As for myself, I need none of their spiritual consolation. I consider it a necessary sham and delusion." These men drop in their $10 bills for policy's sake. If one is a doctor, $10 thus given is worth hundreds of dollars as an advertisment. The withholding of his donation means ruin to his practice. The same can be said of all professions. Do you preachers realize and thoroughly understand the situation, and are you satisfied to accept the money from a man who givs as a compromise and not as a religious duty? The secular press will print to-day an article from Ingersoll under large headlines, just as readily as it would the production of an eminent divine. Seventy-five years ago scarcely a paper would dare publish the utterance of an Infidel. On all sides evidences of the battle of the creeds can be seen. In every village some inquisitiv mind hems in the parson in a discussion of biblical ideas. If there is any good in religion; if civilization is dependent upon Christian supremacy; if Christianity has mainly been instrumental in making this world fit to liv in, and its influence is needed to increase and continue the good blessings in future, I for one implore the Christian people to arouse to a sense of their danger. Let them unite in harmony to combat the common foe. Lay aside your present prejudices and turn your faces to the storm. Eradicate your fanatics and in some legitimate manner exterminate your hypocrits. Pious groans and reverential amens amount to nothing. Your best energies must be exercised. All observant preachers know that their cause is losing ground. It is the hardest matter in the world to get a full attendance, and still more difficult to keep those who do attend from dozing during the sermon.

I earnestly hope that some one in the great army of Christians will step out on the intellectual battle-field and in single combat defeat each opponent until the enemy, dismayed by fear, giv up the battle and leave the field De Witt Talmage's fancy sermons do not fill the bill. Sam Jones's half-vulgar jokes do not satisfy or convince. Nothing has yet been produced to silence one Infidel. O Christians! find some one powerful in brain, masterful in logic, sincere in motiv, devoid of ambitious pomp—one who is desirous of spreading truth only. Secure some one capable of proving to a doubting age that between the lids of the holy Bible nothing inconsistent can be found. Let him prove the inspiration of the scriptures so conclusivly that doubting will perish eternally.

If such a man cannot be found then your battle may be lost. And if you do fail and giv up the field over the ruined walls of Christendom will rise Infidelity.

Peeping into the future one hundred years hence we may see a better world—we may see nobler men, kinder women, sweeter children. If the Infidels do not increase joy, they will not build an Inquisition.

Brameyard, Miss. W. A. DUNN.

Is the Court Hedging?

Recently this paragraph concerning the decision by the Wisconsin supreme court has been extensivly published:

President Albee, of the State Normal School, has received a letter from one of the judges concerning the recent decision. In answer to the questions of Mr. Albee, the judge says that the decision prohibiting the reading of the Bible in schools merely forbids its use as a special book for a specifically religious purpose. In other words, the Bible may be used in the school like a history or any other book, and as such may be read before the entire school.

On this the Philadelphia Inquirer comments as follows: "Just how the supreme court proposes to reconcile this with its original opinion is a matter of great interest. There may be some fine distinction of law which allows a decision in favor of two contentions diametrically opposed to each other, but it is very hard for the layman to make them out. Here is the original opinion of Justice Cassoday:

"We must hold that the stated reading of the Bible in the public schools as a text-book may be 'worship' within the meaning of the clause of the constitution under consideration. It logically follows that the place where the Bible is read is a "place of worship," and that as the taxpayers were compelled to erect and support the school-houses, and the children are, under a late law, compelled to attend the public or private schools during a certain period, the constitutional clauses forbid such use of the school-house.

"To this Justice Lyon adds:

"That the reading of the Bible in the schools, although unaccompanied by any comment on the part of the teacher, is 'instruction,' seems to us too clear for argument.

"Now, we would like to see a judge, lawyer, or anyone else reconcile the above statements with the one in the dispatch quoted: 'The Bible may be used in the school like a history or any other book, and as such may be read before the entire school.' If this is not a case of a court swallowing itself we never heard of one. The Bible cannot be read in a school-house as a text-book because it makes it a place of worship, and yet it may be read as a text-book. The only use made of the Bible as a text-book, so far as we know, is in theological seminaries. Just what it is to be used for in a non-religious sense is hard to see. It cannot be used as a purely scientific text-book, because the miracles therein noted are not to be believed except when the power of the creator to alter established laws is admitted, and this at once introduces the religious teaching which the supreme court insists upon shall be avoided.

"As a literary work it takes the highest rank; but if those parts in which religion is distinctivly taught must be avoided, nothing will be left but certain portions of the narration of the wanderings of the children of Israel, their fight for Canaan, and the books of Esther and Ruth. To read the Bible and avoid any reference to the creator is more difficult even than to understand the supreme court of Wisconsin. If the Bible is to be used as a text-book only so far as no reference is made to religion, it will be little used.

"What does the court mean? We would like to see it make one more effort to make itself intelligible. Perhaps the Bible is to be taken out and read under the trees. Perhaps it is to be taught as it stands from Genesis to Revelation. Perhaps only the enumeration of the tribes of Israel is to be read. Perhaps the court doesn't know what it does mean. Certainly no one else does."

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President, 1707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.
E. B. FOOTE Jr., Vice-President, 120 Lexington ave., New York city.
T. B. WAKEMAN, Vice-President, 92 Nassau street, New York city.
J. E. REMSBURG, Vice-President, ... Oak Mills, Kan.
JULIET H. SEVERANCE, Vice-President, . . . Milwaukee, Wis.
IDA C. CRADDOCK, Secretary, 930 North 17th st., Philadelphia, Pa.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Ida C. Craddock, 930 North 17th street, Philadelphia, Pa.
TREASURER, F. C. Mende, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Secular Union's Monthly Report.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED APRIL, 1890.

R R. Gurley, M.D., Washington, D. C., for constitutions	$2 00
N. C. Cooper, Coolville, O.	1 00
John Turner, Philadelphia, Pa.	10 00
" " " " for "Church Taxation" (pamphlet)	10
Portsmouth, O., Secular Society (charter fee), through Will S. Andres	5 00
James Lafferty, Banner, Ida., through Otto Wettstein	3 00
Samos Parsons. San Jose, Cal.	10 00
Almond Owen, Milwaukee, Wis.	10 00
" " " " for donation to be sent to Victor Lennstrand, Sweden	10 00
J. A. Smith, Hudson, N. Y., for "Church Taxation"	1 00
Jasper J. Brown, Oswego, N. Y., "	10
R. M. Stender, St. Louis, Mo.	1 00
D. C. Wismer, Quakertown, Pa.	1 00
Dr. R. R. Gurley, Washington, D. C. (pamphlets)	1 40
A. W. Sturdy, Attleboro, Mass., through THE TRUTH SEEKER	5 00
Benedict Landau, Fort Mackinac, Mich.	1 00
A Friend, Philadelphia, Pa.	15 00
Emma R. Drake, Foxboro, Mass. (pamphlet)	10
C. M. Buck, E. Milton, Mass. (1 dozen pamphlets, "Church Taxation," 60 cents; balance, 40 cents, to the American Secular Union)	1 00
T. A Wilison, Reading, Pa. (pamphlets)	1 00
Aaron Davis, Frederick, Md. (1 dozen pamphlets)	60
A Friend, Philadelphia, Pa.	2 50
Total	$81 80
Balance in treasury from March	61 06
Total	$142 86
Disbursements for April, 1890	159 89
Deficit	$17 03

F. C. MENDE, Treasurer.

The above statement of receipts for April, $81.80, which, with the balance in the treasury from March of $61.06 leaves a deficit of $17.03, and also the report of March subscriptions of only $19.75 shows a falling off in our contributions that is not encouraging; and we cannot go forward with our work unless our friends rally to our support.

A considerable number of the subscriptions for months past hav been "special;" and the executiv committee hav not been free to use them for ordinary expenses, but hav conscientiously expended them as directed.

Unless greater promptness and liberality shall be shown, we cannot carry out our liberal plans, which hav already worked so well. It is hoped that this hint will hav the effect of waking up our friends and prompting them to make immediate remittances to our more than empty treasury.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer.
IDA C. CRADDOCK, Corr Sec.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 1, 1890.

Our London Letter.

Mr. Gladstone has furnished another of his articles on "The impregnable rock of holy scripture," the title of the present instalment being "The creation story," which will no doubt be effectually dealt with in the various Freethought papers. His arguments in its favor are such that he would never think of using in secular matters, but are apparently quite good enough for "sacred" questions, or rather for those who usually read that kind of literature, and believe in it. He tells his readers that history is a record of experience, the creativ story lies outside that experience; how then does it come into the possession of a portion of mankind? He says it is not poetry; that there is not the smallest ground for regarding it as the offspring of scientific inquiry; and that to speak of it as guesswork would be irrational, for there were no materials for guessing. It is not theory, because the person who composes or transmits it seems to believe and to intend others to believe that he is dealing with matters of fact. But these matters of fact were impossible to be known, and therefore if it is, as it surely professes to be, a serious conveyance of truth, it can only be a communication from the "most high." What keen logical reasoning, to be sure. It seems that the "days" are neither the solar ones of twenty four hours, nor geologic periods, but chapters in the history of creation. He does not explain how this can be, when it is stated that the evening and the morning were the boundaries of such days, and that because the world was created and equipped in six days, and the creator rested on the seventh, the Jews were required to abstain from work on the Sabbath. Such special pleading and irrational argumentation is really not worth a serious consideration, and only goes to show what a divergence of opinion there is regarding "the word of God" amongst the most devout believers.

News has just arrived from Ceylon of the death of a missionary, who was shot while out with a hunting party. It will be interesting to hear what the Church Missionary Society will hav to say on the subject at their annual meeting. Perhaps they can explain how it is that a hard working missionary, whose life is devoted to the arduous labors of converting the "heathen," who has wholly given himself up to the "service of God," can find time and inclination to go on shooting excursions. Would the Buddhist be right in saying it was a judgment upon him for attempting to destroy life that he could not bestow? This incident should rather open the eyes of those sheep who are so well fleeced to support the good missionary, who bears cheerfully his hard lot solely for the love of his poor fellow-creature.

Letters hav been received by the Church Missionary Society from some of their missionaries at Usambiro on the Victoria Nyanza, and there seems to hav been some very busy evangelizing. The Christians hav had some considerable fighting with the Mohammedans. In the first bout the former got the worst of it, but being reinforced did better on the second occasion. The Christians had "only" two thousand guns and a large following of spearmen, the Mohammedans more guns but fewer spearmen. The Christians on taking the capital fired it, and gave it up to plunder by their nativ converts. It is satisfactory to know that now the Christians hav been the victors, they are very anxious for peace, and desire the prayers of the whole church to help in attaining that most desirable object. I suppose they fear reprisals if the Mohammedans gain allies amongst their fellow-believers, and do not care about trying further conclusions with them, but if they believe their God can effectually help them with hosts of angels, etc., their best plan would be to march straight across the continent and sweep their enemies into the sea. The gospel of peace introduced in this forcible manner ought not to be without effect, as the heathen cannot fail to see how well it is carried out by its exponents.

The president of the Baptist Union has delivered his annual address, which goes to show how judiciously the sects are hedging He tells his hearers that they should not commit the serious blunder of fighting for a technical or unimportant interpretation of a book or verse of scripture, as if the whole authority of revelation depended on the maintenance of that view. What concerned them was the spirit or aim of the revelation. Which really means, if anyone shows the absurdity or contradiction of any passage in the Bible, let it slide as being of no importance, only look out after the collections, see that the money flows in freely, and let anyone interpret the scriptures as they please. An instructiv work might now be written on the evolution of Christianity, and the writer need not go back many years to show how rapid has been the change. J. D.

London, April 30, 1890.

The Hours of Labor.

Of all the questions concerning reform now before the public the eight-hour law is of the most general interest, the most prominent, and will be the most persistent; for, like truth, though often crushed, it will still rise again, and never remain settled until it is settled aright. Many of the objections raised against it are very inconsistent when taken in connection with the sayings of the persons making the objections on other occasions. For instance, we are continually being told in the magazines and newspapers and from the rostrum and pulpit of the advances brought about by Christian civilization. Yet the very ones making these claims express fears that if men worked only eight hours a day they would be apt to spend a large amount of their spare time in the saloons instead of occupying themselvs in a profitable manner. That is a sad commentary on what has been accomplished by eighteen hundred years of that kind of civilization for the men who execute the work of the world.

We are told in the Bible that the first pair of human beings were turned from the garden of Eden because of disobedience and were given the earth as an inheritance, they and their descendants forever We are not told that a part of these descendants are to work in mines and factories at hard and toilsome labor and liv in penury and discomfort, while another portion of them pass their lives in idleness, never producing anything of use, and liv in luxury and extravagance, instead of earning their bread by the sweat of their brow, as the decree is said to hav been.

Sixty years ago I was living in an English manufacturing town, where I often had to pass a tavern, over whose door hung a sign which was called "The Six Alls." At the top and in the center was the representation of the king, dressed in robes of state, and underneath was written, "I rule all." On the right-hand side, and one beneath the other, stood the lawyer and the doctor. The one said "I plead for all;" the other, "I cure all." On the left-hand side, and one beneath the other, was the preacher and the soldier. The one said, "I pray for all;" the other, "I fight for all." At the bottom, in the center, and dressed in the common, coarse garb which is his wont, stood the working man, and, with a very dolorous expression, he said, "I pay for all." How true—how suggestiv! One of our state comptrolers told us the same thing a few years ago, when he said that labor eventually paid all the taxes.

The representations here given show us plainly that the workingman is the real Atlas who bears the world on his shoulders.

No wonder that we are so frequently called upon to see him crushed, bent, thwarted, contorted and distorted—how can it be otherwise? Nor is it wonderful that the governments and aristocracies of European countries speak of the working classes as the lower orders; nor, from the figure at which we hav been looking, does it seem at all inappropriate, as they would require either great cunning or great strength, or both, to rise to the upright position and stature of man with such dreadful weight on their shoulders. And many of them realize both their position and its causes, for in one of their songs they say:

We are low, we are low.
We are very, very low.

They are not considered too low to weave cloth, but almost too low to wear it.

Each of the figures under consideration represents a man who might, had he been taken at birth and placed in the necessary conditions, hav been made a king, a beggar, a thief, or any one of the intermediate characters composing society.

It is usually conceded that the foundation of society rests on its homes. Homes are not merely four brick or wooden walls, but places where men with their families can meet and associate in ease and comfort. That, however, is impossible so long as men work ten hours a day, most of them having to spend half an hour in the morning in going to their work, and the same time in the evening in returning from it, as being thus exhausted by continuous exertion they will be unable either to enjoy social communion with their families, or perform the political duties which devolve on the citizens of a republic, if it is to retain, even nominally, the name of a republic.

RUTH BRETTELL.

Mr. Heywood in Deeper Trouble.

POLICE DEPARTMENT OF THE CITY OF BOSTON.
OFFICE OF CITY PRISON, BASEMENT OF COURT HOUSE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: After a hard week's work away from home, just returning to my family, I was arrested yesterday afternoon at Princeton depot, and brought back to Boston, and am in this city cellar. Vice-Society Henry Chase, who has dogged my steps for years with decoys, entered the complaint. It is the old "offense," of course, of alleged "obscenity." After Attorney-general Devens, Carl Schurz, President Hayes, Judge Nelson, Judge Pitman, hav recognized my right of opinion and called off the hounds, they are again unleashed and baying for my blood! Before, two United States cases came first, then the state case. In all three I was vindicated. From 1884 till yesterday we had a lull; now Vice Society vengeance again pursues me! The plan seems to hav been to arrest me Saturday night so as to be sure and hav me imprisoned over Sunday, at least making the arrangement of bail as difficult as possible. The case will be called in the police court here to morrow, and the day of the preliminary trial fixed. What amount of intelligence I shall meet in Boston, in judge and jury, is yet to be seen.

Boston, May 11, 1 A M., Y L. 18.

7 P M, SUNDAY.—Am bailed out and expect to go home to-morrow. This is a state case; possibly a United States case may also be sprung on me. The climax has come. E. H. HEYWOOD.

The Leavening of Providence, R. I.

The past week two notable events hav occurred in Providence, R. I., marking a change of sentiment in the direction of Liberalism auspicious in the extreme. The school committee by a unanimous vote abrogated the clause of the by-laws which required that the public schools be opened in the morning by reading a portion of the Bible or by prayer. There had been no special agitation of the matter; the action seems to hav been taken by reason of that change incident to the spirit of the age which is so rapidly disintegrating old theological ideas and the polity which is their outcome. Probably the opposition of the Catholics to our public school system has had much influence in this direction, that the school system may be on a basis which shall disarm their criticisms religion-wise. The use of the Bible in our schools has been one of the main objections raised by the Catholics, and a constant plea for parochial schools dominated by the church. The Bible shot out, we stand on much better ground, and will be in a position to meet this school question which at no distant day must come up for discussion and solution.

The ulterior claim of the Catholics will be for a share of the school money to apply to the support of their parochial schools. When this claim is made, if our public school system is on a strictly secular basis, its friends will then occupy the ground of vantage. Then we can fall back on the fundamental idea of our nation, that church and state must be absolutely divorced, which of course will apply to our schools. Theological ideas hav no business in a school. If they get there, then let the adherents of those ideas foot the bills and leave the public funds alone.

The other notable event is the opening of the public library on Sundays. The trustees hav decided to make the library accessible a good portion of the day. Possibly this may cause some squirming among the bigots, who may seek to reverse the decision. Should they do so they will fail, for the public mind has become so Liberalized it will meet the issue fearlessly. Freethought is revolutionary, and its influence, though sometimes checked, cannot be extirpated.

WM. FOSTER, JR.

Providence, R. I.

Victor Hugo's Works On the Index Expurgatorius.

Judge Davidson, sitting in the supreme court of Ottawa, Ont., gave judgment last week in the case of Tache against Cadieux & Derome. This was an action taken by Mr. Tache, private secretary to Secretary of State Chapleau, against Cadieux & Derome, booksellers of Montreal, on account of their refusal to carry out a contract for the importation of Victor Hugo's works. The morality of Victor Hugo's works was attacked, and several important points bearing on the relativ authority of the church and the state were raised in the case. The defendants pleaded that they are Catholic booksellers, and are well known to sell books only permitted by the religious authorities of the Roman Catholic church; that plaintiff represented Hughes's edition of Victor Hugo to be a permissible book, and by his artifices deceived defendants; that this edition was not in their catalog, and that some of the works contained in it are immoral, subversiv of the principles of society, and forbidden by the church. Judge Davidson in his opinion says:

In support of the allegation that some of the works included in this edition are forbidden to members of the church to which the contracting parties belong, the evidence of several ecclesiastics was taken. It appears reasonably certain that "Notre Dame de Paris," "Les Miserables," and "Le Pape" are to be found in the index librorum prohibitorum. Let the fact be granted, can it affect a civil contract? To say yes would be to lay down the principle that the congregation de l'index, or the ecclesiastical authority of any other church, would hav the power as between the members of its own communion, to interpret, qualify, or even annul contracts. As between members of different religions these courts might become the battle-grounds for the theologians. In France the Congregation de l'index has never, so far as I am aware, at least, within time sufficiently modern to be worthy of practical reference, been recognized as a law-giving authority. To enforce its decrees with threats is now unlawful. What, I take it, the courts hav to deal with in the maintenance of contracts is not the conscience of the individual, but that great public conscience which quickens and gives life to the body of the civil law, whose interpreters we are now. A contract with an unlawful consideration has no effect, and (C. C. 900) "the consideration is unlawful when it is prohibited by law, or is contrary to good morals or public order." The clear duty of a court is to giv universal application to this article of our code—that is, to so interpret it as that the interpretation will not vary because of the persons concerned, but be broad enough to cover all contracts of like classes, no matter who the contracting parties may be. To generalize in this fashion is easy enough, but to attempt a definition of the generic expression "good morals" is another matter.

What is "contrary to good morals?" There are works so wanton in their language, so evident in their purpose, and so violently repugnant to public morality that in their presence definitions become unnecessary. No person, however, pretends that charges such as these can be brought against the writings of Victor Hugo. I hav, therefore, sought to reach some clear and positiv conception of what in its more limited senses the expression "contrary to good morals" means. There are many things morally wrong which are not legally wrong, and care must be taken to judge between the parties according to purely legal rules and definitions. The question in a given law is not simply whether the publication be immoral, but whether it is sufficiently so to enable the criminal law to punish it as such (Pollock Contracts, No. 270). If, then, we seek for what an indictment requires, we find that it has to charge the accused with "devising, contriving, and intending to corrupt morals."

Judged by this, and, indeed, if need be, by a far stricter standard, Victor Hugo's works cannot be condemned as an "unlawful consideration" for a contract. Only two of his books hav been filed in the cause, the prose romance of "Notre Dame" and "Les Chansons des mers et des bois," a collection of lyric verse. I am not to presume anything against his other works. Even in the two specifically impugned only two or three extracts are challenged, but it is said that these are enough to taint the whole production. That Hugo has written things which marred his genius, and has committed himself to views which many men would repudiate, are undeniable facts, but all the same he was a great writer, poet, and dramatist, and an imposing central figure in the nineteenth-century literature of France.

No one can read his works without agreeing with this moderate praise of what he was and what he felt: "In his moral nature we shall find much that is strong, elevated, and tender—a true passion for France, a true sympathy for the poor and oppressed, a true fondness for children." Another eminent writer declares that "it may be asserted without the least fear of contradiction that Victor Hugo will hold to all posterity the position of the greatest poet and one of the greatest prose writers in France." One of the reverend witnesses for the defense spoke of his works as being "magnifique au point de vue litteraire." They are to be found in all secular public libraries, and selections from them appear in text-books. Neither during his life nor since his death in 1885 has any court been sought to hold that any of the works of Victor Hugo were against public law or public morals, or were written for the corruption of the public conscience. His magnificent genius applied itself to loftier, if sometimes mistaken, purposes. It is by these tests that the case must be judged. As well might the works of Racine or Chateaubriand or Lamartine or Byron or Swinburne or many of the earlier classical writers of France and England be challenged as not susceptible of creating valid civil obligations because they sometimes paint the weaknesses and facts of human nature in words of greater passion or greater realism than some might think desirable or necessary.

I hold the contract to be a good one. For reasons which I need not now enter upon, but which will appear in the formal judgment, the demand is reduced to $700, and for that amount judgment goes with costs.

Woman and Dogma.

From the Woman's Journal.

To those who believe that truth is only to be discovered by open and frank discussion, it is encouraging that a woman's journal is brave enough to permit some plain speaking in regard to the Bible.

Not that even the most radical utterance on this question need alarm anyone. Pure religion and undefiled depends upon belief in no theory concerning any book. And for their comfort, let all women who call themselvs Christians remember that Christ made not a single dogma, and never even mentioned Adam nor Eve, nor the garden of Eden.

Even so conservativ a man as Bishop Watson, in so conservativ a time as the early part of this century, declared, "Whoever is afraid of submitting any question, civil or religious, to the test of free discussion, seems to me to be more in love with his own opinions than with the truth." And above all things is it necessary for women to hold this free discussion; for overwhelming proof can be given that it is the use of certain dogmas, backed up by the pretended authority of inspiration, that once fixed women in an inferior position in the church, and that still keeps them in a state of subjection to-day.

In every country where Bibles are used, we see a similar spectacle; priests declaiming against reason, declaring their dogmas based on an infallible book, and exhorting women to "believe," without sufficient investigation; and everywhere we see similar results,—men ruling and women obeying. But slavery of the mind is the most dangerous of all tyrannies; for if it givs even a mere semblance of liberty to its victims, it thereby lulls them into ignominious content with their degraded state, and they do not pursue real liberty, because they are deluded by its shadow into a vain fancy that they hold the substance. This is the case with millions in America. The great host of women and priests to-day, persistently clinging to worn-out dogmas and creeds, turning their eyes persistently away from new facts, these are the clogs upon the wheels of true progress. And this is why not only thoughtful men, but intellectual women also, often oppose placing political power in the hands of any women, while the vast majority are puppets in the hands of those who will neither think themselvs, nor, if they can help it, allow others to do so. To place legal power in such hands, they fear, will threaten a return of civilization to those dark ages when "faith" completely overpowered reason. History is full of such backslidings, and safety will never be assured until women hav become trained to perfect freedom of thought.

When women know enough to use the Bible for what it really is, a collection of books, good, bad, and indifferent, written at different times, by independent authors, each responsible for his own utterance, collected together nobody knows exactly when nor by whom, although there are various surmises; still full of mistakes, as well as much spiritual beauty of thought—with such a theory there is no quarrel. But to take the Bible as one whole, inspired book, and "claim it for woman suffrage," is like trying to claim the whole history of the United States as proving the eternal freedom and equality of the negro. "Facts are agin it." One of the passages in the Constitution proves that the men who wrote that said, "All men are created free and equal," but many other passages in our history show that we were not altogether illogical in basing the right of slavery upon that which is woven into all our history—the Bible. So we may take a passage here and there from several books in the Bible, showing that the man who wrote this or that had advanced views about women. Such stray passages can be found in all Bibles, even that oldest one of all, the Rig-Veda. But the women of India know as well as the women of America that their Bible, as a whole, does not admit that women are men's equals. It is expounded to them from house to house by priests who hav an interest in keeping women in due subjection. And there is no power on earth like the clutch of a man who rules a woman by her superstition. Rammohun Roy, the modern Luther of India, labored in vain to make his own mother see the truth in the Rig-Veda through his eyes. Although she forgave his heretical handling of their sacred book before she died, she remained to the last a devout believer in the priests and their theory of inspiration.

When we come to our sacred book, how can any student of the Bible claim that there is no positiv evidence that Eve was punished for her sin, so long as Paul is quoted in pulpits from Dan to Beersheba as saying: "Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection, for I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence, for Adam was first formed and then Eve, and Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression; notwithstanding, they shall be saved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety."

It must not be forgotten that Paul was bred in the Jewish school, where such teaching as this was in vogue: "If any comparison could be drawn between Eve and Adam, she stood to him in the same relation of beauty as does a monkey to a man;" or this: "God at first created Adam with a long tail; but afterward, considering him attentivly, he thought he would look better without it; resolving, however, not to lose anything that he had made, he cut it off and formed it into a woman; hence the sex derive their low and inferior nature." The Jews, we see, did not consider the Eve story so "inspired" that its inspiration could not be added to. The religious writings of the Jews, the epistles of Paul and Tertullian, and the sermons and commentaries of all the church fathers, even down to Bishop Bowman and the vast majority of both Protestant and Catholic priests to-day, furnish one continuous mass of indisputable evidence that woman is supposed to rest under a peculiar curse for having been the arch-conspirator with Satan for the introduction of sin into the world "Wives, submit; wives, be obedient; wives, be subject; wives, be silent," is the never-ending burden of the whole refrain. It saturates our poetry, poisons our law; it has led the church she has always supported to deny at one time that woman had a soul; it still leads the law of the land to refuse her the ownership of her child. For how can a silent, submissiv, obedient subject hav any right that might conflict with the will of her heaven-appointed head?

Willfully to close our eyes to this fact is to imitate the foolish ostrich, which hides its head in the sand to get rid of the enemy it does not wish to see. This is why I say it is women's cowardly superstition which binds them. The enlightened women—when they become a majority—will not need to ask for their freedom; they will simply take it. The enlightened mother will not rear a son who, with Bible in hand, will hurl Pauline texts at her head, as a reason why she should eternally withhold her hand from whatsoever it found to do in any field. When enlightened mothers send the right kind of sons to legislature and Congress, such sons will hav learned that it "is not good for man to be alone" in public, any more than in domestic life. And we shall not hav government hobbling along like the lop-sided animal whom a vivisectionist has deprived of half its brain.

It would be easy to giv a long list of extracts from the church fathers and our modern ministers and priests showing the deadly influence which for nearly two thousand years has done its utmost to humiliate women. I do not accuse these men of consciously wrong motivs; there is very little of that in the world. Our worst evils hav arisen from an ignorance that betrayed men into wrong habits of thought, from which superstition would not release them, until some outside power administered an electric shock to the intellect. Such a shock Jesus and Paul gave to the Jewish church; but again men settled down into ruts from which they were forcibly torn by Luther; and now the time has come to make patent new truths which this century has revealed.

A VIRGINIA WOMAN.

Lectures and Meetings.

MR. J. M. L. BABCOCK, of Boston, will speak on "The Extinction of Usury" at the Liberal Club, May 16th.

W. F. JAMIESON is yet lecturing in Iowa, and will probably remain in that state until July 1st. Address at Des Moines, Ia.

MR. GEORGE H. DAWES writes from North Yamhill, Ore.: "I wish to say to the Liberal friends in eastern Oregon and Idaho that it will be impossible for me to fill my engagements this summer. I may be able to do so this fall, but at present my health and strength will not admit my risking the long stage rides that would be necessary to fill my appointments. I am sorry I was obliged to disappoint the friends this spring, and yet hope that I may, some day, hav the pleasure of meeting you."

Discouraged as to the Women.

From the London Freethinker.

THE TRUTH SEEKER gives as its cartoon for April 12th, the figure of a Christian maiden clinging to a cross in the water, hard by the rocks of superstition. Priestly sharks are playing around her as the Freethought boat approaches and offers her relief. She holds to the wooden cross with such fervent devotion that it is doubtful if she will accept the proffered help.

Communications.

The Question of the Day.

In Pope Leo's late affectionate address to the American people we find this peculiar sentence: "Under your Constitution religion has perfect liberty and is a growing power." How many wonder what the pope's ideas of "perfect liberty" are! He certainly did not hav a very high estimation of "perfect liberty" when the ceremonies of the Bruno statue were taking place. What is "perfect liberty" to the Catholic church? Is it the liberty of the Dark Ages—the liberty to again use the fagot and the rack? Is it the liberty to control the affairs of nations? Has not the Catholic interpretation of "perfect liberty" ever been, Might makes right?

American men and women, awake to the pertinent issues of the day. Every lover of freedom and equity must feel a sense of awe when he sees the familiarity the Catholic church is holding with this country. Serpent-like a great power has arisen in this country, threatening the very life of our nation. It seeks by secret and collusiv methods to undermine and destroy the blood-bought freedom our forefathers hav handed down to us. It has ever been the relentless foe of independence and liberty; ever trying to control the destiny of nations and men. The time to strike the deadly blow for the total separation of church and state is now, while it is in its infancy. Allow this power to once gain control of our public schools, or even a partial management of the same, and our country is in imminent danger. Its tiger clutch cannot be released. Its dark blot on the mind cannot be erased. So avaricious for power, it cannot be expected to yield when it controls the means to resist restraint. To make a prophecy, the pope's recent letter is no more nor less than a detectiv of sentiment coming across the waters to ascertain if the United States is not a more appropriate place for the Vatican. O sun of knowledge, shine upon the record of the past! Giv the American people the power to read the undertone of the pope's recent message. It comes in the guise of liberty, but bears still the revengeful specter of the past, the dead ghost of the Dark Ages. The Catholic church already wields a telling power in our political machinery, and it is this fact, no doubt, that enthuses Pope Leo with such an affectionate regard for our nation. Let us repeat the words of an illustrious general, "Put none but Americans on guard to-night." So let none but true and tried sons of liberty stand at the post of honor to-day, and all is well. It is not a secret by any means that politicians in our day yield their direction to the dictates of the Catholic church. Judges forsake the grandest principles of right to favor this power that is trying to suck the lifeblood from our nation. Parochial schools hav been erected by this power and the public money appropriated for their use, while the public schools hav been discontinued in Catholic districts. What effrontery in the face of a free nation! A small offense in the face of justice and liberty only opens the way for more extensiv privileges.

This tyrannical power has tried to thwart the ends of justice for centuries. Its career has been a record of tyranny and oppression. Its hands are steeped in the blood of freedom, and the mangled forms of liberty lie beneath its feet. It is for you as American citizens, as lovers of justice, to deal the fatal blow to this selfish and despotic hierarchy, to make your earnest rebuke against this encroachment on our grandest principles, this invasion against the foundation of our republican government. Let each and every one labor for the preservation of our Union from sectarian wrongs and the protection of our inherent rights.

O brave illustrious dead
Who fought and struggled and bled
That we should hence be free,
Arise from out thy sacred tomb,
Dispel the darkness and the gloom
Surrounding liberty.

Richland, S. D. LOUIS N. CRILL, JR.

Is "Hell's Half Acre" in Kansas or Missouri?

Though living within forty miles of that dangerous place, I am not sure whether Brother C. H. Greene, of Rochester, Mich., is right or not. But about one thing he is both right and wrong—Kansas City is in Kansas, it is also in Missouri. It is slung across the state line like a pair of old-fashioned saddle-bags over the spine of a poor mule. The shrewd inhabitants hav used this fact to their own benefit or injury according to point of view. Gambling is forbidden in Missouri and whisky drinking permitted. Whisky drinking is forbidden in Kansas and gambling allowed. (The New England love of gain and the Virginia love of pleasure here crop out respectivly in the states that descend from them.) The enterprising borderers build "saddle-bag" houses with a long room running across the state line, a well-filled bar in one end and a gambling den in the other. The customer sits down in Kansas and gambles till he is dry, when he walks over into Missouri and calls for "old bourbon," returns to Kansas and resumes his "little game." So said and undoubtedly true, though I hav never been in one.

Though not interested in anybody's "boom," I will say that a mighty city is growing there on the two sides of the Kaw and Missouri rivers. The Kansas City, Kan., real estate agents publish facts showing that most of the meat packing and manufacturing and wholesaling is on the Kansas side of Union avenue. Then the moralists, woman suffragists, etc., like Brother Greene, want to put Hell's Half Acre off on us poor Missourians! "Tote fair," Brother Greene. My impression is strong that the piece of ground in question is on the Kansas side. To giv all the enterprise to Kansas and all the wickedness to Missouri would, as Uncle Toby said, "be setting one sadly over the head of another."

We hav two great cities on our respectiv eastern and western borders. One has "slopped over" into Kansas and one into Illinois. One summer when in Vermont I read in a paper how a desperate mulatto in East St. Louis had fought and wounded policemen who tried to capture him and his gang for robbing freight cars. Then followed the editor's remarks on lawlessness in Missouri, references to the James boys, etc. It was enough to make a Missourian tear his hair to read such a condemnation of his state because the police in an Illinois city across the river from our city of the same name couldn't manage a few "yallah niggahs" better than that. GEO. WILSON.

Lexington, Mo.

Talmage's Pagoda.

In the great city of churches over the creek from New York a pagoda is going up as fast as the workmen can lay the brick and place the stone. Among the latter is the old cobble-stone that was imported from Mars Hill when Mr. Paul talked to the heathen. It is perhaps fortunate for the acrobat Talmage that stones cannot talk, for in that case the Tabernacle people might get a good dose of heathen sense, and leave Talmage nothing but his legs and arms to operate with.

A great organ is being built by George Jardine & Son for the Brooklyn pagoda. It is to contain 110 stops, and will cost $30,000. It will be able to make noise enough to discount Major-General Joshua's concert before the walls of Jericho, and it is hinted in strictly religious circles that Talmage actually secured several of the rams' horns used on that memorable occasion by the Jewish national guard, which will be placed in the organ, and which when sounded will make all the modern Jerichobins fall prostrate as their old walls did when General Joshua executed his great military movement.

But with all this, it appears that Talmage has got his eye on the heathen Chinese. The organ will contain a "Chinese gong," whose celestial echoes will reverberate through the pagoda, and knock out the rams' horns in one round. This heavenly racket used to be heard in our hotels, but as its celestial beauties were not duly appreciated by the rattle-brained public, it has been adopted by Talmage as a means to knock into the stupid heads of his devotees what it had knocked out of everybody else—viz., their brains and all appreciation for harmonious music. It will be a drawing card for John Chinaman, however, and they will be easily captured by his leg and arm feats. They will digest the fine cardinal points of Calvin like an ancient Puritan, and enjoy hell on its original basis. The Christianizing of China is now to be an assured fact, and Talmage with his gong is going to do it.

Not only this—but in order to interest the military of the present day a series of drum effects will be introduced. There will be a bass drum, the long roll, and the kettle drum; also a chime of bells (doubly blessed), and with the rest of the organ, if there is not enough confusion among the worshipers at the pagoda to knock the devil out of them, then Talmage need not try again.

But Talmage has missed a good deal. He ought to hav got hold of the harp that old Davy used when he danced in clogs before the Lord, and the loud timbrel that Miriam used when the Jews got out of the damp of the Red sea, or he might hav imported an angel or two from the land of bliss, but the latter might be objected to by the commissioners of immigration on the ground that it was pauper labor and not permitted to land in New York. At all events Talmage is enterprising, and he might hav found a way to get around all of the above, and then what a glorious racket there would be in the pagoda. W. A. T.

Freethought in Sweden.

We always knew there was a good deal of determination to be found in Sweden, yet the reading of Fritankaren No. 8 informed us that our guess had been too low. There was more of it than we had estimated.

The 1st of April a deputation, consisting of Captain Thomson, Messrs. C. A. Magnussen, A. V. Lindenau, and P. Jansson were admitted to the august presence of Crown Prince Karl, to whom Captain Thompson spoke as follows:

Your royal highness! As a committee appointed by Utilistiska Samfundet, we hereby present to his royal majesty a protest made by all classes of society against that persecution of the authorities which manifests itself in the imprisonment of him or them that make a public confession of private convictions; convictions, perhaps, at variance with one derived from our ancestors' state church creed, but founded upon the results of an impartial investigation and the conclusions of science. These opinions are held by thousands, and acknowledged and expressed by the majority of scientific, educated men and women, and indorsed by over three thousand of his majesty the king's subjects, who in proof of this hav respectfully attached their signatures.

Hoping his majesty the king will protect and favor the cause of liberty of conscience, we confidently deliver these protests in the hands of your royal highness as appointed regint pro tempore.

The protests thus delivered were two. The first, signed by 5,338 Utilists, explained that the signers indorsed the views held by Lennstrand, and in consequence demanded either his liberation or that they receive the same punishment inflicted upon him.

The other protest, signed by 3,821 persons, petitioned in the name of justice and liberty of conscience, that the king liberate Lennstrand.

Taking into consideration that the petitions hav been out but a couple of weeks, the result is highly satisfactory.

It is rather strange to observe that every judgment by the supreme court against Lennstrand has been prónounced with one majority vote. Of course we cannot tell with certainty how this one vote is secured, but it looks like rather crooked business, remembering, as we needs must, that the ecclesiastical authorities since times long past hav been experts in buying souls. G. N.

About Certain Facts.

[Mr. E. C. Walker requests us to copy this article from Fair Play.]

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 3d, Mr. Macdonald, quoting our reflections upon the conduct of Ed. W. Chamberlain in connection with Mr. Harman, adds:

This matter is explained by Mr. Chamberlain in his statement, and we can but think that Mr. Walker did Mr. Chamberlain a gross injustice in his comments.

In that article in No. 68 we said that we would cheerfully withdraw so much of our criticism of Mr. Chamberlain as referred to that person's failure to reach Topeka in time if it should be shown that Mr. Harman had not made it clear to him that Messrs. Overmeyer and Clemens had definitly withdrawn from the case. In his TRUTH SEEKER article Mr. Chamberlain makes statements which show that he knew that the Topeka attorneys had withdrawn from the case. So we hav nothing to retract. In direct connection with this, he remarks that he did all he could by correspondence to bring about a reconciliation between Mr. Harman and Overmeyer and Clemens. Yes, by graciously intimating that these gentlemen could do much to assist him! That is, they, the old and tried attorneys in the case, could occupy positions under his majesty. Is it any wonder that this was the last straw that broke the back of the camel of Mr. Clemens's patience?

THE TRUTH SEEKER finds the accounts given in Fair Play and Lucifer contradictory. Probably the only really important discrepancy is indicated in these two extracts. We said:

Colonel Bradley now outlined the theory of the defense. He said that they would maintain, First, the articles were not deposited to be mailed as charged in the indictment, and, Second, if they were so deposited, then Harman was insane, as no man, whose intentions were good, would attempt to disseminate such unutterably filthy matter.

Lucifer puts it this way:

The notes given elsewhere show that I employed Colonel Bradley, of Topeka, to assist me in the defense. His line of defense was:

1. That the indicted articles were not obscene within the meaning of the law.
2. The defendant, Moses Harman, did not deposit the offending articles in the post-office.
3. On the question of the right relations of the sexes, the defendant is a monomaniac—is insane.

Our account is strictly correct. Mr. Harman's partial deafness explains his failure to clearly understand the low-toned opening statements of his counsel. And aside from this, Mr. Macdonald must see that in the nature of things it is not probable that Mr. Brady claimed that the articles were not obscene within the meaning of the statute. Such a plea would in no way harmonize with the claim of insanity which he set up. In fact, it would completely nullify it. The whole aim of Bradley's long and vicious and insulting examination of his client was to show that the articles published were obscene and demoralizing. With this went his examination of the government's witnesses, showing by their testimony that Mr. Harman was personally a pure and honest man. In brief, therefore, his theory was: These articles were very obscene and demoralizing, and Mr. Harman holds very unusual views, but personally he is pure and honest, therefore he is insane, a monomaniac on the sex question.

THE TRUTH SEEKER says in its closing comments:

But the only thing, it seems to us, to do is for those who hav egged Mr. Harman on in his linguistic crusade to come to the front and help him out of the scrape by seeing to it that Lucifer is kept going and that its editor suffers as little as possible. It will be too bad for him to bear the burden which ought to be shared by a good many more. Vicarious atonement never was and never will be a righteous scheme.

Very good; our view, precisely. Hence our criticism of Mr. Chamberlain, for no one has been more activ in the "egging on" business than this same person. He has heartily approved of the very articles to which THE TRUTH SEEKER has frequently objected; he advised the publication of the O'Neill letter (see No. 68), and in every other possible way he has encouraged Mr Harman to keep "on in his linguistic crusade." That it would be useless for Mr. Chamberlain to attempt to shirk moral responsibility for advising Mr. Harman to print the O'Neill letter, by making the plea that he had not read it, is self-evident. Prudent counselors do not giv hit-and-miss advice of that kind. But since the time of its publication in Lucifer, and long after he had read it, he has written another publisher a letter enthusiastically applauding him for publishing it in his paper, and backs his words with $10. We should be much pleased to hav Mr. Macdonald tell us candidly what he thinks of this "egging on" performance of the New York attorney. When we, the co-defendant and the daughter of Mr. Harman, protested against certain articles, this very man Chamberlain "sat down" upon us emphatically and did all he could to render our advice of no effect. Yes, let Mr. Chamberlain and his confreres put their hands deep down in their pockets and help keep Lucifer going, but also let them leave the conduct of the defense to the cool-headed and able lawyers who were once forced to withdraw from it chiefly because of the very "egging on" of which Mr. Macdonald speaks so tersely and truly. E. C. WALKER.

LILIAN HARMAN.

Paternal Government.

From the New York Sun.

A very objectionable manifestation of that tendency toward paternal government, which has so strongly stamped itself upon the legislation of the Republican party, is found in a bill lately introduced in the House of Representativs by Mr. Sweney, of Iowa. This bill provides for the exclusion from the mails of "any pamphlet, magazine, newspaper, story paper, or other paper devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or accounts of criminal deeds, or pictures and stories of immoral deeds, lust, or crime."

Under such a bill it would be within the power of any politician in the post-office department to stop the circulation of any newspaper of the opposing party. All that would be necessary would be to find in the paper a report of some crime or some immoral deed, and then its exclusion could be enforced. No matter what the general character of the paper, it would be at the mercy of hostil officials. The New York Tribune and the New York Herald, two journals of opposit politics against which no honest or intelligent objection could be raised under this head, would be alike subject to interference and punishment should this bill become a law.

If any newspaper offends against public morality, let it be dealt with by the regular criminal authorities and the courts of the country. To convert the post-office into an extraordinary tribunal for such a purpose, and to make every little postmaster a judge to suppress the liberty of printing which the Constitution guarantees, is an intolerable proposition.

We hav too much paternal government already, and Mr. Anthony Comstock is already too much of a grand inquisitor. No law to enlarge or intensify his power is admissible. Hands off.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS IN DANGER.

From the Boston Daily Globe.

The Constitution of the United States guarantees a free press, but there are numerous statesmen now engaged in the work of tinkering the laws who can not rest without interfering in all the ways they can think of with the freedom of printing and circulating the news.

One of the latest schemes of this kind is the bill introduced in Congress by Mr. Sweeney of Iowa. It provides for the exclusion from the mails of "any pamphlet, magazine, newspaper, story paper, or other paper devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or accounts of criminal deeds, or pictures and stories of immoral deeds, lust, or crime."

Such a law would inevitably be strained and perverted so as to put it within the power of the post-office officials, or of a single one of them, to interfere outrageously with the liberty of the press. At a time of political excitement some superserviceable party henchman might stop the circulation of any of the great journals of the country by finding something in it which he might construe as a breach of this law.

There are laws enough now against printing and circulating immoral literature. We are in favor of their enforcement. But let the accused persons hav the benefit of trial, and do not constitute every postmaster an imperial censor of the press, empowered to say what shall or shall not go through the mails. As the New York Sun well says upon this point: "If any newspaper offends against public morality, let it be dealt with by the regular criminal authorities and the courts of the country. To convert the post-office into an extraordinary tribunal for such a purpose and to make every little postmaster a judge to suppress the liberty of printing which the Constitution guarantees, in an intolerable proposition."

It is time to call a halt on these Anthony Comstockian schemes to curtail the liberty of the press. The constitutional guarantee must be preserved. Kill that Sweeney bill.

Christianity and Education.

From the New York Times.

The question is whether Christianity shall be taught in the public schools, and, if so, what Christianity and how much. Toward the answer to this question the assertion that Christianity is part of the law of the land takes us a very little way. In England, from which our courts hav borrowed the expression, it has a definit meaning. It means Christianity as formulated by the Established church of the country, even including the denunciation in the Articles of the "vain talk" of "certain Anabaptists." Where the church and the state are one, the doctrin taught in the state schools is the doctrin of the church. But how does it help us in considering whether the common schools shall giv religious instruction to be told that Christianity is part of the law of the land? No lawbook lays down what the Christian doctrins are in which courts hav a judicial belief, or what doctrins are essential and what unessential. The judges who hav delivered the doctrin hav been compelled to generalize it. One of the most impressiv statements of it, that quoted by Mr. Jay from Daniel Webster, is also one of the vaguest: "Christianity, Christianity independent of sects and parties, general, tolerant Christianity, is the law of the land."

This is doubtless impressiv, but it scarcely affords the material for a curriculum of religious instruction in the secular schools. Where is "Christianity independent of sects and parties" to be found? Suppose we admit that general, tolerant Christianity should be taught in the common schools, though no other part of the law of the land is so taught, where is unsectarian Christianity to be found? Is there any Christian authority which is not also a sectarian authority? The Methodist pastor and the Catholic priest might admit each other to be Christians, though each of them would probably hav so many qualifications to make that the Christianity of the other would appear to be as unimportant as it was general. Each of them, at any rate, professes and calls himself a Christian, and each would hav as good a right as the other to say how much Christianity and what Christianity the common schools should teach. Everybody knows that they would not in the least agree about it, even though they professed to make it as "general" as possible. The Roman Catholic would insist that "the simple reading of the scripture without note or comment," which seems to be the ultimatum of the evangelical Protestants, was either too much or too little, and certainly was not a proper teaching of general Christianity. We can imagin the horror, on the other hand, with which the Methodist would recoil from any scheme of religious instruction that the Roman Catholics would propound.

As there is, practically speaking, no unsectarian Christianity, the only resource would be to invite all the Christian sects to unite in preparing a suitable course of religious instruction, and this it is certain that they could not agree upon. Yet their rights as citizens are precisely the same. Anglican Christianity is part of the law of England, but no American court has yet decided that either Protestantism or Catholicism is part of the law of this country, any more than any court has denied that both Protestantism and Catholicism are entitled to be considered forms of Christianity. Yet no religious instruction can be given in the schools upon which Catholics and Protestants will agree, although all Catholics and a limited number of Protestants agree that some religious instruction should be given. If the majority of the voters could be brought to this opinion, the division of the school fund which the Roman Catholics desire would be the natural solution of the difficulty. We believe, and we believe that a majority of the voters believe, that this would be a grievous public calamity. The only way to avert it is to hold that the instruction of the common schools should be exclusivly secular, and that anybody who insists upon the necessity or desirableness of adding religious instruction to it shall be at liberty to add it in his own way and at his own cost, but not in the common schools nor at the cost of the taxpayers. A man whose money is taken from him by the state to administer religious instruction which he disapproves is certainly not in the enjoyment of the religious liberty guaranteed to him by the Constitution. To quote, in justification of this abstraction, that Christianity is part of the law of the land is idle, meaningless, and exasperating.

A Noted Man is Gone.

From the Eau Claire, Wis., Evening Free Press of April 30th.

Marcus Thrane, father of Dr. A. D. H. Thrane, died this morning at the residence of his son, a stroke of paralysis being the cause of death.

Marcus Thrane was a man of no common order and of no common history. He was seventy-two years of age, and years ago he passed from activ life; but forty years ago he was a power not only in Norway but by indirect influence in all Europe. He was the originator of what is known as the labor movement in Norway, and was an ardent advocate of republican institutions. Not only hav his labors and sufferings in the cause of human progress enshrined him in the Scandinavian heart, but his name stands as one of the foremost in the roster of brave men who made the intellectual history of the stirring times of '48 and the years immediately succeeding that eventful period—that time of popular ferment, of awakening to new mental life and to new political aspirations. About the year 1850, Marcus Thrane and the reformer Abildgaard were the editors of a labor organ in Norway. Henrik Ibsen was a contributor to the paper, and none of the trio were in the habit of mincing their words. "Incendiary" utterances brought down the police upon the office, and the sacredness of monarchial institutions was "vindicated" by incarcerating Thrane and Abildgaard for seven years in a penitentiary at hard labor. Ibsen escaped punishment by a shrewd action of the manager of the paper, who, as the police entered, cast a quantity of Ibsen's incendiary documents on the floor and pretended to be busily secreting some innocent papers in a corner. The police were thrown off the scent, and failed to examin the papers on the floor. Thus Ibsen's complicity escaped observation, but Thrane and Abildgaard were imprisoned on general principles as well-known advocates of political progress and the rights of labor. After his release from prison, Thrane sought American soil and has breathed the air of freedom in peace. The work he did in Norway has borne fruit, and today such utterances as those for which he was imprisoned are free as breathing. After coming to America, he for a time published Nye Tid (New Era) at Chicago.

The news of Marcus Thrane's death sped eastward over the wires to-day, and, ere this, the ocean cable has borne it to the scenes of his early struggles.

The following document was found among the papers of the deceased:

MY LAST REQUESTS.

1. I wish to be buried without ministerial service and without religious ceremonies. No funeral sermon must be delivered either at the house or at the grave.

2. Only outspoken Freethinkers can follow me to the grave.

3. My coffin shall be of the plainest and cheapest kind.

4. Inasmuch as many of my friends hav assured me that after my death a large and magnificent monument will be erected to my memory, and inasmuch as monuments hav been erected for many more unworthy than myself, so to prevent such honors post festum, I hereby declare it my most decided wish that no such monument in memory of me shall be erected after my death. A very plain iron slab, upon which my name, date of birth and death, are inscribed, is to be placed at my grave.

The above is to be published in Skandinaven and Budstikken. MARCUS MOELLER THRANE.

Born Oct. 14, 1817.
Died ———.

Brotherhood of Moralists.

Report of the Propaganda Committee of the Brotherhood of Moralists, for the month of April, 1890.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

HEADQUARTERS, HANNIBAL, Mo., April 30, 1890.

During the month sixty new members hav been enrolled, and a membership certificate mailed to each. This makes the total number enrolled 1,007. The new members are: From Ohio, 1; Kansas, 2; Michigan, 8; Pennsylvania, 7; Texas, 22; Missouri 4; Colorado, 4; Illinois, 2; Louisiana, 7; New Jersey, 1; New Mexico, 1, and South Dakota, 1.

The friends who hav sent us Liberal papers and encouraging letters are too numerous to mention, but we thank them all, and bespeak a continuation of these favors. The letters do us good, and the papers aid us in our work, and are afterward distributed, we hope to good advantage.

F. H. RAU, Secretary.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Balance from last report	$10 25
L. R. Titus, California	75
Mrs. J. A. Vote, Michigan	50
M. J. Wiley, Illinois	50
W. B. Young, Michigan	1 00
F. B. Moses, Colorado	2 00
Total	$15 00
Expended	4 25
Balance	$10 75

A. R. AYRES, Treasurer.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MAY 17, 1890.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Pictorial Arguments Against the Church.

Additional chapters in the Cartoon Book hav been completed during the past week as follows:

THE LORD'S INSTRUMENTS.
Religious Rule.

SOME BIBLE DOCTRINS AND SOME OF THEIR RESULTS.
Biblical Temperance Statements.
The Same Applied.
The Christian Scheme, from Genesis to the Synoptical Gospels, and the Practical Results (two pictures).
The Authority of the Footpad.
The Wisdom of Solomon.
Human Law and God's Gospels Not the Same.
Result of Faith.
Which Statements Shall We Be Damned for Disbelieving?
Irresponsibility of Christians.
Jesus Paid It All.
A Candidate for Glory—An Old Sinner But a New Saint.
Some Tests for True Believers.
Following Christ.
An Earnest Christian.
A Trial of Faith.
The Faults in Christian Morality (five pictures).
Two Incidents of Two Snow Storms (two pictures).
On the Anxious Seat.
Different Stories of An Alleged Occurrence.

THE CHURCH AND SLAVERY.
The Ghost in the Methodist Churchyard.

PRIESTS IN POLITICS.
The Colossus of New York.
The Political Caliban and the Religious Rogues.

IRELAND AND THE CHURCH.
A Contribution to the Irish Question.
The Churches in Ireland.
The Gospel of Peace in Ireland.
The Trouble with Pat.

THE CHURCH'S IDEA OF CIVILIZATION.
The Gallows One of Christian Civilization's Adjuncts.
What Rome Would Use to Civilize People.

THE USES OF THE CROSS.
Its Evolution.

UNKIND REFLECTIONS UPON THE CHURCH.
Decline of the Papacy in Italy.
The Old Tiger and His Whelps.
The Cry of the Church, "Don't Hurt Our Feelings."

PERSECUTIONS BY THE CHURCH.
The Burning of Bruno.
The Only Thing on Which the Sects Agree.
An Unwelcome Pilgrimage.
When Christians Made the Laws.
Superstition the Same in All Places and Ages.
Banishment of Roger Williams.
Case of Dr. McGlynn—the Church True to Her Record.
Casting Pearls Before Swine.
The Bigotry of Church and State.

Russia.

It may be of service to follow our late citation of the condition of the Russians as exemplification of Christianity's effects, with a few additional particulars of the state of the czar's debased subjects. Late reports of travelers, accounts in journals, and volumes on the subject, supply material.

The supreme ambition of Russia has ever been to develop military preëminence. Yet, after centuries of endeavor in this direction, she has been able to produce but a soldier feeble and uncertain in mind and body, and a mechanical and monetary backing of military operations so wretched that if improvement is not soon made she will be left helpless in her next war with the inventiv and wealthy West. The Russian soldier is described as having "an imperfect physical and mental development." He endures privations well, and in the ranks exhibits bravery, "but he is without natural daring, and when alone is a prey to childish terrors." As to the financial resources of the country, she labors under extravagant war debts, and her currency is vitiated by corruption in its issue and doubt of its worth. Russia's power to borrow has almost ceased. Her people are already taxed beyond their capability; vast irrecoverable arrears defy the efforts of collectors. The universal dishonesty of officials, besides intensifying the sufferings of the people, greatly hightens the difficulties of the government. The time when it could be predicted that Europe would be overrun by Cossacks has passed, never to return. At the time when the prediction was made, the same curse that is still keeping Russia down, the Christian religion, was likewise predominant in the nations of Western Europe. But since then the latter hav largely escaped from its deteriorativ influence, and in just the measure in which each country has done so its population has gained manly resoluteness and invincibility in action, and its national resources hav been developed by what invention and science and enterprise can do when supernatural checks are shaken off.

But however Russia may be lagging behind her Freethinking neighbors in power in military or any other competition, it is to be added that in desire for conquest, in craving directly opposit to her profession of Christlike unaggressivness, she stands unequaled. Notwithstanding her thorough permeation by a religion that is claimed by its advocates to be a promoter of peace, she has ever aimed at the glory of martial victory and spoliation as incomparable with the honors of achievement in the peaceful arts or in science or culture. For generations she has been the unresting coveter and the shameless despoiler of her neighbors. Every nation about her that was by ecclesiasticism and its paralyzing influences kept from acquiring strength superior to her own, has from age to age been made to yield part of its possessions; this rapacity has ceased only now that, as we hav said, a few lands hav acquired Freethought and science and consequent power to forbid the further encroachment of their godly sister. During the years while Christian Russia has been pursuing this course, the Infidels of France, Germany, England, and America hav been announcing, developing, and urging the great principle of universal peace and the federation of mankind.

A good citation to make to Christians arguing that their religion abolished slavery has always been that of the fact that in the hight of Christian faith Europe gave the very birth to a system of slavery the worst the world has known, that of the Africans. A similar instance that may be used in the same connection, is the fact that in Russia serfdom did not exist when Christianity had not entered its borders, while it was during the reign of that belief that it was instituted—viz., in the sixteenth century. And the abolition in 1864 was mainly the work of Tourgeneff, a Freethinking novelist.

The administration of justice in Russia is incredibly corrupt. Government officers can at pleasure arrest or modify the course of justice. A favorable judgment can almost always be obtained by purchase. Appeals are so easily procurable that a wealthy litigant can avert an unacceptable judgment almost indefinitly. The judges are ignorant; the forms and precedents are cumbrous and inaccessible. Until 1862 judicial proceedings were secret. In that year Alexander attempted some reform of the system. He effected a degree of improvement, but the procedure is still so bad that almost no confidence is placed in the courts.

One account of the Russian peasant represents him as "manifesting little desire for the possession of self-government, and no aptitude in its exercise. He seems to be contented with autocratic rule, and not to desire those popular institutions which are the glory of the enlightened Western nations. . . . The people suffer in silence, as if sent by the judgment of heaven, the miseries that the pride or folly of the czar may inflict on them." This type of character is one that students of history and investigating Freethinkers are accustomed to meet. They will readily recognize it as the one that accompanies tutelage by ecclesiastics.

The Russian peasantry remain almost without education. In most country districts not more than one in fifty of the population attends school. Even in towns the artisan who can read and write is exceptionally cultivated. Only the children of the rich receive education. Alexander, a ruler of Liberal tendencies, in the early part of his reign took some measures toward establishing schools, but the institutions were soon discouraged, and then destroyed. Of course no one will find any difficulty in assigning the cause of this uneducated condition of the people. Besides that share of the imputation that must fall to the czar's desire to keep his subjects ignorant that he may tyrannize over them, there is another and a fully equal portion of the blame that must be laid to another class. We know what class subsists on pretensions that are always exposed and overthrown by enlightenment; we know what class has ruled the other countries that are in the same uninstructed state that we hav depicted in Russia; we know what class labors with untiring malignity against all advance in science in our own states and counties and towns and colleges and papers and pulpits.

There is scarcely any intercommunication through Russia. A people so scantily educated naturally do little writing. They receive letters and postal cards at the rate of one annually for each of the population.

The Russian priesthood is perhaps the most ignorant, drunken, and generally debauched known. The young priest is prevented by his superiors from seeing any newspaper. He is debarred from all secular literature. His total instruction is constituted by the theology that has been handed down by the Greek church of the Middle Ages.

Though the resources of Russia are enormous, their development has scarcely begun. Her coalfields in area equal those of Great Britain, but she produces only one million five hundred thousand tons of coal—scarcely one hundredth of the British yield. She has abundant gold, but her processes are so rude that the real capabilities of her mines are unascertained. Her agriculture is so barbarous that it produces but a fraction of what it should. This condition in Russia will be readily classed with the condition that has prevailed in every other Christian land till ecclesiasticism has been deposed, and, with attention turned upon this world instead of the next, intellect has been honored, self-improvement encouraged, and experiment, innovation, and enterprise unbridled for their career of beneficent progress.

Drunkenness, already frightful in its extent and injury, is on the increase. Nearly one-half of the national revenue is obtained from duties on liquor, and the government will not suffer this important source of income to be trifled with. The consumption of vodki, the great intoxicant of the peasant, is systematically and vigorously promoted by the authorities, both civil and ecclesiastical. The church and the state sternly repress any attempt to circulate temperance sentiments.

We may close this pleasant view of Christianity in full operation, by remarking upon the mortuary estate of the Russian people. Russia is naturally a healthier land than England in a like unimproved condition. But while the English hav been draining swamps and discovering hygienic habits for prevention and medicins for cure, the Russians hav been listening to theological balderdash and supplicating saints. So at present the deaths in Russia are fifteen per thousand greater than those in England.

THE Cleveland Plaindealer has this item of information: "According to a Methodist missionary lately arrived from Burmah the Hindoo priests hav adopted a shrewd method of combating the movement to introduce Christianity into Buddhist territory. They hav had Colonel Ingersoll's works translated into the nativ language and circulated to discredit the imported religion."

The Judge and His Victim.

Lucifer, dated May 2d, now edited by Mr. C. L. Swartz, contains Mr. Harman's report of what occurred when he was sentenced by Judge Foster. He quotes the judge's remarks as reported by the daily Topeka Journal, thus:

"He said that the effect of the teachings of Harman was bad, whether he intended so or not; that if intention to commit crime alone should be deemed crime, there would be little need of courts. He said that the course of the prisoner, throughout the trial, had been rebellious and defiant, and that it had not appealed to the leniency and mercy of the court. He had seen circus performers stick their heads into lions' mouths, but he had never seen them hav the temerity to twist the beasts' tails or kick them in the ribs while performing the risky act. (Laughter.) He then sentenced Harman to five years in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $300."

To which Mr. Harman, jailed but not crushed, replies:

"I said, I positivly and absolutely refuse to consider myself a criminal, and therefore refuse to stand up to receive sentence. . . . The sentence was by far the most potent part of the judge's argument. . . . Armed with this argument there was really no need for him to waste time and breath on any other. The sentence proves beyond a shadow of doubt that Foster is right, and all defenders of Lucifer wrong! It is true I maintained that the prosecution was persecution for opinion's sake. . . . If to make a respectful but firm stand for my rights as a citizen, and against what I believe to be encroachments of irresponsible power, and if this conduct lays me open to the charge of being 'rebellious and defiant,' then I plead guilty to said charge; otherwise I plead not guilty. It is true I did not appeal to the 'leniency and mercy of the court,' and for the honor of our common human nature I hope I never shall ask for clemency and mercy from this or any other court, all I ask for is justice! Justice, equity, citizen right, national right, is good enough for me. Giv me justice and I ask nothing more from the officials of this government. . . . When Judge Foster likens himself to a powerful but naturally fierce and unreasoning beast of prey, and when he likens me to a foolhardy circus performer, I prefer that each reader will draw his or her own inferences. I hav given Judge Foster credit for being a reasoning, human being, and not a bloodthirsty, vengeful animal."

The judge likens himself to a beast, but it remains for the spectators of his ignoble performance to form their own opinion as to what kind of a beast he is comparable to. He would hav us regard him as a lion, but Editor Hudson of the Topeka Capital says in plain words that the disguise of the lion has been stripped off, exposing an unmitigated ass; and who can doubt this, in view of Harman's sentence, exhibiting an official in a responsible position, of whom everyone expects fairness and dignity, conducting himself like a New York Whyo on the bench of a petty police court, exposing his personal pique and prejudice, and raising laughter at the expense of his helpless victim. Think of such a man expecting a self-respecting citizen with a clean conscience to cringe before him in hope of mercy. Decent and learned men raised to the dignity of sitting in judgment on the acts of their fellows do not pose as buffoons or liken themselvs to beasts, exult in the possession of power and use it to get square with enemies, or to inflict cruel and inexcusably severe punishment on honorable men. In dignity and all the essentials of manhood Harman is far above Foster, and though the latter compares his action to the fatal crushing power of a lion, it may prove to be merely an asinin display of hoofs.

There are two ways to help Mr. Harman in this matter: one, to get him pardoned; the other to carry the case to a higher court for a reversal of the rulings, decisions, and results of the first fatal trial. We are assured that this latter plan is to be put in operation by Mr. Overmyer, of Topeka, Kan., whom we believe to be the best man who could be engaged for this work, one who is entirely in sympathy with the principle; thoroughly versed in the law, familiar with the abuses which hav occurred under it, and capable of arguing its proper interpretation. No one knows better than he, or can more surely demonstrate to any unprejudiced and really judicial court, the gross injustice of the application of this law against Mr. Harman. Except for unfortunate differences and misunderstandings between him and his client, occurring just before the late trial, he would no doubt hav saved the case by the jury, in spite of spiteful court and prosecutors. If, at this late hour, defeat can be turned to victory by Mr. Overmyer's skilful management of appeal for a reversal of the verdict, though it might be necessary to carry it to the United States Supreme Court, the final result would be a great gain for the principle involved; and pending decision Mr. Harman would be at liberty again. But the cost of this will be considerable, and Mr. Harman's means hav been almost exhausted. It is sufficient, and a good deal more than sufficient, for him to bear the heat and burden of the fray as he does with remarkable patience, and we hope that those who hav been pushing him on in this matter, and especially those who hav criticised our remarks upon the case, will show their zeal and sincerity of profession by helping Mr. Harman financially. Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., big-hearted and earnest in the cause of all oppressed, will receive contributions and see that they are applied for Mr. Harman's benefit. His address is 120 Lexington avenue, New York city.

Mr. Heywood Also in Bonds.

In his letter from the Boston city prison, to be found elsewhere in this issue, Mr. E. H. Heywood fails to inform us of the cause of his latest arrest, and we can only surmise at it; but a surmise which includes the printing of the abominable O'Neill letter will probably not be far out of the way.

If this surmise shall prove to be correct, Mr. Heywood has done a very foolish thing, whatever may be the result of his arrest. There was no more call for such action on his part than there is for his drowning himself because some other Quixotic individual has chosen that form of suicide. The letter is a beastly contribution to a useless symposium, whereat the feasters seem to vie with each other in the consumption of rotten food.

The reprinting of the letter, however, is with Mr. Heywood a question of principle. He believes that he has the right to print anything whatever that he pleases, and to sell, giv, and dispose of it to those who desire it. He is of the individualist school of thinkers, and pushes their logic to its utmost extreme. But he fails to see, or at least to recognize, the collateral issues involved. If he could limit the cost of this publication to himself, he might argue his proposition with more plausibility. But this he can not do. That he has involved a great many more is seen from his desire to use the columns of this paper to make known his predicament—a desire we cheerfully grant, though no one could be more opposed to his undertaking than the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. All his friends are likewise involved, his wife, children, neighbors, patrons of his paper, and so on. It is impossible for a man to confine the cost and effects of his acts to himself, and it is right there that the impracticability of the Anarchistic philosophy develops. It is beautiful in theory, and to oppose it would seem to open the door for majority tyranny, but it has to be opposed until the relation of each individual to the whole number of individuals in the world is clearly defined, and matters so arranged that when one does exactly as he pleases it will affect no one but himself. Mr. Heywood can get assistance from none but the Liberals, and he had no right to involve them in the defense of something they condemn, to the jeopardy of much greater interests. And it is because he can look for no sympathy from others than Liberals, and because Liberals will maintain extreme views rather than see a principle of liberty in the least infringed—because of the possible consequences—that Mr. Heywood should not rashly drag them into a conflict which superficially makes them appear other than they really are. If he had been wantonly attacked, as was D. M. Bennett, the matter would appear in a different light.

We suppose that the pietists are at the bottom of this prosecution, as they are behind about all the tyranny of the world, and whatever opinions we may hold concerning the action of Mr. Heywood, it is certain that through the possibility of punishing him by ecclesiastical mob law, as Mr. Wakeman calls the enforcement of statutes by private societies by means of hired spies, the liberties of a good many more than himself are threatened.

A Strictly Secular Marriage.

A good many of our readers are acquainted with the parties to the following contract, which we find, with comments, in the San Francisco Chronicle:

"A queer document in the marriage contract line, was filed in the recorder's office yesterday. It is as follows:

"SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 30, 1890.

"Recognizing the eternal laws of nature, and that marriage is the right relation of the sexes: recognizing also the natural equality of woman, and believing that her advent upon this planet was the same as that of man, not as recorded in the Christian Bible, and believing in neither the Christian or other gods:

"We by these presents make known to all whom it may concern, we hereby assume the relationship of husband and wife, mutually agree to love and cherish each other through life, if we possibly can.

"In acknowledgment whereof we hav hereunto appended our signatures. H. F. EBERS.
NELLIE J. LENONT.

"GRACE L. MACDONALD. } Witnesses.
"GEORGE F. MACDONALD. }

"April 30, 1890.

"Acknowledged May 1st before W. F. Swasey, Notary Public."

"Neither of the persons named in the instrument as principals is a resident of this city. Ebers's residence is unknown, but Nellie J. Lenont is a nativ of England, and livs at Northfield, Minn. Both state their age to be fifty years.

"In conversation with a recorder's deputy Ebers said that he had considerable difficulty in finding a notary public who was willing to acknowledge the contract. In one office he was told that 'any man who would get up a contract like that was crazy.'"

What is there wrong about that contract? It seems to answer all the requirements. It is legal, the sentiments expressed in the preamble are sensible, and the reservation attached to the central paragraph is one which human experience has shown to be not wholly unnecessary.

The witnesses to the document are an interesting young couple in whom we hav more than a passing interest.

Editorial Notes.

TEXAS has a town called Ingersoll. J. E. Remsburg, who recently lectured there, ascertained that it was named in honor of Colonel Ingersoll. Strange to say it does not contain a single Republican, and but one Freethinker, and this one a recent convert. The town was founded and named by an admirer of Colonel Ingersoll about ten years ago. Its founder soon after left the state, but the name he gave it remains.

SAYS the Christian Advocate: "If no Sunday work were required of employees in getting out a Sunday paper, it would still be an evil. It hinders people from attending church." The Sabbatarian fanatics are getting unusually frank, just now. Generally they allege their advocacy of Sunday laws to be based on the needs of the workingman. Mr. Buckley is to be congratulated on his suddenly acquired inclination to be honest about the matter.

WE read in the Pearl of Days, the official expression of the American Sabbath Union, that "Col. Alexander S. Bacon, in an address last Sunday in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Sunday Observance Association, of Kings county, said." What he said is of no consequence, for he did not talk sense, but what does the Sabbath Union mean by getting up meetings on Sundays? Is anything more wanted to show the hypocrisy of the managers of that organization?

DR. O'NEILL, of epistolary fame, desires us to say that our reporter at the Liberal Club misrepresented him by attributing to him these words: "The district attorney's office is a den of thieves." The famous letter-writer denies using such words, and as it is of no possible consequence to the reporter, and may be of considerable importance to the doctor—owing to his unfortunate habit of publicly revealing professional secrets—it is well to allow him the benefit of his denial.

WRITING of the papers sent to Congressmen at Washington, Amos J. Cummings says in the Sun: "The Freethinkers do not forget the Congressmen. THE TRUTH SEEKER is at times seen upon their desks. The number for January 25th contains an admirably engraved portrait of Robert Burns, surrounded with extracts from his poems calculated to promote Infidelity. Beneath the portrait appear the words from Alexander Smith, 'He hated hypocrisy and tore its holy robe, and for the outrage hypocrisy did not forgiv him while he lived, nor has it yet learned to forgiv him.'"

WE learn by Fair Play that Mr. Harman was taken to the penitentiary at Lansing on the 4th inst. There were nine prisoners in all, in charge of four deputy marshals. With the exception of Mr. Harman the prisoners were handcuffed in pairs, and some had shackles upon their feet. No irons were on the editor. At Holliday, where the train stops for a few moments, Mr. Harman expressed a desire for something to eat. George Harman, the prisoner's son, spoke to the officer in charge of the party, who at once gave permission to Mr. Harman to go down to a restaurant a half-block or so away. So he and his son went, unattended, and got what was wanted. At the penitentiary the ordinary prisoners were searched by the guards. Mr. Harman was asked by the clerk if he had anything in his pockets. "Only two handkerchiefs," was the reply. His answer was accepted. The usual prison garb was put upon him, but when his son left he had not received the customary medical examination and had not been assigned to work. He can write one Sunday in each month and see friends once in three months. He can receive recognized scientific and literary books, magazines and reviews, but no local, and no Freethought and Radical publications. Mr. Harman's extraordinary sentence was upon the first count of the indictment only, all the others being thrown out. This count was the Markland letter, which no educated person can call obscene, though the language was unnecessarily coarse, and it should never hav been printed. That, however, does not make Mr. Harman's sentence other than an unmerciful one, and his prosecution other than a persecution.

Letters from Friends.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 2, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I hand you $2 for the book of pictures. Please forward as soon as ready.

Yours very truly, JAS. L. FOSS.

DES MOINES, IA., April 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $2 for the book of cartoons. We would like to hav all the pictures if you can get them all in. SAMUEL GRAY.

LANDER, PA., April 26, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, for which send me one copy of the cartoon book. I would be pleased to giv a like sum for the Bible illustrations. GRANT PUTNAM.

MARYVILLE, MO., May 2, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send you $5, to be applied as follows: Send me one volume of cartoons as soon as published, and send one volume to the friend's address inclosed. The other dollar you can apply to the Literature Fund.

JOSEPH E. ALEXANDER.

BIG CREEK, GA., March 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Your ANNUAL is received. I am highly pleased with the ANNUAL. I inclose order for more ANNUALS, etc. I expect to hand you an order occasionally for books and pamphlets for distribution among our Christian friends.

ROSS A. BAGLEY.

ROOKFORD, ILL., April 28, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I was waiting to see if I could not get a new subscriber, but hav failed. We want a live lecturer to come and stir up the dry bones. I hope you will continue the pictures. I will giv something to the Heston fund as soon as I can. Yours truly, W. JILSON.

BROWNWOOD, TEX., April 28. 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2 for the picture book. I hav always been pleased with the pictures, but I am in a strong religious settlement. In fact, our whole town is suffering with religious prostration. I think I soon will get some subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Yours truly, J. K. PATTERSON.

SAVANNAH, MO., April 24, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose for renewals, two new subscribers, books, and the picture book. We hav fifty men in this neighborhood who ought to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER, yet, by hard knocks, I hav only been able to get two names. Still, I hope to get more. Respectfully, WM. COOK.

PRINEVILLE, ORE., April 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 for the picture book when ready. I did think I could not take the paper this year, times are so dull, but I hav reconsidered the matter and come to the conclusion I could not do without it. I had rather do without something else. C. ROGERS,

Vice president Oregon Secular Union for Crook county.

DETROIT, MICH., April 30, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav taken much pleasure in THE TRUTH SEEKER and scarcely know what I should do were I now compelled to do without it. I hav some good old hardshells to contend with here, but I can down them easily since I hav your paper to help me out. Mr. Heston's cartoons are just the thing. They show things up in their proper light.

Very respectfully yours, F. WILLIAMS.

MAITLAND, MO., April 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot do without the papers. I giv them to all those whom I think likely to read them. There are a great many who would subscribe to and read THE TRUTH SEEKER if our cause was the popular cause, but they would rather giv from five to a hundred dollars to build a gospel-house to be seen of men and of the dear sisters. These sisters hav been instrumental in erecting a house here that has now got a lien upon it by the lumber company.

MARTIN FLEMING.

LURAY, VA., March 6, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I send you money for five copies of the issue of the 15th. Mr. Peck's letter is so good that I think it is enough to convince the world that the preachers are false teachers and dreamers, and it makes me feel like kicking them out of the pulpit and telling them to stop their lying to the people—that they hav been at it long enough. Well, I wish to send my thanks to Mr. Peck and to THE TRUTH SEEKER family. G. D. DADISMAN.

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 22, 290.

MR. EDITOR: I wish it were in my power to secure new subscribers, but I find it a mighty hard work to make any favorable impression upon weak-kneed Liberals (?). In the course of time I hope I may hav better success at last. I hav been going from one place to another for several years, and hav had little time to meet many friends, but hope I will be settled permanently here. Glory to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Watson Heston's splendid satires.

Yours for freedom, A. FRANTZ.

ROANOKE, VA., April 25, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $10—$5 for subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and $5 to devote to whatever you may think will do the cause the most good—you are the best judge. This whole Southern section is ingulfed in ignorance, superstition, and hypocrisy. It is a hard "struggle for existence" here for a Freethinker who is determined to stand by his right of free speech. They call me all manner of vile names and abuse my children for, as I suppose, the glory of God and his cause. I hand my papers and books to anyone who I think will read them. And, by the way, they seldom return them, and when they do they are usually much soiled. I am very much pleased with your paper, and hope in future to assist the cause more. JOSIAH FRIEND.

WALTON, IND., Feb. 22, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been running my hotel for eight years on the Freethought plan you see in my advertisments. I hav done splendidly. I hav a desire to be true to my integrity. I hold class-meetings very regularly. I hav the photograph of the Bible description of God hanging in my class-room, and hav had it for several years. I try to treat all my customers respectfully. If you see R. G. Ingersoll, the greatest reformer the world has ever seen, tell him that the bell on the Engler House rings on time, both loud and clear. D. ENGLER.

BALTIMORE, MD., April 30, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2 for pamphlets as on the list, which will do some missionary work. By all means keep up Mr. Heston's cartoons, for they make your so popular weekly still more attractiv.

I wish to say to the Freethinkers of our city, as the duty of every man is to advocate his principles, it is ours to combine and start a Freethinking society; get some able lecturers to lecture for us, and distribute Freethought papers here. This will awake our fellow-men to fight against superstition—with words only, which are the greatest enemy of humbug. This will cause some expense, but I hope every Liberal will giv his share to the good cause, of which our city is greatly in need. D. T.

COALING, ALA., April 23, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find two new subscribers. You see I keep getting some, and no man has had more disadvantages to labor under than I hav, which shows what one man can do when he tries. Several times I hav despaired, but then I would rally again. And I hav some grounds to be a little proud. Two and a half years ago Freethought was unheard of here, now you know that you send several copies to this county alone. I will get some more subscribers yet. J. Forster is a man after my own heart. He is a Jew, and can do more with his tribe than I can. He is working as hard as I am. He shows his paper to the editors and tries to get them to copy some of it. He also shows it to his customers, and goes round nights with it. H. J. WARD.

DALLAS, ORE., Feb. 28, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: When I find leisure I will write to you about the Jews—how under the disguise of Christians they seize all the offices, from the lower to the highest; how they are our lawgivers; how they sneak into everything. So among Freethinkers—the Freethinking Jews think only of their pocket. They may be a little better than the others, as they are not so hypocritical as to go to church, but they seek and work only for Jewdom. The postmaster-general is in all probability one, as I see several Jews as postmasters round here, and the Jews are much for Sabbath-keeping. Anthony Comstock is no doubt a Jew. When President Garfield was shot all the Jews here and everywhere telegraphed and prayed. Would one pray and pay for a gentile? The White House is full of them, and you may hav heard or read of people complaining that they are disgusted with the doings in the White House.

Respectfully yours, AUG. W. KIENTOFF.

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEX., April 24, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2 for the picture book when it is ready. I like to read pictures, and am going to teach some of my friends to when I get that book.

We had a good time here a Sunday or two ago. Some of the Christian humbugs dedicated a new church to the Lord God of Israel, that same old party that they in their blind way pray to nowadays. He did not like to hav his name taken in vain that way; so to show them how mad he was he blew with a strong breath the vane off the steeple the very next day. And the poor preacher looked so sad.

Oh, what a terrible thing it is to be an Infidel! Nobody likes you if you are an Infidel. But don't you care. Life is short and uncertain. I see many good people hav been dying lately.

We, what few there are of us, are expecting Brother Remsburg here to talk to us in a little while. Then your humble servant will be in his glory. I remain,

Yours for Universal Mental Liberty, W. G. MORGAN.

LARAMIE, WYO. TERR., April 23, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed the price of the copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 8, 1889, containing the letter of a Russian exile, under the caption of "Christian Russia." I think for my part that the time has come to call "Christian America" to account for her indifference toward the outrages perpetrated in a civilized country. This indifference is of course the result of the influence of the church, who, naturally enough, will not giv her support to those who refuse to submit to "the powers that be" and hav moreover shaken off the shackles of Christianity. Henceforth it must be clearly understood that the church is indifferent to outrages perpetrated against humanity, and that the only evils which she recognizes are those which affect her outward influence and prosperity. I read in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 15th, that a great mass meeting had just been held by the workingmen in Hyde park, London, to protest against the treatment of the political offenders. No clergymen or members of the church were mentioned among the speakers. There is, it seems, a unanimous complicity among Christians with regard to the state of affairs in Russia. This complicity is not only disgraceful, but is also significant. Will the Americans open their eyes in time to avoid the pitfalls toward which they are advancing under the guidance of their blind leaders? CAROLINE K. DE MAUPASSANT.

OKLAHOMA, IND. TERR., March 7, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: How excellent it would be if the people of these United States would call indignation meetings and issue appeals to unite in a national protest against the recent outrages and murders sanctioned by the czar of Christian Russia.

It is no wonder that the intelligent minds doubt the existence of an all-wise and all-powerful God, for what God would allow a woman to be beaten to death for defending her honor? The death of Madam Sigidia and her companions should awake the women of our land to the fact that just so long as they believe in the God of the Bible will they wear the fetters of superstition and ignorance. If such a personage as God exists let us look upon him as a God of pity, and what God would not pity and protect those poor exiles who hav sealed their principles with their blood? If this all-powerful Christian God could hav saved the sufferings and lives of the victims of the czar, why did he not do so?

As a constant reader of your journal I must acknowledge its worth as a torch that has lighted my path to reason. It was through your paper that I was led to see the falsity of the Christian faith. When I read the words of Paine and Ingersoll I came to the conclusion that there was a plurality of saviors, and that the only savior of man in the past or present has been man. CAPT. FRANK FORD.

ST. NICHOLAS, PA., March 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith send you clippings from our local paper, that you may see, as well as let your very many readers see, what a state of contention that old musty and shallow book called the Bible is causing. Very sensible remarks were made upon the agitation by said journal—which, had they been made by you, I would not hav thought anything of, but coming from our own paper here, where one is hardly allowed to express an honest thought or opinion, owing to the power of the church, why, it shows we are progressing, and the time is not far distant when a general test will hav to be made whether the use and reading of the Bible in our public schools shall cease.

MAHANOY CITY, March 3.—The school board at its last meeting took action on the disturbance caused by Miss May Datesman, a teacher in one of our primary schools, chastising a boy named P. J. Foley for insubordination. The facts of the case hav been previously mentioned through these columns, and it is now awakening a great interest. For some time past a number of people hav expressed themselvs as opposed to Bible-reading in the public schools. This led to the people taking sides on the question, until now the town is composed of two factions with strong feelings on the subject. There are several teachers who read the Bible regularly at school, and who while out of school are subject to much annoyance by some of the scholars who hail them on the streets as "the great Bible readers." The board has appointed a committee to proceed legally against Mrs. Foley, and to sustain the teacher. It is the all-absorbing topic on the streets, and the community is watching the result of this test case with unwonted interest.

R. B. PLATT.

NEW CASTLE, WASH., April 6, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. C. B. Reynolds, the secretary of the Washington Secular Union, was here the 3d, 4th, and 5th of March, and gave us three lectures, in which he introduced facts and truths that cannot be repudiated. The audience was comparativly small, but we were well pleased and highly entertained nevertheless. One of the clerks occupied in the store here is a devout Catholic. During a conversation in the day he made a remark that Mr. Reynolds was a fraud and an impostor, and that he could floor him, and prove him so to the public, with a very few words. Whereupon one of our Liberal friends produced $50 and asked him to cover it, and go up in the evening and do what he said he could and the wager would be his. But no; as the old saying is, he took water. He knew very well in his own mind that the old, worn-out Christian dogmas could not stand against the grand, noble, and enlightening truths of Liberalism. This place is a small mining town, consisting of between two and three hundred inhabitants. There is one Catholic church and one Protestant church, but there are not many professed Christians or avowed followers of Christ. But there are a great many who hav been brought up under the bondage of superstition, and their minds are so shackled with the Christian dogmas that they find almost any excuse so as not to attend a Liberal lecture. And some, I know for a fact, would sooner go and attend the beer saloon and there guzzle the intoxicating liquors until the wee small hours, thus depriving their wives and families of the necessary comforts of this life. Oh, I pity them. Inclosed find $1. You will please send me the two books named below; the other twenty-five cents apply to the pictures. I am a poor man and cannot do much financially, but keep the pictures going by all means, if possible, in the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, that bearer of light and liberty.

THOMAS OAKLEY.

SALIDA, COL., April 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Always an admirer of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I hav not been such a supporter as to giv me any claims on your columns. But you do not rate me right. You string your critics on one string, roll them up in a bundle, and serve the innocent with the guilty. I neither established nor joined a "consensus," competent or otherwise. I never even hinted a limit of your liberty of expression. So please let up on your "unmerited favors" and cut me out of the string.

I called your criticism savage. I did not say it was unjust or undeserved. I had taken my liberty and said to Brother Harman: "You are a martyr to folly; victimized to a set of impracticables who ought to bear their own cross." I would not sign the petition to Judge Foster because it was disrespectful, in that it made a false issue, as he had already granted full liberty of discussion, limited only to "decent language." But when Mr. Harman got in a tight place again my sympathy took the lead, and finding, somewhat unexpectedly, that my daughter justified him, I felt like giving him whatever of aid and comfort there might be in that fact. Yours may be the higher position, truer to the cause and to Mr. Harman. Some of the time I think it is. It is a hard place to be in, to be compelled to turn your back on a friend or betray a trust and sacrifice a truth. And when I think of it coolly, as an Irishman would say, I get hot, boiling mad at the bell-ram that set the foolish fashion, and the wethers, ewes, and lambs that stupidly follow it. If I go to hell for swearing, I shall charge it up to Heywood, Slenker & Co., and say: "They made me; I could not help it, splitfoot." My daughter says she is not a Jesuit, but thinks the means justify the end in this case. I think that the old-time folks were logical and the fagot justifiable as a means, if hell be the end and a word can save one from it. To burn the body for an hour to save the soul from an eternity of flames is not only allowable as a means of grace—it is beneficence itself compared to the mistaken leniency of modern times.

C. M. Overton.

Grant Fork, March 11, 290.

Mr. Editor: I notice in the issue of The Truth Seeker of the 8th inst. an answer to Mr. J. N. Brown, Ky., by A. Moot. He says: "You say you believe it to be a matter of fact that there is not a sensible man or woman on earth but is perfectly willing to believe that there is a personal God somewhere that hears the prayers of man and can answer or reject them. Mr. Moot says emphatically, No, sir. I think Mr. Moot makes a mistake. Are we not all willing to believe in such a God? I answer, Yes. But it is impossible to believe when we all know to the contrary, that no such a being ever did, does, or can exist. There are many things we know in relation to which it is hard to giv a satisfactory answer as to why and how we know them. But in this case I think I can giv logical and satisfactory reasons why and how I know there is no God. The first point to be settled is, What is meant by the term God? I assume that both Mr. Brown and Mr. Moot mean the Bible or Christian God, which, according to all definitions, is a being infinit in wisdom, power, justice, etc.—which is contradicted by nature. Does justice prevail? No. Is innocence a perfect shield? No. Then where does infinit justice manifest itself? Perhaps Mr. Brown will say, in rewards and punishments after death. If Mr. Brown can reconcile a credit system like that with infinit power, wisdom, and justice, he lacks the intelligence which is necessary to sitting in judgment on a jury. I do not believe he would be willing to indorse such a credit system of any earthly capitalist owing him any considerable amount.

But Mr. Brown has fortunately divulged the secret of his error by saying he would like to see frequent calls of The Truth Seeker on T. De Witt Talmage to prove there is a personal God that can and does answer prayer. I wonder if Mr. Brown ever calls on anyone to prove there are such things as witches, ghosts, etc. Ex-Rev. J. N. Maxey.

Licking, Wash., April 19, 290.

Mr. Editor: I hav followed with deep interest your account of a "Search for a Spirit," as given in both The Truth Seeker and Annual, and as I, too, am a "searcher for light" on this, as on all other subjects interesting to humanity, I venture to offer a suggestion in regard to the possible solution of the mysterious slate-writing of Slade and other media. You say, and Mr. McArthur also states, that "Slade cleaned the slates with a small sponge." I suppose, of course, the sponge was wet, otherwise it would not properly clean the slates. Now, could it hav been possible that a small, soft pencil imbedded in the sponge might hav been used to write those short sentences, where there was no possibility of changing the slates? Acting on this supposition, I hav been experimenting a little. I fixed a pencil, a rather hard one, too, in a sponge, and wrote several sentences on a slate with it, and although a slight noise was heard from it, I think if the pencil had been softer and smaller, it would not hav been noticed, especially if the parties were talking at the time. And in the dim light the writing could hardly be seen, except by the closest scrutiny, while the slate remained damp, but after it became dry the writing came out distinctly. And as you were not certain that the noise of writing was actually in the slates, it is possible it might hav been produced in some other manner than by the pencil inside the slates.

There is one more point on which I desire information. Mr. McArthur states that "whenever writing was done, whether with one or two slates, the point of the pencil always rested on the last mark made." He also states that the "writing on the single slate, held on your head, was on the under side, on the side nearest your head." Is it possible that he expects any intelligent being to believe that a pencil actually hung unsupported, in defiance of the laws of gravitation, on the under side of a slate, with its point marking the last word written? That savors too much of Bible miracles to gain credence without the best of evidence. But please try the pencil in the sponge yourself, of course being careful not to obliterate your own writing, and see if you do not think an expert might succeed in deceiving people in that way. Yours for facts, Elsie M. Wilcox.

Adrian, Mich., April 10, 290.

Mr. Editor: On my return from Kansas I made it a point to take Carthage, Mo., in my course. I had a very pleasant little visit with our picture man, Mr. Heston, who has a nice little home in a pleasant part of the city. Our friend Heston is a true American in principle, without any discount on his character in any of the isms of the day. From circumstances over which he has not had entire control, he has some financial embarrassment that would seem to endanger his pleasant little homestead. I hope our friends throughout the country will be liberal in their donations to him for the great service he is rendering our cause in furnishing those telling pictures to our noble old Truth Seeker. If I could entertain the thought that its founder still existed, as a conscious entity, and was witnessing the efforts that Mr. Heston is making to giv force to his old journal that he sacrificed his life to giv a place among the reforming, scientific, and truly moral journals of this country—near the close of his useful life, being mindful of the importance of the continuance of his Truth Seeker, leaving it in the care of a few trusty friends, who hav been managing it about on a line with its founder's wishes—as I hav said, if Mr. Bennett were still living, and conscious of his identity, as some good people with large marvelousness are inclined to believe, I feel sure that he would indorse his committee's course in having those pictures put in his journal.

And now, as I am a Bennett man on this Liberal and scientific platform, and hav been from the beginning; and as from age, and my oft infirmities that I hav by inheritance and that may take me from here by another year, and as I hav no proofs, though I sought them for years, either inside or outside of myself, that I shall be conscious of my identity after I am dead, I will now, while time and opportunity are afforded me, remit $15 to your care, to remit to the parties to whom I donate it. Five dollars I donate to The Truth Seeker fund. And as I hav spoken of Mr. Heston's character as a true American—and that means a person of noble manhood—and of his financial troubles, and of the service he is rendering our cause, which should be the cause No. 1 of every true American, I will donate to him, Watson Heston, $5. And as my name stands, or should stand, on the books of the American Secular Union as a life-member, I will donate $5 to that association, trusting that its officers may be guided by best wisdom in its management, and that every lover of human rights (that being the base on which the American government was intended to rest), should be willing, whether a formal member or not, to assist in furnishing the means necessary to carry forward this noble work, of a more perfect separation of church and state.

If you hav not got my name down for one of those picture books, put it down at once. Samuel D. Moore.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 1, 1890.

Mr. Editor: Mr. Berylson, after dropping a tear of pity for the poor woman who died of the brutality and selfishness of man, and "poverty with love," and earnestly inquiring, "Is there any remedy? Is there any help for the living? How long will the dark night last? Shall we never see the light of day?" deliberately denies that he virtually indorses the terms employed by Miss Gardener, and studiously avoids investigating the subject of his earnest inquiry with a view to finding a solution of the problem. Therefore, and notwithstanding his protest that "jokes are out of order in this case," he is evidently less in earnest than I usually am when joking. Perceiving that he is somewhat puzzled by the suggestion that I hav heard no complaint of the world being poverty-stricken—nor do I believe he has—I will endeavor to help him out of his quandary by further suggesting that, to my view, it is a strange and outrageous anomaly that there should be poverty and want in a world where over-production and superabundance of all things needful is a chronic condition and complaint.

There should be no occasion for inquiring "how to increase the wealth of one class of people," for ownership is continually showing how that is done; and the process is so very simple that even small children should comprehend it. It consists in taking advantage of established conditions that compel nine-tenths of the human race to labor for the enrichment of the other one-tenth rather than for the well-being of themselvs and those for whose well-being it is their moral and social duty to labor and provide; but are restrained by ownership from doing so to the extent that they should reasonably desire. That is the social condition that I hav presented to Mr. Berylson; but, like our professor of finance, Mr. J. H. Wood, he appears to be one of the proverbial blind who will not see. Therefore, I will pay my respects to another and somewhat neglected correspondent on the subject, in The Truth Seeker of November 16th, I believe. I hav forgotten the gentleman's name and hav not a copy for reference. Therefore I trust he will excuse the blank or fill it out himself. He thinks that "Mr. Tuttle has made a mistake in supposing ownership is the cause of 'man's inhumanity to man.'" I desire to inform our worthy friend that Mr. Tuttle went of the mistake-making business on the social problem some time ago, and is now putting out the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, on the subject; and though he has a monopoly of the trade he cannot make a living at it. The market for that class of goods is perfectly flat and very thin. My critic thinks he knows something about selfishness, but he has evidently yet to learn that, selfishness being a necessary incentiv to self-preservation, it cannot be wrong by itself; therefore whatever wrong attaches to selfishness is necessarily superinduced upon it by artificial conditions.

He desires Mr. Tuttle to explain the cause of man's inhumanity to woman; I will therefore suggest that science and philosophy include both sexes in the term man; recognizing that woman is a human being, and as such should logically be subject to all the vicissitudes that are common to humanity, man's inhumanity to man included. The abolition of ownership, and substitution of universal coöperation by all, for the mutual well-being of all, will make every individual perfectly free from, and independent of, every other individual. No woman will then be dependent upon any man for the support of herself and offspring, of whom she will hav exclusiv control so long as they are willing to be controled by her. The human race being subject to "petticoat government" in early life, with ownership abolished, they will soon learn to be subject to "petticoat government" from cradle to grave and will neither desire nor tolerate any other. Then woman will be advanced to her natural and proper position in the body politic, which she instinctivly aspires to but cannot gain so long as her path is obstructed by ownership, under which no relation but master and slave is compatible or possible. Hence, though man is instinctivly inclined to be influenced and controled by woman on terms of perfect equality and companionship, so long as our social relations involve the question of master and slave as ownership makes it, might will assert the right and the weakest must inevitably go to the wall by the law of self-preservation.

Being an advocate of female sovereignty, and of the only method of establishing it that presents a reliable promis of efficiency, I hav no occasion to giv myself any concern about female suffrage except as a doubtful means to a desirable end; but I understand that all the popular theories of reform that are urged upon our acceptance on the pretense of making ownership more endurable, though themselvs a virtual protest against ownership, are evidently expected to divert attention from its infamous nature and obstruct our progress to the goal of human destiny on this planet. But the goal will be reached all the same by the inexorable law of evolution and progressiv development.

Female sovereignty will be government by the weakest sex; hence, government by the sufferance of the governed; that will be equivalent to no government at all—hence, Anarchistic government. Therefore, when female sovereignty is established—and I confidently expect it will be—the only system of Anarchism that is possible on this planet will be realized. And I can perceive nothing in it that should be terrifying to grannies in breeches unless their mothers were good spankers. To my view, a theory of Anarchism that is based on ownership is the most ridiculous absurdity that imagination could conceive or credulity accept. For ownership being antinaturalism, it cannot exist except by authority of law and government that will infringe the natural rights and liberty of the individual. That should not be a fundamental principle of Anarchism. J. A. Tuttle.

Steubenville, O., March 2, 1890.

Mr. Editor: In your article on parochial schools, you say that "Bishop Wigger has ordered the priests of his charge to notify all Catholic parents that, in accordance with the decree of the plenary council at Baltimore, they must send their children to Catholic schools, under penalty of denial of absolution, this in order to eventually obtain separate schools conducted by the sects, but supported by the state." You think at present there is little likelihood of this being brought about. I think, to the contrary, that they are making immense strides toward it. At any rate, you say it is a matter which chiefly concerns Catholic parents and children, and you fail to see how the state can properly interfere. You acknowledge some danger where the vote of the Catholics is a majority. But at the rate of increase of the Catholic vote by immigration encouraged by that church, how long will it be till with the aid of demagogs of both parties they will be able to control the majority even at a great election, when that church will dictate to our politicians what laws they shall make and what laws they shall repeal? This being the case, why does it concern only Catholic parents and children? If the state or the American people look on with apathy, the separate school system will be established, and we shall be in the same plight with Ireland. We shall raise two classes of citizens, bred to hate each other. We shall hav Orangemen and papists side by side, ready at the bidding of their leaders and priests to fly at each other's throats, or French Canadians and English Canadians as they are to-day. Then why, I ask, should not the state interfere to prevent this terrible evil being visited on our children? You say the right of a Catholic to use a religious school cannot be interfered with. Granted, so long as it is only religion; but don't you and all of us know that the church, with its superb organization, teaches treason to this state when it enjoins all Catholics to obey the decrees of the pope always in preference to the laws of the state—although, to hoodwink the people now, they hav determined to hav such a great demonstration of loyalty next Fourth of July? Is it not the duty of all patriots to oppose the organization of separate schools to raise aliens to the state? And I hold it necessary to at once organize a party, large enough to show our demagogs of both parties that by truckling to a foreign enemy they will lose the vote of every honest American citizen. Another thing that is imperativ to save the republic from falling into the power of the pope, is to disfranchise, or rather not to naturalize, any more foreigners, for by so doing we are putting a club in the pope's hands to beat our own heads with. Let them come and enjoy our liberties, but not vote. They will hav the satisfaction of knowing that their children will become citizens of this glorious republic, if taught in our American public schools, and not otherwise, and that would be inducement enough for any intelligent foreigner to leave the old worn-out monarchies and seek our shore. Jno. Downes.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

[FOR RECITATION.]

A Sterling Old Poem.

Who shall judge man from his manner?
Who shall know him from his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes;
Princes fit for nothing else.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings—
Satin vest can do no more.

There are streams of crystal nectar
Ever flowing out of stone;
There are purple beds and golden,
Hidden, crushed, and overthrown;
Love, who counts by souls, not dresses,
Keeps and prospers you and me,
While it values thrones the highest
But as pebbles of the sea.

Man, upraised above his fellows,
Oft forgets his fellows then;
Masters, rulers, lords, remember
That your meanest kind are men!
Men of labor, men of feeling,
Men of thought, and men of fame,
All claim equal rights to sunshine
In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam-embroidered oceans,
There are little wood-clad rills;
There are feeble inch-high saplings,
There are cedars on the hills.
Truth, who counts by souls, not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me;
By its light all vague distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of the nation's wealth and fame;
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same;
By the sweat of others' foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifts its feeble voice.

Truth and justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
While there is a sunny right;
Truth, whose world-wide voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Counts oppression with its titles,
But as pebbles in the sea.

A Little Wheedler.

"There never was a grandma half so good!"
He whispered, while beside her chair he stood,
And laid his rosy cheek,
With manner very meek,
Against her dear old face in loving mood.

"There never was a nicer grandma born!
I know some little boys must be forlorn
Because they've none like you;
I wonder what I'd do
Without a grandma's kisses night and morn!

"There never was a dearer grandma—there!"
He kissed her and he smoothed her snow-white hair;
Then fixed her ruffled cap
And nestled in her lap,
While grandma, smiling, rocked her old arm-chair.

"When I'm a man what lots to you I'll bring!
A horse and carriage and a watch and ring,
All grandmas are so nice!
(Just here he kissed her twice)
And grandmas giv a boy most anything."

Before his dear old grandma could reply,
This boy looked up, and with a roguish eye,
Then whispered in her ear,
That nobody could hear,
"Say, grandma, hav you any more mince pie?"

—George Cooper.

An Essay on Some Animals.

Animals are found all over the world. Some are found in the sea, and others on the land.

There are four great groups: Vertebrates, annulates, mollusks, and radiates. The reason the first are called vertebrates is, they hav backbones. They also hav red blood.

Annulates are animals that hav neither bones nor red blood, and their bodies are composed of rings.

Mollusks hav bodies soft and pulpy, and sometimes hidden in a shell.

Radiates are animals that hav their mouths centrally located, and their bodies are composed of rays.

Vertebrates are divided into five classes, mammalia, birds, reptils, amphibians, and fishes

Mammalia giv milk to their young.

Birds hav a bill, two wings, feathers, and two feet. Reptils hav cold blood; their skin is covered with false scales.

Amphibians, when young, liv in water; when old they liv on land. Some jump into the water when they get scared. Fishes are the vertebrates that liv entirely in the water and breathe by means of their gills.

Insects hav six feet, and wings.

Spiders hav eight feet. Millepeds hav at least twenty pairs of feet.

Crustaceans hav a hard, crusty skin. Worms hav no head distinct from the body. Mollusks comprise snails, slugs, oysters, mussels, cuttle-fish, and other animals like them. They hav no bones and are soft and easily smashed.

Star-fish and the sea-anemones are radiates, because they hav rays.

Now, as I hav named the four great groups, and the classes under them, it will be in order to tell about one or more animals of each class. I will take the cow, which is a mammal and a vertebrate having horns and hoofs, four feet, and eats hay, corn, and such things, and as she does not feed on meat, but grasses, she is herbivorous. The cow is clad in hair, and is a very useful animal. We fatten and kill cows, and then they are very good to eat. Cows learn a great many tricks, as opening gates and jumping fences.

The whale is another curious mammal; it livs in the water but breathes the air. It is the largest animal—is sometimes a hundred feet long. It feeds on very small animals found in the sea. It has a very small throat and does not hav teeth like any other animal, but has a horny growth from which whalebone is got.

The bat is also a mammal, but much smaller than the whale. It seeks its food at night. Bats cannot see in daylight, but hide in dark places, such as crevices and under window-sills. There is one under our window-sill, and in the summer it comes out and flies in the air for insects which it eats.

The next class is called birds, and I shall describe some of the different ones found in this class. The sparrows are all small birds and liv on small things, as insects, grain, and seed. Some birds are very large and hav strong talons and liv on flesh, as the eagle and the hawk. The hawk is very fond of poultry; it sometimes descends into the yard where the chickens are and gets them. I hav often seen the chickens when they see the hawk run under things just to keep it from getting them. Owls also eat poultry. They come at night and take chickens off the roost. The owl is a night bird. Once an owl came into the room where we were. We caught it. Its feathers were gray, and it had very soft wings, so it could fly without making any noise. When we let it go we put it on the window-sill. I think it could not see, for it stood on the sill a long time before it took flight. Owls cannot see well except at night, because the light of day is too strong for them. Their eyes are very big and round.

Another class of birds, called waders, such as the herons, cranes, snipes, storks, water hens, and other birds like them will be described next. They hav long legs for wading around in water and marshes, where they liv, and long necks for taking their food from the ground. They feed on fish and other small animals.

The stork is found in Europe and builds on top of houses. Florida is the home of some of these birds.

They also migrate from one place to another, but when they fly over the towns it is so high they are hardly ever seen. The whooping crane is so called from its whooping, which can be heard for two miles.

The next class is the birds that swim, as the ducks, geese, swans, sea-gulls, and penguins. These birds hav web feet and can swim very nicely. They swim in streams and also come on land. Some of the swimmers fly very well but walk awkwardly.

One day papa was going along a creek, and found a duck's egg. He brought it home, and we set it under a hen, and when it was hatched it was the nicest duck I ever saw. When it was about two days old we put it in a tub of warm water and it would dive very nicely. In about two hours we were going to get it and see it swim, but when we went to get it it was gone. A big rat took it.

To close the description of birds, it may be said the birds of the torrid zones hav most beautiful feathers while those of the temperate zones are the best singers.

The reptils are the next class, and I will pass on to them. Some of them hav no limbs, as the snake. The snakes are very dangerous. The bite of some of them is very poisonous. The tortoises are also reptils, but, unlike the snakes, hav limbs and are not so dangerous. There are three kinds of tortoises—sea tortoises, fresh water tortoises, and land tortoises. We caught one once, and put it in a box and kept it for a while; then we let it go in the lot, and it found a hole under the fence and went a short distance away, then came back. It did this way for a week or two. The last time it went away it did not come back any more. We do not know whether it went away or somebody saw it and caught it. It weighed about five or six pounds.

The lizard is a reptil that has a brittle tail, which when touched very hard breaks off, and, after a while, a new tail grows out. One day I put a stick on a lizard's tail; the tail broke off and the lizard ran away.

Amphibians are the next class after the reptil.

The frog, toad, and salamanders are amphibians. They liv in the water when young, but when old liv on the land. They eat insects and slugs. I hav often seen toads come near the house and run out their tongues and catch flies and other insects.

Fishes come next. In the fish family are the sharks, cod-fishes, sturgeons, eels, and other similar ones. They cannot liv on the land. When they are brought out of the water they liv but a short time. The most dangerous of fishes are the sharks; they sometimes grow to the length of fifty feet. All fishes hav gills, and are found in the sea and rivers and lakes.

I will now pass on to the next great group, called annulates. The spider is an annulate; it has a lot of rings, and is a peculiar animal; it spins a web in which it catches its food. There was a spider that spun its web in the window which was up. We caught flies and put in the web, and saw the spider run over its web and wind the fly in the web. It got torn down every night for a day or two, and the spider would spin it over every time nice and thin as before; but one morning the spider was gone. We never saw the spider any more.

There is a species of spider called scorpions living in warm places, and they are very dangerous.

The next class I will take is insects. Insects are animals that hav but six feet. Some of the animals in this group are the beetles, and the bees, that undergo complete metamorphosis; grasshoppers and dragon-flies do not undergo complete metamorphosis. The butterflies when first hatched from the eggs are small caterpillars, which cast their skin six times and come out butterflies and liv on the honey of flowers. I hav often seen them flying around flowers and hav tried to catch them, but hav very often failed.

There are some very useful insects, like the silk-worm; there is another insect that is useful. It is the honey bee.

I will now pass on to the class called millepeds. Millepeds and centipedes hav a great many feet, and some of them secrete venom.

Crustaceans are animals that hav crusted skins, as the lobsters and crabs, and other animals similar to them.

I will now pass on to the last class of the annulates, called worms. Some worms are so that when cut into, the piece that has no head grows one, and the piece that has no tail grows a tail, and in less than a year there are two whole worms.

Trichinæ is a worm found in pigs and other animals. They get into the stomach of a person who has eaten pork that is affected with the trichinæ. When in the stomach they are in a larvæ state. When they hav remained forty-eight hours they are full grown, and in six days a large number of little trichinæ come from the parent trichinæ. They bore through the alimentary canal, and travel to the muscles, and there they stay till something eats them. If nothing eats them they finally become converted into lime.

I will now pass on to the group mollusks. In this group there are creatures like the oyster, living in the sea and having shells around them. People eat them for food. Snails and slugs are also mollusks. They hav four horns. The snail has a shell but slugs hav none. The octopus is a mollusk. It has been known to attain the length of eight or ten yards, and its arms are about the same length.

In this group called radiates there are found the starfish, polypi, sea-anemones, sponges, and other animals something like the ones I hav named.

The polypi hav been known to form large islands in the southern seas. The sponges we use are the skeletons of animals called sponges. The starfish is one of the best known of the radiates, and livs in water as most of the other animals of this group do. The infusoria liv in decaying animals and rotten vegetables. They may be seen if some rotten hay be put in some water and observed by the microscope. The four great groups that I hav named include all of the animals that are found on the earth.

Zaleski, O, Dec. 5. 1889. CLELIE JAMES.

Correspondence.

OMAHA, NEB, April 22, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I hav seen many letters in THE TRUTH SEEKER from boys and girls to you, I thought I would write to you too. I hav just had my thirteenth birthday, the 12th of April. I often read the Children's Corner. My cousin has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for quite a while. I hav no brother or sister. I am a farmer boy, but I stay with my uncle in Omaha to go to school and to take violin lessons. My father plays in a band called Haves Cornet Band. It is composed of twenty men and they hav been playing for four years. He has quite a large farm. To-day it is warm weather, but to-night there seems to come a storm. To-day is Arbor day, and the trees that are planted I think will grow nicely, because it is going to rain. Your friend, CHAS. LAMP.

NAPAVINE, WASH.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As so many little boys and girls are writing to you, I thought I would pen a few lines to the Children's Corner. I cannot write much, as I am only nine years old. Papa is a Liberal. We hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER three years. It is a splendid paper. I hope you will always take charge of the Children's Corner. I am going to send you my picture. When I get to be a woman, if I liv, I want to teach and lecture for the Freethought cause.

Papa says when he gets able he wants a picture of all the leading Liberals of this country to put in an album. Your picture will be one of them; also Heston's. We think he is a great man. What homely pictures he can make! and such shoes! We are going to get a copy of his picture book. I do not think Heston will ever join the church. When we get a little older, papa says, he will take the Investigator, the Ironclad Age, the Twentieth Century, and Freethought. He takes the American Nonconformist and the Youth's Companion, besides four country papers. Three years ago we used to say our prayers and say grace at the table, but THE TRUTH SEEKER taught us to be more sensible.

I will now close, hoping to see this in print. Good-bye. From your little Liberal friend,

BESSIE F. HADLEY.

[We trust that our new friend, Bessie, will realize her wish to grow up, teach, and lecture for the Liberal cause. It is a worthy ambition.—ED. C. C.]

AT a trial in London great doubt was expressed as to whether a little girl, who had been called as a witness, knew about the nature of an oath. To silence controversy the judge asked the girl if she knew where she would go to if she told a lie. The witness meekly replied, "No, sir." To which the judge added, "A very sensible answer. Neither do I know where you will go to. You may swear the witness."

LITTLE JOHNNY was paying his first visit to a Friends' church. He soon became disgusted with the quaint old hats and bonnets and the "thees" and "thys" of the preacher, and was just about to leave when the preacher exclaimed: "I want all those who wish to enjoy the eternal life of the beautiful home rise to their feet." The congregation rose in a body but Johnny remained seated. The preacher noticed the little sinner and exclaimed: "What, my son, doesn't thee wish to go to heaven?" "No, siree," said Johnny with emphasis. "Not if this crowd goes."

Solid Silver Spoons—Free.

The firm who make the above offer in another part of our paper are perfectly reliable, and the premium box which they send out contains not only all the Sweet Home Soap and fine Toilet Soaps and the list of miscellaneous articles contained in the advertisement, but also a set of Solid Silver Spoons. Subscribers who write to them are perfectly safe in sending $6 with the order, and this is the quickest and best way (on account of the extra present that is given for cash) to get goods from Messrs. J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., who certainly exhibit an enterprise and liberality in their desire to introduce their Soaps which is almost unheard of.—Advertisment.

Every Liberal Should Read

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.

INTRODUCTION.

Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.

Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A Wealthy Manufacturing Co.

Gives Gratis Six Solid Silver Spoons.

Our object in making the following liberal proposal is that you may become one of our permanent patrons and always use our Family Soap, "Sweet Home," and fine Toilet Articles, and also by speaking to your friends in praise of the fine quality and high character of our Soaps, secure them also as regular patrons for our goods.

Our Soaps are the purest, best, and most satisfactory, whether made in this country or Europe; everyone who uses them once becomes a permanent customer. We propose a new departure in the soap trade and will sell direct from our factory to the consumer, spending the money usually allowed for expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail dealers' profits, in handsome and valuable presents to those who order at once. Our goods are made for the select family trade and will not be sold to dealers, and to induce people to give them a trial we accompany each case with many useful and valuable presents.

Only One Box Sold to a Family.

Send us your name on a postal card and we will ship you on terms given below, a Box containing all of the following articles:

ONE HUNDRED CAKES "Sweet Home" Family Soap, enough to last a family one full year. This Soap is made for all household purposes and has no superior.

SIX BOXES BORAXINE.

One-Fourth Dozen Modjeska Complexion Soap.
One Bottle Modjeska Perfume.
One-Fourth Dozen Ocean Bath Toilet Soap.
One-Fourth Dozen Artistic Toilet Soap.
One-Fourth Dozen Creme Toilet Soap.
One-Fourth Dozen Elite Toilet Soap.
One English Jar Modjeska Cold Cream. Soothing, Healing, Beautifies the Skin. Improves the Complexion, Cures Chapped Hands and Lips.

The above are articles of our own manufacture which we take great pride in presenting to the readers of this paper.

One fine Silver-plated Button Hook.
One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder (very best).
One Arabesque Mat.
One Glove Buttoner.
One Package "Steadfast" Pins.
One Spool Black Silk Thread.
One Gentleman's Handkerchief, Large.
Fourteen Patent Transfer Patterns for stamping and embroidering table linen, toilet mats, towels, tidies, etc.,
One Lady's Handkerchief.
One Child's Lettered Handkerchief.
One Wall Match Safe. (can be seen at night.)
One Package Assorted Scrap Pictures.
Two Celluloid Collar Buttons, (Patented).
Twenty-three Pictures of the Presidents of the U. S.

☞In addition to all of the above articles we place in each box ONE ALBUM containing pictures of the following celebrities:

Wm. E. Gladstone,	General Scott,
Bismarck,	Thomas Edison,
Daniel Webster,	Benj. F. Morse,
J. G. Whittier,	Jos. Jefferson,
Geo. Bancroft,	Benj. Franklin,
Abraham Lincoln,	H. M. Stanley,
Ulysses S. Grant,	Oliver Perry,
Robert E. Lee,	Goethe,
Gen. Sheridan,	Schiller,
Thos. Carlyle,	Alex. Hamilton,
Commodore Farragut,	John H. Payne,
"Stonewall" Jackson,	Etc, Etc, Etc.

A SPECIAL OFFER TO THE READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.

We hereby promise that in addition to all the articles named above, to include in every box purchased by subscribers, who will agree to recommend "Sweet Home" Soap to two or more friends, ONE SET (SIX) SOLID SILVER TEASPOONS, PLAIN PATTERN—such as your grandmother used, very rich and elegant, (will Last a Life Time).

We know the great value of our articles, as we make them ourselves, and are willing to put them to the severest kind of a test, hence will ship the box on thirty days' trial, and if you are not fully satisfied with it send us word and we will remove it at our own expense.

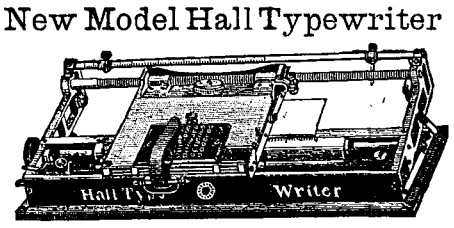
Our Price for the Great "Sweet Home" Box is Only Six Dollars.

Write your name and address plainly on a postal card, mail same to us, and a case of these goods will be shipped to you on thirty days' trial.

J. D. LARKIN & CO. Factories:—Seneca, Heacock and Carroll Streets, BUFFALO, N.Y.

☞Some people prefer to send cash with order; we do not ask it, but in such cases we place one Solid Silver Sugar Spoon in the box (in addition to all the other extras) and ship the same day the order is received; all other orders being shipped in their regular turn.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED ANCIENT EDITION.



A so-called "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary" is being offered to the public at a very low price. The body of the book, from A to Z, is a cheap reprint, page for page, of the edition of 1847, which was in its day, a valuable book, but in the progress of language for over FORTY YEARS, has been completely superseded. It is now reproduced, broken type, errors and all, by photo-lithograph process, is printed on cheap paper and flimsily bound. A brief comparison, page by page, between the reprint and the latest and enlarged edition, will show the great superiority of the latter. These reprints are as out of date as a last year's almanac. No honorable dealer will allow the buyer of such to suppose that he is getting the Webster which to-day is accepted as the Standard and THE BEST,—every copy of which bears our imprint as given below.

☞If persons who have been induced to purchase the "Ancient Edition" by any misrepresentations will advise us of the facts, we will undertake to see that the seller is punished as he deserves.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO.
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 Cents.

New Model Hall Typewriter

The Best Standard Typewriter in the World. Cheap, Portable, No Ink Ribbon, Interchangeable Type in all Languages, Easiest to learn and rapid as any. Agents wanted everywhere. WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED. Address

National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. P. O. box 5159.
Send for catalog and specimens of work.
13.10

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ESSENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German by George Eliot.

Price, $3.

FREETHOUGHT

IS IT

DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?

A SYMPOSIUM

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAMS,
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,		THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:

Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?

PRICE 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE
CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:
THEIR
Crimes and Persecutions.

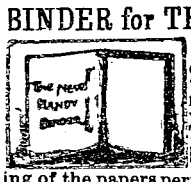
8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,



The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Charles Watts's Works.

The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of Mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.

A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.

Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.

The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.

Saints and Sinners—Which? 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Nature and the Supernatural; or, Belief and Knowledge. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3. Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.

NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.

Christianity: Defectiv and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,

OR, THE

Conflict between Reason and Superstition.

BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Candle from Under the Bushel

(Mark iv, 21); or,

1,306 Questions to the Clergy:

And for the Consideration of Others.

Instructive, Interesting, and Laughable.

BY WILLIAM HART.

Price, - - - 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SISTER LUCY AND HER AWFUL DISCLOSURES.

As to New Hall Convent.
And a Few Words on Auricular Confession.
Price, 10 cents.

POSITIVIST CALENDAR.

Each day and month of the year being named after the great benefactors of the race, whose portraits are given. Instituted by Aug. Comte.
Cards, 11x14; printed on both sides, 25 cents; on two cards, 35 cents.

FALSE CLAIMS

OF THE CHURCH.
J. E. Remsburg.
Price, 10 cents; per dozen, 75 cents.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE.

Liquor-Drinking Commended, Defended, and Enjoined by the Bible.
By E. C. Walker.
10 cents.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES.

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.
By J. K. Ingalls.
Price, 25 cents.

Science and Theology.

ANCIENT AND MODERN.
By J. A. FROUDE.
Price, . . . 25 cents.

Ingersoll on McGlynn.

3c., 30c. per dozen, $2 per 100.

LAY SERMON.

On the Labor Question.
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per doz.; $1 for 25.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S

OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY
in the suit of the Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company against the
Western Union Telegraph Company
Price, 10 cents.

THE STAGE AND THE PULPIT.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 3 cents; 30 cents per dozen; $2 per 100.

THE TRUTH OF HISTORY.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 3 cents; 30 cents per dozen; $2 per 100.

Is the God of Israel the True God?

Narrative of the Five Books of Moses, Joshua, Judges, and the New Testament.
Price, 25 cents.

Masonic Vindication of Right.

Protest Against Persecution.
By O. B. Whitford, M.D.
Price, 15 cents.

MIRACLES AND MIRACLE-WORKERS.

By JOHN PECK.
Price, . . 10 cents.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.

A discussion between
GLADSTONE, HUXLEY, MULLER, LINTON, REVILLE.
On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
12mo, 178 pages, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

"Our Father in Heaven."

By Chas. Stephenson.
1 cent; 50 cents per hundred; $3 per thousand.

PERSONAL EXISTENCE AFTER DEATH IMPROBABLE.

By L. R. Smith.
10 cents.

WHAT LIBERALISM OFFERS IN PLACE OF CHRISTIANITY.

By B. F. Underwood.
Price, 10 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MYTHS AND MYTH-MAKERS.

Old Tales and Superstitions Interpreted by Comparative Mythology.
By John Fiske, M.A., LL.B., of Harvard College.
Price, $2.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

Claimed to be Dictated by the Spirit of P. B. Randolph, aided by Swedenborg, through Mrs. F. H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. [Spir.]
Steel Engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

THE KORAN.

A New English Edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the Life of Mohammed, or the History of that Doctrine which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia.
Sale's edition. Price, $1.50.

HUME'S ESSAYS.

Essays and Treatises. Autobiography and Dialogues on Natural Religion.
By David Hume. Price, $1.50.

SUPERSTITION IN ALL AGES.

By Jean Meslier (born 1678),
A Catholic Priest who Renounced Christianity.
Portrait.
Price, pap., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Man's Nature and Development.

By Henry G. Atkinson, F.G.S., and Harriet Martineau.
Price, - - - - $1.50.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-Book.

Thirteen Lectures on the Bible.
By Rob't Cooper. Price, $1.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs.

By Morris Einstein. Price, $1.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE.

With Explanatory Observations on his Writings.
By Gilbert Vale. Price, $1.

A BUSINESS MAN'S SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS VIEWS.

From a Poor Man's Standpoint. Price, $1.

KNEELAND'S NATIONAL HYMNS

Price, cloth, 35 cents.

LETTERS TO EUGENIA.

A Preservative Against Religious Prejudices.
By Baron D'Holbach.
Price, - - - - - $1.

CAREER OF RELIGIOUS IDEAS.

Ultimating in the Religion of Science.
By Hudson Tuttle. [Spir.]
Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

LIFE OF PAINE.

By J. E. Remsburg.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of Its Elements.

By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Price, - - - - 15 cents.

JEHOVAH UNVEILED.

Character of the Jewish Jehovah Delineated.
Price, 35 cents.

MORAL PHYSIOLOGY.

A Treatise on the Population Question.
By R. D. Owen.
Price, - - - - 35 cents.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. Bennett.
Price, - - - 10 cents.

IF, THEN, AND WHEN.

Church Doctrines.
By W. S. Barlow. [Spir.] Price, 10 cents.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.

By Hurlbut and Wakeman.
Price, 10 cents.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.

Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.

By C. B. Reynolds.
Price, 5 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

The Humboldt Library of Science.

In this series are well represented the writings of Darwin, Spencer, Huxley, Tyndall, Proctor, Clifford and other leaders of thought in our time, at 50 to 75 per cent. lower than usual prices.

We have the Library bound in Complete Sets, as follows:

Old Style.—In this style the volumes average 640 pages 8vo, and are arranged thus:

Vol. I.	Nos. 1-12	Vol. VI.	Nos. 60-70.
" II.	" 13-24	" VII.	" 71-80.
" III.	" 25-36.	" VIII.	" 81-91.
" IV.	" 37 48	" IX.	" 9 -103.
" V.	" 49-59.	" X.	" 104-111.

Cloth, plain edges, $2 vol. (Separately or in sets.)
Half seal, marble edges, $2.75 vol. (In sets only.)

New Style.—Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, are bound in 13 vols., averaging 492 pages each, 8vo, thus:

Cloth, extra, red edges, $1.75 per vol.	$22 75 per set.
Half seal, plain edges, 2.25	" 29 25	"
Half seal, marble edges, 2 50	" 32.50	"
Hlf Mor., marble edges, 2.75	" 33 75	"

In sets only.

All of the following are octavo, cloth:

WORKS BY PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

Man's Place in Nature. Numerous ill.; &
The Origin of Species. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Physical Basis of Life & other Essays.
Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. 2 books in 1 vol. 75
Animal Automatism, and other Essays.
Technical Education, and other Essays. 2 books in 1 vol. 75

WORKS BY CHARLES DARWIN.

Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection; or, the Preservation of Favored Races in the Struggle for Life. New edition from the latest Eng. edition, with additions and corrections. . . 1.25
Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. With illustrations. New edition revised and augmented. . . . 1.50
Formation of Vegetable Mold Through the Action of Worms, with Observations on their Habits. With illustrations. .75

Charles Darwin: His Life and Work. By Grant Allen. 75

SELECT WORKS BY GRANT ALLEN.

The Evolutionist at Large;
Vignettes from Nature; and
Force and Energy: A Theory of Dynamics 3 books in 1 vol. . . . 1.00

WATER, ELECTRICITY, AND LIGHT. BY PROFESSOR TYNDALL.

Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations.
Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations.
Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

WORKS BY HERBERT SPENCER.

The Data of Ethics. 60
Education: Intellectual, Moral, and Physical; and Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other Disquisitions. 2 books in 1 vol. . .75
The Genesis of Science.
The Factors of Organic Evolution. 2 books in 1 vol. 75

SELECT WORKS OF RICHARD A. PROCTOR, F.R.A.S.

Light Science for Leisure Hours.
Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.
Hereditary Traits, and other Essays.
Miscellaneous Essays.
Illusions of the Senses, and other Essays.
Notes on Earthquakes, with 14 miscellaneous Essays. 6 books in 1 vol. 1.50

SELECT WORKS OF WM. KINGDON CLIFFORD, F.R.A.S.

Seeing and Thinking.
The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays.
Conditions of Mental Development, and other Essays.
The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences.
Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. 5 books in 1 vol. 1.25

SELECT WORKS OF EDW. CLODD, F.R.A.S.

The Childhood of Religion.
The Birth and Growth of Myth.
The Childhood of the World. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

SELECT WORKS OF TH. RIBOT,

Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

The Diseases of Memory.
The Diseases of the Will.
The Diseases of Personality. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

THE MILKY WAY.

The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 Illus. By Camille Flammarion.
The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.
The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Nathan T. Carr, LL.D. 3 books in 1 vol. 1.00

POLITICAL SCIENCE.

Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The Eng. Constitution," and History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock. 2 books in 1 vol. . .75

THE LAND QUESTION.

The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.; and Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birbeck, M.A., 2 books in 1 vol. . .75

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Mystery of Matter, and The Philosophy of Ignorance; and
The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton. 2 books in 1 vol. . .75
Science and Crime; and Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E. 2 books in 1 vol. 75

[Continued in next column.]

HUMBOLDT LIBRARY (Continued).

Current Discussions in Science; and Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S. 2 books in 1 vol. 75
The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century; and
The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C Hecker, M.D. 2 books in 1 vol. .75
The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A Record of Adventures, Habits of Animals, Sketches of Brazilian and Indian Life and Aspects of Nature Under the Equator, during Eleven Years of Travel, by Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S., Assis. Sec. to the Royal Geographical Society of England. 75
The Rise and Early Constitution of Universities, with a Survey of Medieval Education. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D., Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in the University of Edinburgh. .75
The Religions of the Ancient World, including Egypt, Assyria and Babylonia, Persia, India, Phœnicia, Etruria, Greece, Rome. By George Rawlinson, M.A., Camden Professor of Ancient History, Oxford, and Canon of Canterbury, author of "The Origin of Nations," "The Five Great Monarchies," etc. 75
Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A. . . .75
Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Logic and Political Economy in the Owens College, Manchester. . . .75
On the Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin. 75
The Dawn of History: An Introduction to Pre-Historic Study. Edited by C. F. Keary, M.A., of the British Museum. .75
Geological Sketches at Home and Abroad. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., Director-General of the Geological Surveys of Great Britain and Ireland. .75
Illusions: A Psychological Study. By James Sully, Author of "Sensation and Intuition," "Pessimism," etc. 75
The Pleasures of Life. (Parts I. and II.) By Sir John Lubbock, Bart. 2 parts in 1. .75
English Past and Present. (Parts I. and II.) By Richard Chenevix Trench. 2 parts in 1. Complete. 75
The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S. Over 80 Illus. 75

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.
By J. K. INGALLS.
Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents: cloth, 75 cents.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Due Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No.2.Rev.Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps..... 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Bible-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell..... 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Capphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 5
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology..... 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
10 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson..... 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
13 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth. By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

SPECIAL SALE
OF
WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2.50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4.50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.50; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels, $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can have their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 58th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
Meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,
Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union
Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.: LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club
Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Milwaukee, Wis., Liberal Club
Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 216 Grand ave., (Fraternity Hall). Lecture followed by debates. The public cordially invited.

Brotherhood of Moralists, No. 903, Prairie City, Ia.,
Meets every Sunday in the Liberal reading-room hall at 2:30 P.M. All Liberals are cordially invited. F. V. DRAPER, Cor. Sec.

San Francisco, Cal., Freethought Society
Meets every Sunday evening at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Seats free.

Des Moines Secular Union
Holds regular meetings at Good Templar Hall, Flynn Block, S.E. corner 7th and Locust streets. Lectures followed by discussion. Friends from abroad heartily welcome.
FRANKLIN STEINER, Pres.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indescretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT.

"Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N.J.

Inquiries are frequently received asking what we know about Dr Fellows, of Vineland, N. J., First, we know that he is a reliable gentleman of rare professional skill, who has earned success by good work. Second that he fulfills all his agreements to the letter. Third, that he has performed cures of hopeless cases that in the olden time his skill would have been called miraculous. Fourth, and last, we know him to be an honest man and a stanch Liberal.—The Better Way.

News of the Week.

OCEAN vessels report narrow escapes from waterspouts.

THE edge-tool factories of America are consolidating.

THE railroad through Siberia will be completed in ten years.

EMIN PASHA says he holds information that would be damaging to Stanley.

IN a late anti-Jewish riot in Austria eleven of the mob were killed by troops.

THE New York Central Labor Union refuses to admit a union of saloonkeepers.

ELECTION frauds are being disclosed in Chicago, Jersey City, and other cities.

CONGRESS has appropriated $150,000 for the relief of the Mississippi flood sufferers.

FOUR whites and forty-seven blacks wrecked on an island of the Hebrides were killed by the natives.

AN English syndicate has bought of the Argentine Republic its eastern railway for $41,000,000.

IN Greece 3,000 women hav petitioned to receive the same higher educational facilities given males.

PORTUGAL still refuses to recognize Brazil, actuated by resentment of that nation's anti-Catholic steps.

THE supreme court of Saxony has decided that boycotting is equivalent to disorderly conduct in the first degree, and punishable as such.

THE commander of a French post in the Congo basin, named Musy. has been killed and eaten, with twelve attendants, by cannibals.

ENGLAND and Germany are unable to settle their boundaries in Africa. A congress of European powers to adjust African possessions may be held.

IN Africa the French are fighting Dahomans, and the Germans are fighting Arabs and their allies in Zanzibar and Uganda and suppressing slave-trading.

THE disruptiv effects of religious sectarianism were exemplified in the Prussian Diet on the 9th, where an attack was made on the admittance of Jews to the schools.

LAST Sunday Deacon Purnell of the African Methodist church at Rossville, N. Y., shot at Pastor Brown during services, charging him with improper relations with Mrs. Purnell.

MRS. CARRIE VANDEGRIFT, a devout and leading church woman, has been found guilty at Mount Holly, N. J., of a protracted attempt to poison her son for his insurance money.

A REPORT from Russia states that the secret trade in poisons in that highly Christian country is enormous, and that 27,000 cases of poisoning hav been reported to the police in one year.

THE St. Jean de Dieu insane asylum at Montreal was burnt on the 6th. Of the 1,400 patien's set loose, 100 perished in the flames, and many escaped to the woods and were not recovered.

AT St. Louis on the 8th, Henry Kunolt, a Y. M. C. A. member and leader in St. Matthew's church, was instantly killed while attempting burglary on the house of George Stalkman, a carpenter.

THE German chancellor says that his country must "with bullet and Bible advance civilization in Africa," and that it must suppress slavery. Omission of the book named would expedite the antislavery movement.

IN Brazil there hav been slight revolts against the government, and a little bloodshed. A few battalions hav manifested a disposition to mutiny. Placards reading, "Down with the dictatorship!" hav been put up.

GENERAL BUTLER calls attention to the fact that Western farms bear mortgages of $3,450,000,000, on which even the interest will not be paid, as it is seven to nine per cent, and the profits on the farms are barely over four per cent.

THE coal miners' strike in northern Illinois, by which 15,000 men were kept idle a month, has been settled. There are strikes in Philadelphia, by carpenters; in Pittsburgh, by plumbers; in Oregon by conductors and brakemen.

THOSE who are adverse to the Australian ballot system urge as a grievance that where it has been used it disfranchised many old farmers who were reared without education but are worthy citizens. Knowledge of reading is required in order to select the desired ballot.

A MILITARY officer in Holland points out that that country has no means of preserving its neutrality and inviolability in a Franco-German war, and that it would be overrun and devastated by being used as a battle-ground. Holland may arm now, like the other nations.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1890.

(E. M. 290.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Calendar for 1890,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1889,	17
Faded Flowers. Poem by J. E. Remsburg,	24
The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue. T. B. Wakeman,	26
Mostly Fools. W. Stewart Ross (Saladin),	36
Record of the Spanish Inquisition,	44
Dates of the Fabrication of Some Roman Catholic Dogmas,	44
The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a Moral. Helen H. Gardener,	45
The Middle Ages. Illustrated,	69
The Priest,	70
The Supernatural World,	71
The Reformation,	73
Future Terrors,	77
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated,	79
Freethought Journals in the United States,	96
In Search of a Spirit. E. M. Macdonald,	97
Why I Left the Church. H. O. Pentecost,	109

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS

Odds and Ends.

EVE was the most particular of ladies. She wore a walking costume that "can't be duplicated" now.—Life.

OUR Sunday laws were evidently made to abate the vice of gluttony. At least it is twenty times as easy to get whisky on a Sunday afternoon as it is to get groceries.—Puck.

S. S. TEACHER: "And, now, who can tell me what special act of favor God showed to Lot?" Little Henry Peck, Jr.: "Please, sir, he turned his wife into a pillar of salt."—Puck.

MAMMA (sternly): "Don't you know that the great King Solomon said, "Spare the rod and spoil the child?" Bobby: "Huh! But he didn't say that until he was growed up!"—Puck.

"AH," he said, as the postman handed him a letter. "An epistle!" "No," said his wife, as she opened the envelope, and a bill fluttered to the floor. "Not an epistle. A collect."—Puck.

YOUTHFUL Baptist: "There used to be a John the Baptist; but who ever heard of a John the Methodist?" Youthful Methodist: "Huh! Guess you never heard of John Wesley."—Puck.

MR. KIRKE DEPEW (Sunday morning): "I see the Rev. Mr. Alban Cope is going to preach at our church this morning." Mrs. Depew: "Why, isn't he awfully high church?" Mr. Depew: "Awfully! He carries his ritualistic notions so far that he wears stained glass spectacles."—Puck.

WIFE: "William, the harness is so far gone at the traces that I am afraid to go out driving until it has been repaired." Husband (wearily): "Another bill!" Wife (despondently): "So many small expenses!" Husband (brightening): "Now's the time to lend the horse to the minister."—Life.

"BOSTON with a crematory!"
Shouts an exchange,
With marks exclamatory,
As if 'twere strange.

Why, that is Boston's glory!
Ever she means
To liv in song and story
By her "baked bein's!"—Puck.

THIS is a smart story, but slightly profane, I regret. A suave, clerical member of our school board, it seems, was examining a small class of boys during a short visit to a certain school. It is uncertain what special point regarding humanity he wished to bring out, or if he only asked the question thoughtlessly, when he said, with a bland smile, "And who do you think I am, my little man?" The small boy thus addressed seemed rather nonplussed, for he suspected some allegorical answer was expected instead of a merely mortal cognomen. Whatever strange fancy passed through the little man's mind as he timidly gazed up at the great one cannot be ascertained, but as a timid answer to the question he whisperingly answered the one word, "God!" And the great man smiled as he patted the small boy encouragingly on the head, saying, "Not quite, my boy; not quite." This story was certified as true by the narrator, but it is open to question, I think.—Glasgow Evening News.

POOR OLD CHURCH!

Poor tott'ring church! And has it grown
Too frail—too feeble—to withstand
The light touch of the jester's hand—
The little dart by humor thrown?

And is its waning strength so small
That e'en the playwright's playful pen
May joke not at its holy men
Without great danger of its fall?

Ah, there's the secret! Smitten sore
The church fears most our caustic chaff,
Which makes its sad disciples laugh
Till, laughing, they believe no more.

Believe no more the foolish lies
In which sky-pilots most delight;
For ridicule restores the sight
And strikes the scales from blinded eyes.

Poor, poor old church! But we shall poke
Our humor at you none the less;
Although you whiningly confess
You are too weak to stand a joke.
—F. W. B. in Calcutta Cosmopolitan Times.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Gems of Thought.

Margaret. How is it with religion in thy mind?
Thou art a dear kind hearted man,
But I'm afraid not piously inclined.
Faust. Forbear! Thou feelest I love thee alone;
For those I love, my life I would lay down,
And none would of their faith or church bereave.
Mar. That's not enough, we must ourselvs believe!
Faust. Must we?
Mar. Ah, could I but thy soul inspire!
Thou honorest not the sacraments, alas!
Faust. I honor them.
Mar. But yet without desire;
'Tis long since thou hast been either to shrift or mass.
Dost thou believe in God?
Faust. My darling, who dares say,
Yes, I in God believe?
Question or priest or sage, and they Seem, in the answer you receive,
To mock the questioner.
Mar. Then thou dost not believe?
Faust. Sweet one! my meaning do not misconceive!
Him who dare name
And who proclaim,
Him I believe!
Who that can feel,
His heart can steel,
To say: I believe him not?
The All-embracer,
All-sustainer,
Holds and sustains he not
Thee, me, himself?
Lifts not the heaven its dome above?
Doth not the firm-set earth beneath us lie?
And beaming tenderly with looks of love,
Climb not the everlasting stars on high?
Do I not gaze into thine eyes?
Nature's impenetrable agencies,
Are they not thronging on thy heart and brain,
Viewless, or visible to mortal ken,
Around thee weaving their mysterious chain?
Fill thence thy heart, how large soe'er it be;
And in the feeling when thou utterly art blest,
Then call it, what thou wilt—
Call it Bliss! Heart! Love! God!
I hav no name for it!
'Tis feeling all;
Name is but sound and smoke
Shrouding the glow of heaven.
Mar. All this is doubtless good and fair;
Almost the same the parson says,
Only in slightly different phrase.
Faust. Beneath heaven's sunshine, everywhere,
This is the utterance of the human heart;
Each in his language doth the like impart;
Then why not I in mine?
Mar. What thus I hear
Sounds plausible, yet I'm not reconciled;
There's something wrong about it; much I fear
That thou art not a Christian.—Goethe.

WHEN we contemplate the immensity of that being, who directs and governs the incomprehensible whole, of which the utmost ken of human sight can discover but a part, we ought to feel shame at calling such paltry stories the word of God.—Paine.

PRACTICALLY the faith of man never had but one object if you press to the root of the matter. This was to form a conception of the order under which man livs, with the view of determining our relation generally to that order. Man might ascribe that order to fictitious causes, or he might study its real laws; in either case his object was to estimate that order which was independent of him, with the view of submitting to it better or of attaining a greater power of modifying it.—Comte.

I HAD fairly laid hold of the conception of general laws. . . . My laboring brain and beating heart grew quiet, and something more like peace than I had ever yet known settled down upon my anxious mind. . . . From the time when I became convinced of the certainty of the action of laws, of the true importance of good influences and good habits, of the firmness, in short, of the ground I was treading, and of the security of the results which I should take the right means to ascertain, a new vigor pervaded my whole life, a new light spread through my mind, and I began to experience a steady growth in self-command, courage, and consequent integrity and disinterestedness. . . . If I hav had the blessing of any available strength under sorrow, perplexity, sickness, and toil, during a life which has been anything but easy, it is owing to my repose upon eternal and irreversible laws, working in every department of the universe, without any interference from any random will, human or divine.—Harriet Martineau.

MAN will know that to enslave another is to imprison himself.—Ingersoll.

LET each one think as he pleases, speak as he pleases, and act as he pleases; and encourage him in so doing, since it is only an encouragement to honesty; and you may want him to be honest in your interest before you are through with him. To grudge one his rights is as mean as to grudge him his money or his happiness; so that intolerance is a vice akin to envy.—Bierbower.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 17. No. 21. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, May 24, 1890. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

A FEW OTHER CHRISTIAN TOOLS FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF THE HEATHEN.

Notes and Clippings.

MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON says that if she had charge of New York streets she would dress a thousand women in "bicycle costumes," set them to work, and soon hav the city "the cleanest in the world."

MR. FOOTE performed a dreadfully difficult task on Sunday evening. He lectured on "Is the Bible Fit for Children?" without shocking his audience. But he took the precaution of leaving the Bible at home lest he should be tempted to read from it.

INDIANAPOLIS is a god-like town, remarks Dr. Monroe. A man will go to the bad place if he bathes or shaves on the Lord's day. And policemen are so religious that they slip in picture galleries in disguise, hav a photograph taken on the holy Sabbath, and then by peaching get the artists fined $5 and cost. Save the Ironclad Age the whole city of Indianapolis will go to heaven in a bunch one of these days.

THREE important decisions were rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States May 19th. The famous Fiske will case was decided against Cornell University. The constitutionality of the Edmunds anti-polygamy law was affirmed, a majority of the court holding that Congress had the power to revoke the charter of the church of Latter-Day Saints and confiscate the church property. The chief justice and Justices Field and Lamar dissented. The Minnesota Anti-Dressed Beef bill was declared unconstitutional.

THE question whether a churchwarden must also be a Christian is before an archdeacon of the English church. A churchwarden in Worcestershire being objected to by the vicar, has publicly declared that he is not a Christian, but says that the vicar knew all the facts two years ago. At that time the vicar intimated to him that, though it was desirable that his own churchwarden should be a Christian, it did not so much matter about a people's churchwarden—and the people's churchwarden he became.

THE bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church, at their semi-annual meeting in this city the past week, unanimously passed the following resolution: "Resolved, That we are gratified at the information received concerning the organization of the American Sabbath Union, and approve of the work thus far accomplished, and we look to it for efficient aid in rescuing the land from the curse of Sabbath desecration." The bishops, however, forgot to say anything about the desecration of the "Sabbath," by the American Sabbath Union holding "rousing meetings" on that day in Brooklyn.

IT may send a thrill of horror down the spine of the Metropolitan Museum, says Life, to learn that the Museum of the Peabody Academy of Science, at Salem, Mass., is now open to the public on Sunday afternoons. As Salem is the original home of the Puritans, this news will be a cruel blow to the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum. That the Salem trustees are moved to this step by a desire to debauch the public is a theory that will not be universally accepted. The obvious difference between these two institutions is that one is controled by a body of benevolent and liberal-minded men in honest sympathy with the working public, while the other is under the unfortunate management of a handful of individuals whose admiration for their own piety is out of all proportion to their usefulness.

THE Galena district conference of German Methodist churches, comprising the counties of upper Illinois, southern Wisconsin, and western Iowa, closed its annual session May 14th, and passed the following resolution by a unanimous vote: "Whereas, We believe that the recently enacted school law in Illinois and the Bennett law in Wisconsin are not calculated to prohibit parochial and private schools, nor to interfere with denominational and German language instruction in them, but that they rather insure a common and necessary English education for all children in those states, especially those heretofore neglected. Resolved, That we, as a district, believe the general principles of those laws to be right and just, and most earnestly advocate their enforcement."

THE agent of one of the big steamship lines remarked to a writer on the Sun that about one-half of the tourists starting abroad at this season of the year had the word "Reverend" printed before their names. "There are few clergymen," the agent said, "who buy return tickets for less than three months ahead, and I am often impressed by the sleek, well-fed, opulent look of the ministers when they come to the office to secure passage. It is a question in my mind whether any single body of Americans enjoy so much of the good things of life as clergymen. They all take good quarters on the ships, and their vacations are long and expensiv. I can't get more than a week away from the office in a year, but three months with the modern clergyman is looked upon as barely time to recuperate his exhausted energies. It is not to be wondered at that business men occasionally feel a little bit surly when they think of the good things that fall to the clergyman's lot."

A DISPATCH from Winnipeg, Manitoba, says: "Ever since the local government passed legislation abolishing separate schools Roman Catholics hav been anxious to hav the constitutionality of that legislation tested. The attorney general refused to allow a test to be made, as could hav been done under the status. Catholics refused to recognize the law, and since it came into force they hav carried on their separate schools at their own expense. Joseph Shaw has now filed a bill against Honore Lamarche, the teacher in one of these separate schools. It complains that Shaw's boy had been attending St. Joseph's separate school in Winnipeg; that according to law no religious exercises should be gone through in school except those prescribed by the advisory board, and that the teacher, who is a Catholic, notwithstanding the provisions of said statute, insists on continuing religious exercises of sectarian character, and insists upon all pupils in said school being present at such religious exercises and taking part therein. The bill asks that the defendant be restrained from continuing religious exercises in the school. It is said by those who claim to know that the case is brought forward at the instance of promoters of the Catholic schools, both plaintiff and defendant being closely allied therewith and in sympathy with forms of religious exercises conducted in these private schools. It is believed the application for an injunction will be thrown out, as the Public Schools act provides that on and after May 1, 1890, Catholic schools in the city of Winnipeg ceased to exist."

Communications.

Our Holy Religion.

The words Jesus Christ should never hav been put in our English New Testament. By being there they are having all the effect of a forgery.

The Judean disciples, of their prophet Joshua, never used these words, nor any other words in their language that had any similar meaning.

They had no occasion for any of such terms or for any of the thoughts such language conveys, to represent their teacher, in anything he ever said or did, or claimed to be.

All these flattering terms and compliments, this excessiv adoration and devotion bestowed upon him in the way of worship by which he is extoled as a God or a superhuman being, crept gradually into the Roman church during the darkest and most idolatrous ages of its history. They are practically misleading, willful forgeries.

None of these things were in existence among the early believers. The phrases, "lamb of God," "son of God," "blessed Jesus," "holy pattern," "the redeemer," "our savior," "our Lord," "God manifest in the flesh," and this indulgence in hyperbole and rhetorical extravagance, that centuries of darkness, hypocrisy, and priestly fawning hav invented to excite, to awe and subjugate the people, did not exist in the beginning, but they hav been the growth of time. They were introduced conjointly with and were concomitants of relics, shrines, monasteries, anchorites, miracles, and all the strange delusions, infatuations, and follies of those dark ages of the church. We hav inherited them from our benighted, priest-ridden papal ancestors. They were put in the Bible and in church literature, and while we know they were all forgeries, we still retain them as the words of God and use them with solemn reverence.

In the fourth century, when Athanasius and Arius with their partisan adherents were fighting, debating, and abusing each other over the origin and constitution of this body of Christ, its functions and office in their scheme or economy of salvation, these extravagant titles, these holy and reverential terms and devout expressions, had not been invented. It was not till these disputes were settled by long and bloody wars, till reason and intelligence were suppressed throughout the empire by the decrees of Justinian, and the church settled down with faith in darkness and submission, that this holy and unctuous verbiage arose and so enslaved the mind and feelings of our benighted Catholic ancestors. We are not prepared to throw off the church incubus they hav imposed on us.

It is remarkable to what an extent religion has exercised this charm and control over the mind and feelings. By mutual consent and concession it is given supremacy over all other subjects that concern our welfare. We can bear criticism and enlightenment on everything but our religion. To point out errors and follies in this, is to invoke the prejudice, the cold disdain and animosity, of the self-righteous. To retain the friendship of the pious and bigoted, is to be blind to their foibles, or to join in defending them. It is believed to be wrong to question or doubt the wisdom of the revelation God makes to the mind of his followers, let its effects be however grotesque and ludicrous. Liberty of conscience in religion is such a precious right it is claimed to be beyond all cavil from the critic, and tolerates with impunity the most erratic vagaries and mental maladies indulged in its name.

Religious people are very often trained to show extreme tenderness and deference toward one another in matters of belief, of devotion to prejudices, and of feeling, in regard to religious observances and duties.

These ideas, habits, and peculiarities are believed to be so sacred, so solemn and momentous, that no matter how eccentric, how trifling or absurd, they are exempt from criticism or correction, because they are too precious and holy to be questioned or doubted.

It would be so indecorous to wound the sensitiv religious feelings of a friend, that we are taught it cannot be done without trespassing on sacred rights that exist alone between a man and his maker. To take liberties with such private and holy relations is to forfeit one's right to the friendship of the pious believer.

This accounts for the many curious notions and vagaries that hav grown up in society in the name of religion.

Many sincere people venerate these words and names, because they hav been so taught. They would feel it a heinous blasphemy for anyone to search into the history of their origin, and then tell the truth about them, just as they would about other words, and as they had a right to do, or as the truth and the best interests of society required that they should. They call it blasphemy to do what Joshua said he was born to do, "to bear witness to the truth." Can anybody think society or the individual will be benefited by living in an error, under a mistake or a falsehood, by remaining in the dark, keeping the truth from them that they might be deceived and misled, to their injury, their disappointment and sorrow? The multitudes are made more or less miserable all the time because they do not realize all nor anything which is promised them on the condition and as the reward for their belief.

This is not simply an individual opinion, but is sustained by the highest biblical authority, in the testimony of the late New Testament revisers, as acknowledged and affirmed in their "Companion" to that revision. The saints, the bishops, and the priests of the Dark Ages left us this legacy. St. Augustine was a champion in this work.

Our holy Bible was the vehicle to bring down to us all this revered verbiage. Augustine perfected to a great extent the scheme of salvation. He contrived a plan to use the mistakes, to reconcile the inconsistencies and harmonize the absurdities in the faith, which none had been able to satisfactorily do before him.

Then it was easy to put these holy words in the text of the Bible to make it agree with the faith.

So we owe our scheme of salvation, including the fall of Adam and the original sin inherited from him by all his posterity; and the statement that "God so loved the world that he sent his only begotten son, that whosoever believed on him should not perish, but should hav everlasting life;" and our redemption through his sacrificial blood, with all the details which enter into the completion of this scheme, to a dissolute, licentious African from Carthage, who went to Milan on a business speculation, and on hearing Jerome preach while there, claimed to be converted, and was induced or employed by the church to exercise his learning and genius in formulating and elucidating this cardinal doctrin of the Christian religion, on which he has made us believe the salvation of the world depends. Augustine was the inventor of this.

After this discovery or invention of a shrewd, educated, ingenious convert to the church, the people were led to see how by the plan they were under such obligations to the meritorious death of the Judean prophet, and having just learned what he had done for them by negotiating with the father for their safety in their sins, through this atonement, how could they do less than express their love, gratitude, and devotion, through all these gracious terms, titles, and phrases, which they gathered up or invented to bestow upon him. When we see this deception, the origin of this imposition of holiness to enslave us to African superstition, why are we so patient and contented to remain the victims of such a shallow delusion, by giving our assent to it?

This fraud has been so long diffused in and impressed upon all professing Christendom that Unitarians and unorthodox Christians, who reject Augustine's scheme, retain the gracious epithets and unctuous phraseology when they think or speak of the Galilean.

All shades of belief or unbelief express in these holy terms that reverence for him which he never claimed, but which he repudiated. The shades of Christian faith we enjoy are determined by the degree of reverence we feel, and attach to the words of homage the followers of Augustine bestowed on his name.

Such is the almost universal reverence felt for this scheme of Augustine that if one speaks light of it or jestingly of the homage it has developed for the sacredness of the language that expresses it, he is looked upon as too irreverent and destitute of appreciation to deserve common marks of respect.

To jest about "Our Lord and savior Jesus Christ," a phraseology invented by a paganized clergy, and fostered by centuries of barbarian darkness into a sanctified shibboleth, to those under the influence of this fantastic delirium, would seem like invading the eternal verities with ridicule and trifling with the sanctities of omnipotence.

Such is human weakness, and such the credulity of confiding ignorance.

The true Christian or wise man reverences things that are really divine, and the high regard he cherishes for these makes him jealous and tenacious about bestowing on any fraudulent inventions of human ingenuity that homage which is due and belongs only to the real and genuin.

He has no sympathy with those pious frauds intended to delude and mislead the simple-minded into folly and error.

Christianity had attained such a reputation and to such a respectability in the first quarter of the fourth century, that the emperor Constantine recognized it as an important factor in giving him the empire.

At the great eucumenical council of Nice that he summoned, he had in attendance three hundred and eighteen bishops, presbyters, deacons, and other learned dignitaries of the church.

It was here the open quarrels over the tenets and doctrins of Christianity publicly began, or at least were recognized by the civil power.

In this council these bishops manifested such a bitter and relentless spirit toward each other as to tear to pieces and destroy their manuscripts, and they were so fierce and tumultuous that the emperor, their president, was unable to preserve any kind of order or decorum.

If the fable of creation had not been written or copied in outline from the old Hindoo records of this story, as found in the ancient Sanscrit by the Assyrian scholars, and if the Jews had not preserved it in the Pentateuch with their laws, which were held as sacred by the faithful; and if this Jewish literature had not been preserved in Greek in the Septuagint Bible, Christians probably would hav known but little about it. But as this fable purported to giv the history of the first man and his fall, the foundation was furnished for some ingenious religious devotee, taking this as a basis, and the promises of the prophets and the hopes of the Jewish nation for a messiah to restore them again to power, and the assumption of the early Christians or disciples, that the messiah has arrived in the person of Joshua—a spiritual messiah instead of a temporal ruler, as Paul properly interpreted the prophets—it suggested the necessity for a scheme of salvation. For their savior, as taught by the prophets, was to be simply obedience to the law written on their hearts—the sense of right made known to them by the God or good that was revealed or manifested within them. But the first Greek proselytes of the Catholic church, those of the third and fourth centuries, were mythologists; all of them believed in a multitude of gods, and lived and died in that faith. These fathers, who really invented the theories of Christianity, believed in demi-gods, ghosts, and invisible spirits, demons, haunting and harrassing men, and were prepared for any bold, supernatural theories to sustain Christianity.

So they accepted Joshua both in the vulgar and literal, as well as in a spiritual sense as the messiah. It was this twofold, compound mythological view, this Greek conception of the messiah, that made the interminable disputes and bitter quarrels among these early churches. It was because they could not agree in respect to the plans by which this messiah Joshua was to restore and save man from his fallen condition, as recorded in the fable of the creation.

The early Christians felt they had to devise some method by which this could be done. The fable and the messiah must be both worked into a system, as counterparts, as cause and consequent, of God's original design in the creation of man.

During nearly two centuries efforts were made, schemes projected, and theories evolved, with a view of bringing into harmony these secret designs of God, in making man fall, that he might show his glory and his power, as well as his goodness and mercy, in providing a means for his restoration. It was to endeavor to realize literally and to show that "in Adam we all die, but in Christ we are all made alive."

Taking these and other metaphysical or spiritual expressions of Paul in a literal, verbal, idolatrous sense, and to show how it was done, taxed the theological skill of the most astute bishops and saints. But it had to be done for the benefit of the pagan world, and for the honor and glory of the Christian religion, and the triumph of the universal church.

It was left for Augustine with his Manichean philosophy, his Greek metaphysics, his learning, his inventiv genius and literary skill, to devise, perfect, and complete the solution of that mystical divine problem of the world being lost through Adam and being restored and saved through Christ. Augustine stands high and most honored by the church as the saint chosen by God to elucidate to man the cruel and inhuman scheme God in his mercy saw proper to adopt to accomplish his purposes, after he had relented for issuing his decree dooming all Adam's posterity to punishment and misery because of this first transgression of eating the forbidden fruit. Yes, it was left for this African pagan, corrupt and profligate as he was, to become converted, so that he could reveal this divine mystery!

In the presence of these historical facts we see the reason why one of the ancient writers could say that the "wrath of man was made to praise God." And why profligates, traitors, hypocrits, liars, and evildoers of every variety, men without principle, honor, or proper moral sense, declared themselvs chosen by God to elucidate and execute his divine decrees. We see why men devoted to magic and sorcery, to credulity in the most absurd and astounding miracles, the most childish and silly theories to account for the occult and inexplicable; who taught the most ridiculous notions of matter, its origin and purposes; who were destitute of every quality except faith in their own fabulous visions, set themselvs up as the chosen custodians and embassadors of God's method of saving a fallen, sin-cursed world.

T. E. Longshore.

Philadelphia, Pa., May, 1890.

I am told it is disrespectful to my father to differ from his views, and filial reverence should keep me from proclaiming opposed ideas. What progress would the world hav made, if this notion had always prevailed? . . . Respect for my father requires me to be loyal to the truth as I see it.—Adams.

Are You Through?

I hav waited for some months to see additional remarks on the question, "Is there an affirmativ, positiv, constructiv side to Freethought?" If the leading spokesmen hav nothing more to say, it appears to me they hav not laid stress enough on the most important point.

As every word has a different shade of meaning, the expressions, "affirmativ" and "positiv," hardly included the ideas which were sought to be brought out. The word, "positiv," for example, is applicable almost anywhere. A man may be positiv as a liar, or a thief, in profanity, dishonesty, or anything that is bad as well as good. Positiv and negativ hav somewhat the same significance as activ and passiv, and apply more to activity and inactivity than to the point at issue. As Mr. Ingersoll and others remarked, Freethought is necessarily positiv even in its negations; for it is an embodiment of activity.

The word "constructiv" included the great thought for amplification; i. e., if I understood rightly. The church charges Freethought with "tearing down and building nothing in place." The object of the inquiry was, are these things so?

Thoughts and systems, as well as beings, hav their infancy; and in that state are necessarily imperfect. Freethought, properly understood, is a constructiv force; but from an educativ standpoint it is quite defectiv. How to make it more perfect, I think, was the object of the inquiry.

Many people, like Mr. Conners in his letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 10th, wonder why so many million people investigate other questions and yet remain in slavish bondage to church creeds. Friends, this is no wonder at all. Just think of the tens of thousands engaged in priestcraft, and the hundreds of thousands as Sunday-school teachers, deacons, elders, etc., as an educativ force, taking the child from its infancy and imbuing it with the ideas which are common to all sects; namely, that man is a fallen being; that Christ's blood blots out sin; that there is a heaven and a hell; that you must believe or be lost, etc. Bear in mind, also, that till within a few years, education was not general, and that the human mind is so constituted that it has to believe something, and then ask yourself, is it any wonder that people are in possession of erroneous ideas? It is possible that a person may be so surrounded in early life, and be blessed with a liberal education to such an extent, as to make him unsympathetic or even unkind toward the less favored. If such had been my experience, or that of many others, they probably would feel differently. Say or think what you will about it, when a religion or a creed becomes a part of yourself it is like tearing away a part of your very being when you find you are being stripped of that which was so dear to you. Think of the tremendous force constantly playing upon one from the ranks of priestcraft and all its allied agencies. Yes, think of all this, against the meager efforts of the ranks of Freethought! "Ranks," did I say? It can yet be scarcely said to hav such, for while there are many Liberals, it is not yet an organized force; at least, all of its forces are not under organization.

Much as I disapproved of Mr. J. H. Burnham's harsh criticism of President Westbrook, yet, to my mind, Mr. Burnham came nearest stating the plan of constructiv work. It must be educational, scientific, and political in its nature; especially political. In every district where there are Liberals, there should be a Sunday-school organized in direct opposition to church-and-state plots, enlivened on all occasions with the best patriotic songs. A lady writer—Miss Wixon, I think—favored something of this plan, but suggested the idea of dancing. I see no more harm in dancing than I do in walking or spading in my garden, but I would no more think of inviting an honest, conscientious Christian to a Liberal Sunday-school and insulting him by announcing a dance, than I would by stating that the next thing in order would be a cock-fight. I lay some claim to being a Liberal, and every true Liberal will "do unto others as he would they should do unto him;" i e., respect conscientious convictions. We never can enlighten people by insulting them. All sects of Christendom understand this, and most of them use every means, sacrificing their own comfort, to get the ears of people. Considering the danger there is of human rights being swept into oblivion by the combined forces of priestcraft, shall we be less wise in securing a hearing that the cursed plots of idle priests may be comprehended by the public mind? I know some people who call themselvs Liberals who seem incapable of talking with a Christian five minutes without denouncing Christ, shouting, "I'm an Infidel," etc. Such people become absolutely repulsiv, and very seldom do any good, but often positiv harm. We must take men as they are; treat them as men; state facts, make our arguments, and let men draw their own conclusions. Introduce the light and darkness disappears. In such meetings, composed of various shades of liberal Christians, the Radical or Infidel element should not intrude their particular hobbies to become offensiv to less advanced people. Public or private debate is the time to take one another's mental scalp.

Construction, viewed in this way, implies the idea of constant, unflagging toil, or priestcraft will tear down what you build up in the young mind.

Suppose we hav a little frank, manly discussion over the Liberal Sunday-school question, in columns devoted to "Letters from Friends?" An interchange of views would doubtless prove beneficial.

Kent, O. JOHN DAVEY.

A Methodist Idea of Science.

Among the curious letters I hav at times sent me I think the following is remarkable. It would not do in me to giv the name of the little town or hamlet, as it might cast the stigma of mental Egyptian darkness over its quiet inhabitants, there being, I suppose, many somewhat intelligent people residing therein. But it is sad, however, to imagin that within a radius of say sixty miles from this city such a crowded collection of littleness could be brought together. D. B.

DEAR FRIEND B——: I can speak highly of the healthful, balmy fragrance of this piny neighborhood. I think my health permanently improving and my cough has greatly subsided; but alas! of the intelligence of those with whom I am constrained to mingle do not inquire. They seem to be honest, frank, and industrious, but know but little outside of their catechisms; and their amusements, the psychological ground and lofty tumblings at their Methodist meetings.

Last Sunday I attended a Methodist meeting, my supply of popular reading having become exhausted. To me a Methodist meeting is a harmless way of killing time. The singing was pleasant, and the local preacher by his fervent prayer seemed to be in high favor with his God. That portion of the service over, the preacher brought forward and introduced the Rev. Dr. K——, who was anxious to make some remarks which struck him as of importance to the Christian world. From what portion of the Bible he had taken his text I was unable to hear, but he was copious from 1 and 2 Timothy. Looking impressivly around upon the audience, he remarked: "My devout friends, as faith, Christian faith, is the cornerstone of the Christian's eternal hope of salvation, hence it follows that whatever disturbs that faith is damnable.

"I feel urged to make these remarks from listening of late to some popular praising of the triumphs of science—science, which I need only tell you is the progenitor of much damnation. Verily, my friends, it should be enough to accept with thankfulness God's bread of life without sneaking and prying around God's laboratory or workshop to see how the thing is done. And, my fellow-Christians, if these blasphemous scientists are to be credited, they hav discovered, O Moses! that the purest water that we drink is full of living, ravenous reptils! Yea, and in the very air we breathe we exterminate myriads of organized beings!

"These, indeed, as the fruits of science, are sufficiently disgusting to delicate tastes. But we are told in the matter of the beautiful—in our admiration of the glorious rainbow—that glorious pledge to man from God (that he will never again drown us out)—that glorious bow that no painter would dare imitate, forsooth, under scientific process, is found composed of but three flat colors—red, blue, and yellow!

"Triumphs of science, indeed! Let us not be blinded, my Christian friends, by this iniquitous scientific delving. It is a libel on God and a satanic attempt to destroy the Bible and the Christian's hopes of salvation. Doubtless there are scientists—yea, thousands of them, in hell but now, experimenting on the extinguishment of the flames of burning brimstone."

Lucky for me, I was near the exit door and slyly slipped out, querying whether the above was intended as a satire, irony, or a first attempt at pulpit eloquence.

Judge Foster in an Amiable Mood.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav read your remarks on the sentence of Mr. Harman by Judge C. Foster, of the United States district court for the district of Kansas, and approve every word of it, and add one more. It was "infamous"—no apologies, no pleadings, no reasoning or excuses can ever satisfy me that Judge Foster was actuated by pure and honest motivs in sentencing Harman to pay a fine of $300 and to the penitentiary for five years. He is a candidate for United States Senator to take the place of Ingalls. He courts the support of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions and the Young Men's Christian Association. Over this sentence they rejoice, and the preacher slaps his hands together and cries amen. They were his enemies, because he was an Antiprohibitionist, but now he has redeemed himself to a great extent in their estimation. Judge Foster is a hypocrit and judicial tyrant. Very often sentiment, or what seems to be such, guides him in sentencing convicted individuals, and not his conscience and sense of justice. The Harman case is one. Here is another:

James Burton, a Republican (Wanamaker-Anderson postmaster), at Jamestown, this county, had a newspaper tilt with Sheriff Marshall, also of this county, and both owners of newspapers, and not daring to print as obscene matter in his paper as he desired to heap upon his opponent, sent him the words found on the inclosed slip, through the United States mails.* By accident the letter got into the hands of the United States district attorney, and he laid it before the United States grand jury, who found an indictment against Burton, and without a single dissenting vote. Burton was duly arrested, and appeared for trial at the April term of court, 1890. Marshall was summoned as a witness. A political boss from this city, and John A. Anderson, organizer and striker, appears on the ground. Of a sudden Marshall is told that he is not needed as a witness, and to draw his fees and go home. He does so. Shortly afterward the case of Burton is called, he stands up and pleads guilty, and this high-minded and honorable judge, this official guardian of the morals of the people, says, substantially: "Mr. Burton, inasmuch as you hav been charged by the grand jury with the commission of a crime, it becomes my painful duty to impose upon you a fine of some kind, but as the matter is of so trivial a nature, I shall inflict the lowest fine the law will permit. You will be fined $10, without costs." It is also said, and I believe it to be true, that he denounced Marshall for allowing the case to be brought, and intimated that if he had it in his power he would fine him heavier than he did Postmaster Burton.

Now, what Harman published I do not know, but this I do know, it lacked the essence of crime, viz., "intent to corrupt the mind." There was nothing vindictiv, nothing spiteful, nothing that was intended to madden nor to insult anyone. It was printed with the best of motivs. He was not defended; he was outraged by the judge during the trial. He was treated by the judge as the convicted, without a hearing. He was sentenced to the highest term of imprisonment by the inhuman judge, who let the nasty postmaster off with a nominal fine.

Concordia, Kan., May 12. J. M. HAGAMAN.

* [Mr. Hagaman sends us the words used by Burton, and we hav also seen the Markland letter, upon which Mr. Harman was convicted and sentenced, and the former is vastly viler than the single word used in the latter, which Judge Foster thought deserved five years and a fine of $300 for mailing.]

A Liberal School.

Mrs. R. E Attwood, of Eaton Rapids, Mich., asks, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 26th, "Why can we not hav a Liberal school?" I think I hav seen this same question asked before in the Freethought papers, and the same suggestion has often been made to me by the Liberals personally.

Mr. Walser made an effort in that direction at Liberal, Mo., but failed, probably because of insufficient support. Mr. Hauswirth, of North Yamhill, Ore., has made an effort to establish a broad-gage school in which the writer of this article has been teaching during the last year. Mr. Hauswirth has continued the school for three years, and has probably spent $1,000 more on the school than he has received from it. But this school is also in a fair way to expire, because we are not equipped to compete with the many well-endowed schools throughout the country. No one teacher is qualified, or would hav the time to successfully teach all the studies required in a good school. A school with but one teacher, without apparatus necessary for successful work, can not offer the inducements that a school can that is abundantly supplied with apparatus, and has sufficient funds to employ a corps of able teachers.

The Christians can raise money, and much of this money from Liberals themselvs, to endow schools for the mere purpose of perpetuating orthodox ignorance; but the Liberals hav not yet a well-endowed school in the United States, except Girard College, and, to our shame, we hav allowed that noble institution to be stolen by the church.

I believe Liberal schools should be established and supported. But I also believe they should be Liberal in the broadest sense of the term—entirely free from dogmatism. I think it would be unwise in Liberals to build schools for the purpose of propagating Liberalism, per se. But it would be wisdom on our part, and would prove to the world that we are in earnest, and that we mean what we say—that we are working for the best interests of mankind—if we would build schools in which the youths of our country could be given a broad, liberal education, but in which neither the "evidences of Christianity," nor the "evidences of Liberalism," would be taught. I think that no school, either orthodox or unorthodox, should in any way endeavor to control or direct the religious opinions of students.

We hav the germ of such a school in our quiet little village of North Yamhill, and are the Liberals ready to help us build up a first-class school? Do the Liberals really hav their hearts in their work and mean what they say when they talk about schools?

Are there not Liberals enough in the United States to contribute $20,000, or $15,000 or even $10,000, to erect and equip a good college building and employ a corps of good teachers? Inducements could then be given to students from abroad. Liberals would not then be obliged to patronize Bible-cramming institutions. Can we not hav a school of this kind in North Yamhill? If the Liberals of this country would like to see such an institution established let us hear from you through THE TRUTH SEEKER. Let us establish a school that will be a credit to the Liberal cause. Liberal friends, let us hear from you.

North Yamhill, Ore. GEO. H. DAWES.

Mr. McArthur's Delayed Rejoinder.

In your criticism you very justly remark, "McArthur writes with the utmost good feeling, and it is evident that there are at least two men in the world who can agree to disagree and preserve their respect and friendship for one another."

But there is another trait of McArthur's which is called "pertinacity." Some might call it obstinacy. It is simply that he is so built and constituted that he always upholds and defends that which appeals to him as the truth. Hence this answer, to determin, in a quiet, friendly manner, which Mac is the more "accurate."

You may remember that when the séance closed I resigned the slates to your care. That when we adjourned and met your friend you expressed your surprise at the results obtained. That when I called at your office to write the article and we conversed about our experiences you said they were surprising.

I wrote the article in your office. You supervised it and objected to one passage only. This I promptly erased. So I claim now, just as I claimed to J. K. P. Baker, to whom the article was addressed, that you indorsed every word.

But you object to my statement that you were "dumfounded." Possibly I was wrong in using that term; but I did so only after due consideration, and for the following reason, the validity of which I submit.

When we were going over the various points and I asked your opinion, your answer was, "It is very funny." I objected to this as unphilosophical, as unscientific, and I thought then, and think now, that any series of circumstances of a serious nature that would cause you to make this explanatory exclamation most certainly showed they had "dumfounded" you. See!

But let us test this "accuracy" question. When I wrote my last article I quoted from memory, and I see I did make a mistake or two, but on examination I find they are not very material. In fact, I think you made a "mistake" when you pointed out my "mistake," as the correct statement makes matters only worse for you.

So, I admit that I did mistake in stating that the message of fifty-two words came on one of your slates, i. e., a slate that you had brought to the séance. My article makes no statement as to whose slate it was, but it does make a statement which either nullifies your explanation of the modus operandi, or stamps me as a noodle. Let me quote it.

"The medium then stated that he thought Brother Macdonald possessed mediumistic qualities, and that he, unassisted, could obtain slate-writing. Mr. Macdonald then took two slates and held them under the table, and the medium placed another slate on his head, and asked the spirits if they would try to write on Mr. Macdonald's slate. Back came the answer, 'We will try to do so.' Remember, please, the slate on which this was written was in plain sight. Not being able to obtain writing under the table, Mr. Macdonald laid the slates on top of it, placed his hand over them, and shortly after writing was heard."

This was the message of fifty-two words, and that is precisely how it was obtained. Slade simply touched the upper slate with his right hand; I grasped his left. You remember the position, exactly. Now, according to your theory, when you held those two slates under the table, Slade's "prehensil" toes did the job; or Slade wrote this long message when the slates were in your possession on top of the table. He could not hav written it before, because, as the account reads, "Mr. Macdonald then took two slates and held them under the table." Slade had nothing to do with them. You are the conjurer, and you fooled me, your friend. Now, this is unkind. You should giv me the tip.

You say: "It is the opinion of one of the experimenters that he (Slade) had ample time to align his letters." Tell us how, when, where. Post us, O Mac! there are millions of our people waiting for the exposure.

Surely Slade gave us every opportunity to examin his table and his slates. He used your slates and with the best results, and now, candidly, don't you think it unfair, every other theory being exploded, to throw "Bottom Facts" in his face?

I hav always held it as a safe rule for my guidance to examin carefully into the character of a man who abuses his neighbor. I avoid the "I am holier than thou." Liberals criticise, and justly so, the Ad majorem dei gloriam theory of the Jesuit, but when it is applied to an attempt to explain away the Spiritual phenomena, then "all is fair in love and war." I am not in accord with the theory that "the end justifies the means."

I do not know the author of "Bottom Facts." I do not want to know him. I do not want to know or quote any man who stands unblushingly before the world as a self-confessed trickster.

You say: "Another point upon which recollections differ is concerning the amount of slate remaining in sight when Slade held them under the table. Mr. McArthur's friend [yourself] sat next to the medium, and his recollection is that all he could see of the slates was Slade's wrist with the cords therein working as though the fingers were moving."

Now, Brother Macdonald, this is my inning. I must ask you to be more "accurate." I must ask you not to place your "recollections" in opposition to a recorded fact.

In my article giving Mr. Baker a general idea of the manner in which the slates were held—and remember the séance was fresh in our minds at that time, and you supervised the copy—I said: "The thumb and wrist of the right hand and possibly one-third of the upper slate were nearly always in view, and the left hand touched ours on top of the table."

And you add, "And his [your] recollection is that all of the slates, without exception, were out of sight when written on, or had been previously out of sight before the writing was found on them."

Now, Brother Macdonald, this is my second inning. Let me ask you, Is this "accurate?" If so, when did the writing take place? Or, is it only a surmise? Which?

You then begin to query, "If the event had been as Mr. McArthur states it, and so much of the slate was constantly exposed, why could not all of it be exposed?"

I could answer that question for you, I think, and from a strictly Materialistic standpoint. But, cui bono?

If we now differ on the facts as they presented themselvs at the time, and as I wrote them down, it is hardly probable that we could come to any agreement on the philosophy.

But to resume. Do you not think that you hav unwittingly placed yourself where your criticism of Slade is practically valueless? You admit yourself prejudiced against him, for you say, "The experiments with Slade were not considered by him [you] to really count in the proposed investigation. This was explained and the reasons given were that the junior experimenter [yourself] possessed grave doubts as to Slade's genuinness, owing to information concerning him previously acquired."

I remember talking with you on this subject, and you related stories sent you from Canada. But what has this to do with our case? Are you and I to determin the truth or falsity of our experiences by the alleged experiences of another? There is not a man in this world, worthy of the name of man, who has not his enemies. The goody-goody alone is beloved by all.

I understood that we had agreed that these séances were to rest on their own foundations. Had I thought otherwise; had I thought that Mrs. Grundy was to be lugged in, we should never hav attended them.

It won't do, Brother Macdonald, to attempt to disparage these séances, or the medium, by referring to counter-evidence, received from the Lord knows whom.

Read my original article carefully and you will see that in all, but one minor detail, it is in strict accordance with my last. All through it runs the same vein of thought, and I know that it was as far from your mind to disguise the truth, as it was from mine.

But, on reading your article, one is impressed with the idea that the medium, when results were obtained, used only his own slates, which, you try to impress the reader, he had, in some mysterious manner, previously manipulated.

So, to answer this, you will pardon another quotation from my original article. "Two of Mr. Macdonald's slates were then cleaned, a small piece of pencil placed between them, and the medium held them under the table in his right hand, his thumb being always in sight. The power was so very great that the medium withdrew the slates and tied them together with the same cord that came with the original bundle."

You then sat on them, and writing came, just as I stated. This is my third inning, Brother Macdonald. Three out—all out.

I might go on and on and on. But why? I merely wished to show you that "accuracy" was not entirely one-sided.

But the most curious part of your counter-statement is the charge that Slade has "prehensil" toes. I am gratified that you hav waived the "pencil under the nail" theory. So let us examin this "prehensil" theory.

How do you know that Slade has "prehensil" toes? Is there on record the statement of a like case except where the party was deformed? I know this, that when the slate was passed to me under the table, if Slade had hold of the other end, even with his hand, the power I exerted would hav pulled him from his chair. I think you know that to be a fact. I so stated it to you, and if my memory be "accurate," you did not attempt to combat it. Consequently I thought that you had had a like experience.

Slade was seated with his left side to the table, and, his right being on the outside, he could hav used only his left, and, although I do not claim that it would be "impossible" for him to use his left, yet, I consider it highly improbable. You were about six inches from him; I not more than two feet, and he must hav had monumental cheek to hav attempted such a diaphanous trick.

"Prehensil" is good; but it don't fill the bill. It is simply an excuse, Brother Macdonald, and I suppose you used it on the theory that "a poor excuse is better than none."

Of course, when I stated that you were "off, way off," I applied it to your attempt to account for the phenomena.

You may hav, and I feel to say that I know you hav, more than "a middlin' tight grip" on "the handful of things" that you know; but I also feel very well assured that you hav lost your "grip" on the Spiritual phenomena, when you attempt to account for them in this manner.

I also notice through your article a vein of thought indicating the more than probable use of conjuring trickery in the production of slate-writing, and I also notice in your issue of April 19th, an extract from the New York Sun, headed "The Miracles of Religion." This, following so shortly after your article, seems to indicate that you value the testimony of a paid conjurer. So I will devote a few lines to that, and if, in those few lines, I can help to explode the last theory, the dernier resort, of my Materialistic friends by giving the counter-statements of better known conjurers, the space will hav been well utilized.

I call this your forlorn hope, for it is noticeable that, when everything else fails, prestidigitation is your last refuge. Of course you understand this as being strictly impersonal. We are such good and warm friends that we do not desire, and will not hav, under any circumstances, any harsh words, or entertain any unpleasant feelings.

One of your authorities, the magician Hermann, is particularly severe on us poor Spiritualists. His language shows ignorance and a desire to puff Hermann.

But there are other, and some people choose to think better, conjurers in the world than Hermann. Conjurers who hav investigated; conjurers who hav the "courage of their convictions;" conjurers who are not so deeply wedded to their art that they can not see where their art ends.

One of these, John Nevil Maskelyne, who was offered $5,000 to reproduce certain Spiritualistic phenomena, wrote: "In accepting this challenge, I wish you to distinctly understand that I do not presume to prove that such manifestations as those stated in the Dialectical Society are produced by trickery. I hav never denied that such manifestations are genuin."

This gentleman, acknowledged as the most skilful conjurer in England, did not get that $5,000.

But he offered, if allowed to use his machinery, which weighed several tons, to reproduce some of the phenomena as expressed through Slade.

Samuel Bellachini, court conjurer to the late Emperor William of Germany, by royal command investigated in order to explode. He writes: "I hereby declare it to be a rash action to giv decisiv judgment upon the objectiv medial performances of the American medium Slade after only one sitting and the observations so made. After I had, at the wish of several highly esteemed gentlemen of rank and position, and also for my own interest, tested the physical mediumship of Mr. Slade in a series of sittings in full daylight, as well as in the evening in his bedroom, I must, for the sake of truth, hereby certify that the physical occurrences with Mr. Slade hav been thoroughly examined by me with the minutest observation and investigation of his surroundings, including the table, and that I hav not in the smallest degree found anything to be produced by means of prestidigitativ manifestations or by mechanical apparatus, and that any explanation of the experiments which took place under the circumstances and conditions then obtaining by any reference to prestidigitation is absolutely impossible. It must rest with such men of science as Crookes and Wallace in London, Petry in Berne, Butlerhoff in St. Petersburg, to search for the explanation of this phenomenal power and to prove its reality."

This noted conjurer, had he been able to certify otherwise and prove Slade a fraud, would hav been ennobled by the Emperor William. But he was honest. He saw that Slade possessed a power far beyond the conjurer's art, and he wisely relegated its investigation to the most scientific minds of the age. Those scientists examined, investigated, experimented, and they are to-day prominent and outspoken Spiritualists.

M. Jacobs, the most noted conjurer in France, also tested the phenomena.

Like Robert Houdin, "the king of conjurers," he became convinced of their truth, and having the "courage of his convictions," published in 1881, in a London paper, his reasons for advocating their truth.

Magician Henry Kellar (one of those quoted by the New York Sun) printed his experience, from which I extract the following:

"It is needless to say I went [to the séance] a skeptic, but I must own that I hav come away utterly unable to explain, by any natural means, the phenomena that I witnessed on Tuesday evening. I will giv a brief description of what took place." After relating the particulars, he concludes: "Forty-eight hours before, I should not hav believed anyone who had described such manifestations under similar circumstances. I repeat my inability to explain or account for what must hav been an intelligent force, that produced the manifestations, which, if my senses are to be relied on, was in no way the result of trickery or sleight-of-hand.

"(Signed) HARRY KELLAR."

These gentlemen, Brother Macdonald, missed noticing that "prehensil" toe.

I could go on and on—fiil pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER. But, again, cui bono?

I will lay these propositions down right here, and challenge any Materialist in the world to confute them:

That Spiritualism to-day embraces more scientists among its adherents, than does either Materialism or Christianity, or both. And I will giv name for name. Of course I include only those who admit having investigated.

That all these scientists hav become Spiritualists from personal observation of, and experience with, the phenomena.

That Medium Slade has been the means of convincing as many of these scientists as any other medium now alive.

I hav written a longer letter than I had intended. I hope I hav established my "accuracy" more firmly than you hav established Slade's "prehensil" toes, else, Brother Macdonald, I fear your readers will hav a very poor opinion of McARTHUR.

Secrets of the Spiritualists.

From a German Exchange.

One will remember the Spiritualistic exhibitions given here in Germany ten or eleven years ago by an Englishman, Mr. Slade, which created great attention. The whole episode is very nearly forgotten, yet an article in Mr. F. Maunthner's periodical, Deutschland, throws some interesting light upon it. In that paper Hildegaard Nilson speaks about the "secrets of Spiritualists." This lady has herself for several years worked as a medium. In any case, she knows a good deal about the dark doings, and what she tells may be true, and if it is not, then it is well made up. So of what she relates with regard to Slade, in whose service her husband was for a long while. Mr. Slade, so tells Hildegaard Nilson, was while a boy educated to become a cautscheek (boneless) man. During his seventeenth year he broke his left arm at a Sunday exhibition in a circus, and was ever since suffering from a stiff arm, finally to such an extent as to necessitate his seeking another specialty to work at. He became an artist and educated himself as a "foot wonder." During his exhibitions his arms were tied across the breast and on the showbills it was stated that he was born without arms, and making a virtue of the necessity he could write, eat, drink, play billiards, and do wonderful feats with his feet. He worked in Germany under the name, "Raphael without Hands." When and how he came to leave the circus business and devote his rare capabilities to the service of Spiritualism I cannot state. In any case, he had become acquainted with an American manager. There he appeared for the first time.

The reader can easily understand the secret of Mr. Slade. He simply performs all his wonders with his feet. Hundreds of suspicious visitors, scientists, and journalists who intended to expose him, hav paid him over their gold for sittings and yet discovered nothing, because they kept watch of his hands, which are large and rough, and not at all fitted to perform even a simple feat. If these visitors had watched Slade very closely, they could not hav failed to observe that he had a noiseless walk. Like a cat he moves across the little carpet of the hotel room in which he givs his exhibition, and his admirers are foolish enough to consider this his noiseless appearance as "spirit-like." The feet of Slade are covered in a very peculiar object-serving manner. Seen from above they appear to be dressed in shoes, but these latter hav no soles and are held in their place only by a fine leather strap which passes under the hollow of the feet. These latter are stuck into a kind of half shoes, like our half gloves [mittens?] which leave the fore part of the foot entirely free. Hence Slade can, while seemingly wearing common shoes, write under the table a message with his toes. . . . Many hav seen and most people hav heard it told, how he lets the left hand rest upon the table while he with the right one holds the writing slate under the table, from whence soon is heard the rattling of a little slate-pencil. It is impossible to hold a slate with one hand and write upon it with the same one, but it is a sheer impossibility to take apart the two slates tied together. But with his feet, which he knows how to use as other people their hands, the whole thing is easily done by Mr. Slade. He receives the slates with his left foot, then unties the knots and writes, while the toes on his left foot hold the slate on the same, with his right hand in a caligraphic manner whatever inspirations the American spirit communicates to him. When paid a little more he is perfectly willing to show how he used to do in the circus. When once a skeptical visitor—it was a rich landholder from Mecklenburg—suddenly looked under the table, if possible to find out the secret, then Slade proved too quick for the fat gentleman that would surprise him. With a well-directed foot and arm movement did Mr. Slade break the writing-slate into pieces, which flew round the nose of the stupefied Mecklenburger; hence he saw nothing, and willingly paid the Englishman, who seemingly fell into an acute attack of heart disease, a considerable sum of money in damages.

The greatest impression and consternation is produced by Slade when he lets the writing-slate fly through the air. The feat is surprisingly simple. While his left hand is resting upon the table and the right one is visible at the edge of the table, where it seemingly holds the slate, the left foot of the medium has taken hold of the slate. Suddenly stretching out his long leg he shoves the same with ghost-like velocity at the opposit end of the table. My husband has told me that on every occasion the visitors became confounded by these manifestations of spirit presence. But most comical it is when sometimes the foot becomes visible above the edge of the table, when the lookers-on invariably believe that they hav seen the elegant hand of a woman. One that has seen the shoe-leather speaks of the soft hand of a woman inclosed in black glacé gloves; another, having seen the naked toes, admires the naked little hand. . . . I need not add that it is the same spirit hands by which the knees of the sitters are touched under the table, now strongly, now softly. It is quite a compliment to our century that such light tricks are well paid for by a believing public.

About Mr. Heywood.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Case continued to May 23d. Geo. W. Searle, Esq., 49 Court street, Boston, will care for it in the preliminary trial. If "held," and the grand jury "find a bill," I shall appear before judge and jury in the superior court. If convicted, J. F. Pickering, Esq., will take the case up on exceptions, and argue it before the higher courts. Geo. W. Stevens and M. A. Warren, of Boston, are my bondsmen. They charged $1 000 for my liberty.

Unquestionably Comstock's New England smutworm, Henry Chase, has a "strong case" vs. right in me invaded; but he and his dirty, malevolent crowd will find us "at home" in every point of this "good fight of faith." Not I am, but the infamous "law" is doomed. The inclosed from the Boston Herald illustrates the general friendliness of the newspapers. Arresting officer McClausland introduced himself to me at the Princeton depot, saying, "Some of old Chase's spotters hav got onto you." Chase has wormed about eight years to sting me. He suppressed Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass" in 1882; we defied him; now he has "got in" his vengeance. When once, in 1884, he approached me personally, I said, "I trust, Mr. Chase, that you will liv to be intelligent enough to despise yourself." Yankee blood boils at Judge Foster's ferocious treatment of Moses Harman. Harman will be liberated; but Foster is pilloried in ever burning, blackening infamy. E H. HEYWOOD.

Princeton, Mass., May 14, YL 18.

WHAT THE BOSTON HERALD SAID.

In a recent number of Ezra H. Heywood's publications, the Society for the Suppression of Immoral Literature thinks it has found an article upon which it can make a case against the publisher. At all events, Mr. Heywood was arrested Saturday evening on a warrant sworn out by Henry Chase, the New England agent for Comstock. He was locked up at the Tombs, and was bailed out Sunday. Mr. Heywood makes the following statement: "This is an attempt to crush me because I hav the courage to tell the truth about abominations that should be exposed. There are some things about which even parents, through false modesty, will refrain from instructing their children, and many a girl goes into the world ignorant of certain matters until by painful experience their eyes are opened. For plain talk I am now under the ban of Mr. Comstock's society and in the toils of his agent, Mr. Chase. The latter took out a warrant several days ago. It was served last night by Inspector McCausland at Princeton depot, and I was brought to Boston. They arrested me Saturday night just to make me lie in durance during Sunday. My bondsmen are George W. Stevens and Marshall A. Warren. This society, at whose instigation I hav been arrested, has tricked me into sending my paper to a decoy, and I cannot say upon just which one of the issues of the paper they will base their charges against me, as probably they may present a string of them. I apprehend no serious results, though, for they hav been cruelly dogging and persecuting me for the past eight years."

Our Criminals.

I hav, from the beginning of Mr. Ingersoll's remarkable career as an instructor of the masses, been an attentiv beholder and a most devout admirer of his remarkable genius. Most men are not appreciated during their lives; but I want it distinctly understood that I am one of his most earnest admirers, and believe, with all true lovers of the race, that the impress his genius is now making on this nineteenth century civilization will be felt not only now, but in all time to come.

The vast field of human duties looked as though it had been completely surveyed by his masterly mind but it was not so. When, leaving those who were the fortunate ones in life's battle, he came to the rescue of those who were not so fortunately blessed, he came like an "armed warrior, a plumed knight." He wrote to the world—having delivered the address to the most learned body of men on this continent, the New York Bar Association—the "Crimes Against Criminals." In this truly humane argument and allegation of facts, he showed that what was reputed good, was not so, but instead that society was as vicious, as revengeful, as savage, as the poor victim, the unfortunate violator of society's laws. Now he has shown his way to redeem, to improve, to moralize, to civilize these poor victims. Good enough; but there is another view of that most important question, which he seems to hav overlooked, and hence this article. Medical men—and I am of that class—all know that our organism is strictly animal, and only development has brought out the intellect. Now, this animal in us can be repressed and the intellect developed, by education. This is the remedy, more education. Let every criminal be educated in the strictest sense of the word.

Let that education be of a business nature, something that will fit the man for a business station in life; something that society cannot rob him of. Let those whose savage nature prompts them to take the life of their fellow-man be educated in the fullest sense of the word. Let their sympathies be developed. Develop not so much the physical, that caused the crime, as the social, until, civilized, moralized, improved, developed by force of man's intellect in improving his fellow-man as he has domestic animals, and everything else in fact, man reigns in safety and happiness. Is it possible, yet, is it not probable, that our lawmakers, with themselvs better selected and reflecting the higher moral feelings of the sensible, virtuous, thinking part of our people, may pass such laws as will not only protect the poor criminal from committing worse crimes, but protect society itself against the same? Then let our criminals be educated. Let all the products of their labor be restored to them, and do not let society rob them, as it has robbed others.

Next, but not least, is another class of society, a product of civilization and of the cruelties of society. It is that of abandoned women. Oh, is there a man, who was fondled on the breast of a trusting mother, whose loving heart pictured "All's well" for her child in life's terrible battle, that could look on one of these unfortunate ones and not feel a pang of conscience? But we must set to work to improve them and make them better. Let every state found and maintain a house of reformation. Send every unfortunate sister there. Educate her, refine her, teach her a way to make a living by other methods than that which is to her a living death. Stop the poisonous springs of physical evils that will corrupt the fifth generation even.

Will it be ever? Yes, I know it will be, and that soon. I know that those grand minds, those ever-living promoters of human good, and self-sacrificing lovers of our race, will so develop, so help, and so force the progress of our race, that soon we will rejoice that not only the fortunate ones will receive nature's blessings but all of our race.

Trenton, Tex. DR. W. C. HOLMES.

R. E. ATWOOD, secretary of the Eaton Rapids, Mich., Secular Society, writes: "We hav arranged for two lectures in our place, to be given May 29th and 30th, by Charles Watts. First lecture, May 29th, 'Christianity and Unbelief: A Plea for Mental Liberty.' Friday, May 30th, 'Secularism and Orthodoxy: Which is the Superior?'"

ONLY when one suspects he is wrong is he afraid. If he thinks his opinions are prejudiced, he naturally wants them not discussed, lest they be exposed.—Bierbower.

An Amateur Preacher.

HOW AN OLD SOLDIER WORKED HIS WAY THROUGH TEXAS.

I had fought for four years in the cavalry, part of the time with Forrest. We were not what you would call a godly set, but good fellows, who would die, or worse, would come near to lying, for a friend —brave fellows: God bless every man of them! We were a reckless set, and death meant nothing to us; but we lived, ye gods! Life since has seemed a faded rag. Well, I lost my leg first. I had a hand to hand scuffle for it, and I will not say how many I sent to their long homes—it hurts now—but—well, my leg went; and not a year after, my arm. I killed the rascal who shot me in the arm. Then came the surrender and I was fit to murder right and left. I could not stand it, or I thought I could not, and trundled off to Mexico. Beautiful country, my dear fellow, lovely, but the lowest down nation on the face of the earth to call themselvs Christians, not morals enough in the whole nation to satisfy one respectable old-time darky. I could not stand it, and determined to come home, no matter what was the state of the country. But how to get here. I had the whole kingdom of Texas to cross, and no money and no railways, and only half rations in the way of legs. I worked my way to the Rio Grande on a broken-down old mustang. About ten miles from the river I came to a Mexican jacal, and hesitated about going in, they are such treacherous villains. But I was hungry, and pausing outside the door I heard a groan. Somebody in distress, I thought, and cocking my pistol, I pushed my way in. An Englishman lay there; he had passed me two days before, traveling across country with a party of Mexicans, but I had caught him up again, and at the last gasp. The place was empty, save for him, and a pot of tomalis steaming near the fire. I looked at the Englishman first, but he was dead. I had heard his last groan probably, and his murderers had been run off by my approach. His pockets were rifled of everything save this pipe—a good pipe in its day; meerschaum, you see, and had a fancy stem; but I prefer a joint or two of cane. I was glad of the tomalis; but I did not think it safe to linger, as I did not know the number of the Mexicans. My clothes and shoes were too ragged, however, to leave a dead man as well clothed as that Englishman was, so I helped myself to a part of his wardrobe. I had not been so well dressed in years, and I laughed a little at myself. "You look as nice as a preacher," I said. Then folding up my old clothes, I left them near the dead man, and taking some more extra tomalis, I left the house. "As nice as a preacher," the words came to me again; it had been a phrase in the army when a fellow was extra well dressed. "As nice as a preacher?" Why not? Who had a better time than preachers? Why not be a preacher? I could not help laughing a little at the thought. Why not be a preacher for the time? And visions of fried chicken and hot biscuit came over my mind, and fiery steeds furnished by adoring flocks—why not? I laughed out loud as I jogged on in the darkness. A preacher? What kind? What kind? Out on the border that did not matter. As far as my experience in that country went, all one had to do was to swear one had had a call; then preach and eat. That was more than twenty years ago, you see. So I did not come to any decision, but left it all to chance.

I was so much entertained by my thoughts that I was surprised when I found myself at the river. It was daydawn, and as luck would hav it, I found some Mexicans with a boat just where I reached the bank. I seemed to strike terror into most of the party, and I shrewdly suspected it was the Englishman's clothes that did it; most probably they had been among his murderers. Some ran away, but two remained, and agreed to put me across. Of course they thought I had money, but I kept my pistol lined on them, and when we reached the other bank, my pay was to jump ashore, and tell them in their language that I was to meet a party of Americans there, and that they had better skip with my blessing and the old mustang. They did.

I shall never forget my first day as a preacher. I thought of the character so much that at last I began to imagin myself one. I arranged sermons with the utmost facility, and all that I had ever learned of the catechism and hymns and prayers came back to me. The day passed swiftly enough, although hopping along on crutches was such weary work that I began to think longingly of even my old mustang.

About sundown I reached a settlement—a cattle ranch—but evidently not of the highest character. Yes, they would take me in. The woman of the house had a pathetic face, and looked at me searchingly, almost suspiciously.

"I am a man of peace," I said, in answer to her look, "and I hav lost my way."

"You look like a preacher," one of the men said.

I bowed my head.

"I thought as much," he went on, turning to the woman, whose face had brightened up.

"I ain't seen a preacher in five years," she said. "Ain't you hungry?"

"I am, indeed, my sister," I said; "as hungry as your spirit must be."

"Now you're shoutin'!" the man cried, slapping his leg. "That's the way to talk. I've heard 'em a hund'ed times; an' mammy would always come to me an' say, sof'ly, 'Go kill fo' chickens, Billy.' I'd know that talk anywhere. Golly! go kill something, 'Liza—a horse—the baby—anythin', an' call in all the fellers; bound to hav something to eat. Gosh! your stomach thinks your throat's cut, don't it, mister?"

I was wild to laugh, by gad, sir! the rascal hit the nail so squarely on the head; but I answered quietly enough, "I would like a little food," adding, meekly, "if you hav anything to spare."

The man went out roaring with laughter, and the woman came close to me.

"Did you ever marry anybody?" she asked.

It gave me a sort of a chill for a minute.

"No," I answered; "I am not married."

"That ain't what I mean," she said. "Me an' Billy hav changed rings, an' promised befo' the boys, an' mean it too; but we ain't had no minister nor no magistrate, an' somehow I'd ruther hav some words said. It's been three years gone now sence we changed rings."

"And you wish me to say a few words?" I asked, my compunctions fading as the woman's story went on.

"Yes, if Billy's willin', but he don't like preachers much. He don't believe in 'em; but I do. I'll ask him," and she went out.

This was a position I had not counted on, for the official acts of the clergy had not occurred to me, and for a few moments I wished myself well out of the dilemma; but I must go on now, for to show these men that I was deceiving them might mean death. So while I waited I trumped up, or tried to trump up, the Episcopal marriage service; but something else would come instead, and looking into the matter afterward, I discovered it to be the catechism; but then I knew only that would not serve my purposes, and I was still at sea when the woman returned.

This time she was followed by several men, among them "Billy."

"Come in, boys," he cried; "we're goin' to hav a weddin', me an' 'Liza, an' that means a supper; don't it, 'Liza? An' to-morrer we'll hav to loan Brother—what's your name, mister?"

"Stiggins," I answered, with a back glance at Mr. Weller.

"Stiggins," Billy repeated. "We'll hav to loan Brother Stiggins a horse. I tell you, boys, it's a good thing we're got somethin' to drink to-night, an' me an' 'Liza 'll change rings again."

It was a trying moment. To save my life I could not remember anything to begin with, and as the couple took their places in front of me I felt puzzled to death; but I could not fail, and I made a mad dash.

"What is your name?" I asked, solemnly.

"Billy Sprowle," was answered promptly.

"What is your name?"—to the woman.

"'Liza Dobbs."

"Who gave you that name?" was the thing that seemed to come next, somehow, but I realized at once that it would not do, so determined on a common-sense question, and asked: "Are you both of one mind in this matter? Answer as you shall answer at the last great day!" and I let my voice fall into profound depths.

"Yes," came from the couple; and from the subdued expression of the company I saw that my voice had impressed them. This encouraged me, and I made another grab among my memories.

"William, will you hav this woman to be thy wedded wife, to hav and to hold until death us do part?" And the words tumbled out so glibly, once I got started, that I left the "us" unchanged, and recklessly plighted my troth along with them. But they did not notice this, and Billy's "Yes, sir," came like a shot. "Eliza, will you hav this man to be thy wedded husband, to hav and to hold until death us do part?" I said once more.

"Yes."

"Change rings," I went on, "and both of you say, 'With this ring I thee wed, from this day forth for evermore.'" They obeyed, Billy looking meeker and meeker as the service went on; then joining their hands, I looked at the company sternly, saying, "I pronounce William and Eliza Sprowle to be man and wife."

By this time lots more of the service had come to me, but somehow I could not bring myself to say it; it seemed to stick in my throat. But what I had said had made an immense impression. Every man there looked at me with something of awe in his eyes, and I heard one whisper, "A rale sho-'nuff preacher;" and the answer, "You bet; he crawls me."

The ceremony over, I sat down by the fire to wait for further developments, and the men stood about awkwardly. By this time, however, I felt quite in character, and said, in a mild tone, "Hav you much of a settlement here?"

"Not much," the oldest man of the group answered, "an' the nighest neighbors is ten miles off. It's a right lonesome country."

"Yes," I answered, "but good grass."

"That's so, an' free. Billy Sprowle has made a right good thing of comin' out here, him an' these boys; I ain't been here long."

"Do the Mexicans trouble you much?" I went on.

"Not as much as they'd like to." Then, with an effort, "Do you think killin' a Mexican is any harm?"

"No," I answered promptly, then cleared my throat slowly—"no, not if they molest your property."

The man passed his hand over his face, looking at me curiously, while I gazed sadly into the fire. After a moment's reflectiv scanning of me he drew nearer, and putting his hands in his pockets, stood looking down on me.

"You've got common sense, mister," he said, "if you are a preacher, an' you answered mighty lively at first 'bout killin' Mexicans; you know they oughter be wiped off the face of the earth!"

I gave him look for look. "My brother," I said, "I fought for four years in the war, and, as you see, half of me is in the grave. I don't stand back on killing or being killed when it is necessary. And I like hunting, too," I went on, "but don't like to hunt buzzards."

"Shake!" he cried, holding out his hand; "that's good 'bout buzzards; Mexicans an' buzzards is one. Sakes-er-mussy!"—turning to the rest—"that's sense, boys, preacher or no preacher."

They all drew near after this, and sat down near the fire; they had fought, too, and war stories were plenty, and before supper was over we were the firmest friends.

Next morning, however, after the night's reflection, Billy came to me, confidentially.

"Are you a sho-nuff preacher?" he said; "or did you jest put it up on the old girl? It won't make no diffrunce to us boys, you know, an' Liza's done eased off 'bout bein' married, an' we won't make her onressless by tellin' her no better—but are you a preacher?"

"Why not?" I asked, drawing myself up. "What hav I done that a preacher should not do?"

"Oh, nothin'—nothin'!" rather hurriedly; "only you've got so much horse-sense, an' preachers, you know——"

"My brother," I said, gravely, and I laid my hand on his shoulder in a way that would hav done credit to an archbishop, "you don't understand; I got my sense before I was called to be a preacher; I was a man first, and then a preacher. Do you see?"

"You bet; an' you'll always be a man?"

"Always."

"That's good," heartily. "I'd like to hear you preach."

Well, those fellows could not do enough for me; they lent me a horse that was to be left at the next town; they rode a long way with me, and Billy gave me a Mexican dollar as a marriage fee. But poor 'Liza, her gratitude was pathetic, and she brought her little child for me to bless. That got me, rather, but I gave him the best I had; it was the last blessing my dear old mother gave me: "The Lord bless you and keep you, my boy, and bring you home at last," she had said. I gave it to the little fellow, and the mother cried. And I did not feel mean a bit for deceiving them, for I had done good. I had made that woman happy, and had raised the clergy in the estimation of these men. To tell you the truth, I felt myself a missionary.

About sundown I reached a little town, a very small affair, and stopped at the largest house I saw, and the hardest-looking case I had ever seen came to the door. I asked if I could stop there; he said he would see, and went back into the house. Then a woman came—harder-looking than the man, if that were possible. I told her that I was a man of peace, and wanted to spend the night; that I made a point of going to the houses of the best people in the town, because they would hav the most influence, and could help me in my work. That woman's face was like a flint when I began, but before the end of my speech the whole expression had changed.

"I ain't no 'Piscopal," she said, the defiance that had left her face still lingering in her voice.

"Of course not," I answered glibly. "I take you to be a wash-foot Baptist."

"How'd you know that?" she cried.

"There's a look in your face," I said.

"My soul an' body! Come in," and she flung the door wide. She put me in a very decent room, and presently I heard wild shouting and a cannonade of sticks and stones. As I had distrusted both the man and the woman I was startled for a second, but the screech of a chicken restored my equilibrium. "Fried chicken for the preacher," I said to myself, and determined that I must become accustomed to that side of the ministerial life—and a very good side, too. In a marvelously short time I was called to supper.

"I s'pose you don't mind havin' a bait?" the woman said; "so I jest killed a chicken, and knocked up a few biscuit."

I did hav a little feeling that the chicken was scarcely dead, and that the biscuit had rather a jaundiced look; but I had been intimate with starvation too long to be fastidious, and I ate with a will; and as I remember it now, the coffee was not bad.

"Is you goin' to hav a meetin'?" was the woman's first question as I took my seat at table. "I 'member you said somethin' 'bout your work, an' we ain't had nothin' but 'Piscopal religion here for a long time."

"And you don't like it?" I parried.

"No, I don't; there ain't no grit to it; I want my religion to hav some spirret; I'd rather hav a revival now than money; an' the 'Piscopals jest keep right along quiet an' easy, an' I ain't got no mo' patience with 'em. I'm tired."

"Is there a clergyman here?"

"No; he's dead. He come for his health, an' worked an' died 'bout a month ago; we ain't had nothing sence; but if you're a Baptist preacher, there's nothin' henders why you can't hav a metin'."

"If you think so——"

"Yes, I do think so; you look like you can preach."

"Yes, I think I can."

"Then I'll send John out. John! I say, John!"

The man who had opened the door for me came in.

"I want you to go round this town, John," she began, "an' tell the folks that Brother—what's your name?"

"Stiggins."

"That Brother Stiggins will hav a meetin' tomorer, startin' right early."

John looked at me slowly, then said the one word, "'Piscopal?"

"No," and the woman looked as amiable as a setting hen. "Ain't you got no sense, John Blye? Did you ever see a 'Piscopal look like him? He looks like he's got grit. Go 'long an' tell Brother Williams to come over an' help 'range 'bout it; go 'long."

I must confess I felt rather queer as the combat thickened around me. After all, suppose I could not preach? And I said, mildly, "Is Brother Williams a good preacher?"

"No, he ain't"—frankly; "but he's a mighty good prayer. I've heard him pray right along for an hour, an' it never seemed like he drawed a breath. Yes, he's a mighty upliftin' prayer; he'll help you, don't you fret. Jest you preach, an' hit hard too, and Brother Williams he'll raise all the hymns an' do the praying; an' he does line out hymns beautiful."

This made me more comfortable, and it was easy enough to arrange matters with Brother Williams, a small, red-headed man—a druggist—a fussy, nervous little creature, with a long red nose that he used as a speaking trumpet. Very soon he and Sister Blye had arranged all the details; even the hymns were chosen, and nine o'clock the hour fixed on. I was awfully tired; but I chose my text, and dreamed out my sermon, for by morning the whole thing was in my mind—a grand thing, with enough fire and brimstone in it to destroy the universe. "Where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched"—that was my text. I tell you, I hav often thought that I missed my vocation in not being a preacher. If you could hear me once, I believe you would be converted yourself. By Jove, sir! all the town was there the next morniug, in a big place like a barn, which all creeds used in common. Brother Williams was there, and his nose looked longer and redder than before.

We started them off with a hymn; then Brother Williams prayed: such a prayer! It was ridiculous, sir! I was dying to laugh. If you could hav heard his instructions to the almighty and his fault-finding, too—it was awful! But Sister Blye—the way in which she groaned and grunted over Brother Williams's presentation of the shortcomings of the Lord was edifying in the extreme. Then we had another hymn—a regular dynamite fuse; but nobody showed any signs of religion except Sister Blye. Then I began. I began quietly but in the deepest voice I could muster. First I gave a picture of heaven, quoting Milton copiously; but my audience was quiet under that, and I realized that they were in a coolly critical frame of mind. Further, I realized that I had no idea of heaven or eternal bliss or anything for that matter. I could not conceive of eternal bliss, for the happiest moments of my life had been passed in battle. I tell you there's nothing like the rush and madness of a charge, and you know that is no vision of heaven. I think I failed in my description of heaven; so, according to my plan, I came down to this life. I knew that through and through, and I flayed humanity alive and rubbed salt in. Then they began to prick up their ears and Sister Blye looked uneasy. I liked to see it, and a determination came over me to do a little good if possible. And I believe I did. I gave them the devil for a good half hour straight from the shoulder. Then I dropped down to hell, and then I made the fur fly. I knew sin and remorse. Yes, I knew hell better than heaven; it came easy and I drew it strong. In twenty minutes that place was like bedlam. I hav never heard or seen anything like it and never want to again. Such howls and screams and shouting! I did not know what to do exactly, for nobody could hear me, so I stopped and sat down. Well, sir, little Williams, who had been lying flat on the floor howling, hopped up as spry as a cricket and lined out a hymn. It was the best thing he could hav done; it served as a vent for the excitement and they sang with a will. Then he prayed and exhorted people to come up and be prayed for; in fact, he got up a first-class revival on top of my sermon. Then he took up a collection, to pay my expenses, he said. I don't know how much was given him, but I think he and Sister Blye got a very good return for their labors. They gave me $5. I refused to preach any more that day, and told them I must go on. Well, sir, people followed me to the next town—followed to hear me preach again, they said. There was a real Baptist preacher there, a very good fellow, who kept a shoe shop. He was delighted with the thought of a revival; and he and Sister Blye and little Williams arranged the program. I had caught on to their methods by this time and determined to take up my own collections. I did the work and was determined to get my pay. We were in that town three days and every one of them field days. You never saw the like—such a raging, tearing time I hav never conceived of. But the funny part was that when the collecting time came and I started out on my own hook, Sister Blye and Williams and the other preacher all dashed after me full tilt and it was simply a race; but many refused to giv to anyone but me, which made me hav fewer compunctions about taking the money, for it showed me that they understood each other.

By Jove, sir, at the end of three days everybody wanted to be baptized, and I nearly exploded when their own preacher told them that there was not enough water anywhere short of the Gulf to wash away their sins, but that he would do the best he could for them in the water-hole outside the town.

I did not take any hand in that: the official acts I did not touch, nor did I ever pray in public; but I did not see any harm in telling them their sins, and in making them wish they had never been born because of the fright I put them in. It was pitiful. But I did good; I know I did good; and I made money. By this time I had learned all the tricks of the trade, and my brother preacher proposed that we should agree to work Texas for three months, I doing the preaching, and he doing everything else; that we should dismiss Sister Blye and Williams immediately, and divide the proceeds into two parts instead of four. That fellow—Stallings was his name—was something of a wag, and he told Williams and Sister Blye that we had entered into a partnership, and did not want them any more; that we had concluded to stop the circus business and teach religion.

It was astonishing how much money we made after that, and how wonderfully successful we were. The papers took us up: "Stallings and Stiggins," and their grand revivals; their preaching and praying and singing, and the rest of it. We went from town to town in style, lived on the fat of the land, and had as many horses as we wanted. And I added a postscript to my sermons that any people who changed their creeds under stress of excitement were renegades and fools. I wish you could hav seen Stallings's face the first time I tacked that on; but it took like wildfire. All the preachers in that town came to hear me, and thanked me for my sermons; and after that Stallings and I gave something always to every Protestant church in every town, with always the proviso that it was to go to the preacher's salary—that much extra. Well, that got out, and the effect was miraculous: money flowed in. Don't you see that I did good? Then the scoldings I gave! By gad, sir, they should hav taken the skin off. Bless your heart, how I went for the people for not doing their duty by the ministry! Why, Dante's lowest round was nothing to what I promised them if they did not do better.

But the end of it all was wonderful. We were at a little town not far from the Louisiana line, and I was preaching fire and brimstone for dear life, when a face in the congregation caught my eye. It was the saddest face I had ever seen; past middle age, with sunken cheeks and silver hair. But it was the eyes that took hold of me—big, pitiful brown eyes that looked hunted and starved.

After I had seen that face I could not preach anything but comfort and hope: I could not say anything hard to that woman. When I came out she was waiting at the door.

"I want to speak to you," she said, and took hold of my arm. "You come from my part of the country—I know it by your voice—and you are a gentleman, if you are——" And she paused.

"If I am an itinerant preacher," I put in.

"Yes; it does seem strange to me," she answered, frankly; "but you are a gentleman, and you come from the South Atlantic coast."

"Yes," I admitted, beginning to feel thoroughly ashamed of my position; "and is there anything I can do for you?"

"I hav come to you for help," she answered, tremulously, "because I seemed to recognize you in some way; and yet your name is not a coast name—Stiggins—I hav never heard it."

"Outside of 'Pickwick,'" I amended. "But where do you liv? Can I go home with you and talk to you?"

"Just around the corner, we hav one room. Yes, you can come; my daughter is there."

In five minutes we reached the room—a poor, miserable little place, but absolutely clean—and sitting there sewing, a young girl, not more than eighteen. She looked up in surprise.

"Mamma!" she said, and I seemed to hear my own little sister speaking, so familiar were the accents.

"This is Mr. Stiggins, dear, the preacher; he comes from home, and will help us." Then motioning me to a seat, she went on: "My name is Vernon—one of the South Carolina Vernons, you know."

"And your maiden name?" I asked, rising in astonishment.

"Asheburton."

"Marion Asheburton?"

"Yes," her eyes dilating with wonder.

"And a long time ago, when I was a little boy, you was engaged to Jack Stamper, and he died?"

"Yes—oh, yes! Who are you?"

"Willie," I said—"Willie Stamper, the little brother; don't you remember?"

"How, then, is your name Stiggins?" said the daughter, severely. But the mother asked no questions, needed no proofs; she simply fell on my neck, and cried as if her heart would break. You see she had gone back to her first love, and her first sorrow—had gone back to days when prosperity and luxury were the rule. Poor thing! poor thing! Then our stories came out—hers pitiful beyond compare; mine, that seemed to grow more vulgar and disgraceful as I told it. The telling of that story was an awful grind until the girl laughed—the sweetest laugh I had ever heard. God bless her! They were destitute—these Vernons—had moved to Texas, and the father had died, leaving the mother and child to struggle alone, poor things! When I met them they had not tasted of food for twenty-four hours. I took charge of them at once, and sent them to New Orleans to wait for me. I had a good deal of money by that time, but could not break my engagement with Stallings, and it lacked a month of being out. But I preached for all I was worth that last month, and tears and dollars came like rain; and at the last I had literally to run away from Stallings. He said we would make our fortunes if we stayed together; but I explained to him that I was not so anxious about making money as I was about looking up some heathen I knew across the Mississippi. So we parted, and I left Texas with two hundred dollars in my pocket, besides what I had sent Mrs. Vernon.

Well, we were married—the girl and I—and came home here to Alabama, where I hav managed to liv ever since. But I hav never been as rich as I was when I was a preacher, for all my expenses were paid, I had horses to ride, I lived on the fat of the land, and had more clothes made for me by adoring sisters than ever since. It was a wonderful time. They are forgotten now, those happy-go-lucky old days, and my little wife lived only a year—only a year.—From "An Ex Brigadier," by S. B. Elliott.

No Press Censorship.

From the Chicago Herald.

Mr. Sweney, of Iowa, instigated by Anthony Comstock, has recently introduced in the House of Representativs a bill to amend the law prohibiting the sending of obscene publications through the United States mails. The proposed amendment excludes from the mails "any pamphlet, magazine, newspaper, story-paper, or other paper devoted to the publication, or principally made up, of criminal news, police reports, or accounts of criminal deeds, or pictures and stories of immoral deeds, lust, or crime."

The Herald will support as earnestly as anyone every wise and rational measure for the suppression of immoral literature. But it believes that this can be effected without sacrificing or putting in jeopardy the freedom of the press, which would be an infinitly greater evil than the other. Mr. Sweney's proposed law, like too many of the United States statutes, is a mere drag-net, vague and treacherous enough to disgrace the czar of Russia. If it were enacted, the whole newspaper press of this country would exist merely by the grace and forbearance of Anthony Comstock and the postmasters. Under it, every newspaper in Chicago, for instance, during the Cronin trial, might hav been excluded from the mails.

This habit of reducing every crime to an offense against the United States mails and allowing it to be tried summarily by the postmasters or by the cranks, instead of according to law, by the courts, has gone far enough. The congressman who favors Mr. Sweney's amendment is a doomed man.

WITH regard to politics, properly so called, with regard to all that concerns the relations between the governing and the governed—between power and liberty—I cannot conceal my opinion, that the influence of the church has been baneful.—Guizot.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MAY 24, 1890.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book.

Our readers will be glad to learn that the following chapters in the Pictorial Text-Book, which hav been completed during the past week, are the last:

HEAVEN.

On the Probation Plan—Scene Outside of the Gates of the New Jerusalem.
On the Probation Plan—Scene Inside.
Into Heaven via Purgatory.

HELL.

How to Make the Road to Salvation Plain.
The Glory of Election.
The Amusement of the Saints in Heaven.
A Clerical Surprise Party.
The Theologians and Skeptics.
The Devil's Occupation Gone.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Talmage's Petrified Blasphemer—A Religious Campaign Story of '86.
The Futility of Hitching Evolution to Orthodoxy.
The Evolution of a Sacrament.
A Hint to Talmage, Sam Jones, et al.
The Women's Christian Temperance Union's Crusade.
Tools of the Clerical Trade.
The Modern Balaam.

The book is now in the hands of the pressmen, and will be out as soon as the mechanics can finish their work upon it.

Some of the cuts published during the past four years were upon incidents of the day, and their point is lost with the lapse of time. These we hav omitted, and consequently the number falls a little below two hundred; but there are ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-FIVE CUTS and accompanying each a page of reading-matter—citations of facts, statistics, and from historians and scholars—making a large and exceedingly useful volume. We call it a text-book because it will furnish texts for a thousand arguments why the church should be deposed from its present position in the country.

Mr. Watson Heston's portrait, drawn by himself, will ornament the work, which will be sent postpaid for $2.

A Foolish Bill.

Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, the champion with H. W. Blair, of New Hampshire, of the God-in-the-Constitution party in the United States Senate, has brought into that body a bill for a national university at Washington. The government of the university he would hav vested in a board of regents, consisting of the president, the chief justice, the cabinet ex officio, and twelve members appointed by a concurrent resolution of Congress.

One of the provisions of the bill is that no sectarian doctrin or belief shall be taught or promoted in the university, but this prohibition shall not exclude the study of Christian theology. This is much like Senator Blair's Educational amendment which provides against the establishment of religion by the states, but would force each state to maintain public schools wherein should be taught the principles of the Christian religion. Evidently Edmunds and Blair draw the inspiration for their measures from the same source.

The Sun calls this provision the whimsical part of the bill. "Where," it asks, "does Mr. Edmunds expect to find a theological faculty that can teach Christian theology without maintaining doctrins and beliefs that will be regarded as sectarian by some body or other of Christian believers?" and answers its own question by saying that "his only refuge must be in some vague phrase about the 'fundamentals of the Christian religion,' but what seems vital and fundamental to one religious communion may seem accidental and unessential to another. Not even a theological faculty composed of scholarly and indifferent Agnostics could avoid the teaching of some special doctrins." This is undoubtedly true, and a further truth is also stated by the same paper, that "Hebrews, not to speak of Agnostics and Atheists, would be justified in objecting to the teaching of Christian theology in a national university."

Mr. Edmunds's scheme is a preposterous one in every way. It is no business of the national government to provide a university education for those favored few of the population who could find time and means to take it. Such can look after themselvs.

Gathering Clouds.

The opponents of the Bennett law in Wisconsin hav more plainly shown the reason for their hostility to that measure. At a recent meeting of the Northwestern district of the Lutheran Joint Synod, of Ohio, which embraces Wisconsin with other states, a series of resolutions was adopted respecting the compulsory laws of both Wisconsin and Illinois. The objection of the Lutherans to the law, as stated by the conference, is that the public schools are non-religious and that it is "a sacred matter of conscience to establish and maintain our own Christian schools." The Lutheraner, of St. Louis, says: "The German Lutherans are opposed to the Bennett law, not because it demands a certain amount of English, but because this law is a gross interference of the state in the domain of the church. For, according to the Bennett law, it is possible to compel parents to educate their children in the public schools, where no religious instruction is imparted, even if the children in the parochial schools know three times as much English as the law demands." Prof. E. J. Wolf, of the Lutheran Theological Seminary, in Gettysburg, Penn., in an article contributed to the Christian at Work, denounces the Bennett law as "a wanton and cruel invasion of their ["pious foreigners'"] sacred right to educate their offspring in the best manner possible under the abnormal and temporary conditions." He says that these "pious foreigners" are "denied the inalienable right of teaching their children the oracles of God." He makes the issue one of religious liberty, asking: "For what is religious liberty if it does not include the privilege of giving public religious instruction to the young; if it does not allow Christian people to select Christian teachers who will daily instruct their offspring in the tenets of their religion?"

It will be seen by these extracts that the Lutherans are in the same boat with the Roman Catholics. They are opposed to our public schools because the schools are not distinctivly religious—though every one knows that they teach altogether too much religion—and they propose to help destroy them unless they are allowed the "privilege of giving public religious instruction" in them. And so we hav in Lutheranism another imperium in imperio, of much smaller dimensions, of course, than the Roman Catholic imperium, but just as viciously disposed toward American institutions. It is well to know this, for the way to deal with it is made much plainer.

If it be granted at all that the state has the right to educate the children, the Lutherans are hopelessly illogical and wrong. And Lutherans, of all others, as the Independent points out, should not question this right, for Luther himself, in a letter written in 1524, said: "I maintain that the civil authorities are under obligation to compel the people to send their children to school." The only consistent way, therefore, for the Lutherans to oppose the Bennett law is to join with the Anarchists in opposing not only the state's right to prescribe the curriculum, but its right to meddle with educational matters at all. Denying this last, it can go on to deny everything and land in anarchy; or it can go the other way and maintain its own right to control the state. Undoubtedly, the latter is the course it will pursue.

There is, sooner or later, bound to be trouble, and grave trouble, in this country between the church and state. Grant spoke prophetically when he said that if we are to hav another contest in the near future of our national existence, the dividing line would not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. This contest is rapidly approaching, and it is to be between the forces Grant predicted. Roman Catholicism, reinforced by all the sects whose medieval doctrins compel them to keep their people ignorant and in mental bonds, will stand in the forefront on one side; on the other, the front rank will be the enlightened hosts of Liberalism, backed by all the progressiv and persecuted religious bodies. There is no way to escape this conflict but by promptly secularizing the government, refusing all direct and indirect subsidies to the sects, and secularizing the schools, while granting all the privilege of educating their children in their own manner at their own expense. Do these things and the trouble is averted. Refuse to do them and the differences must be settled in the heat of passion by the victory of the strongest; and it is by no means certain that blood will not be shed.

Missionary Opportunities.

Dr. A. G. Byers, before the Baltimore conference of charities and corrections, told some plain truths which hav hurt the feelings of the church folks of that place. After explaining why the politicians do not take much interest in the work of the society (principally, we should suppose, because penal prisoners cannot vote while serving their sentences, and when at liberty are chiefly directed by Catholic priests), Dr. Byers paid his respects to the clergy in these words:

"If you direct the question to ecclesiastical organizations, the result would be but little different, for the modern church is occupied with the discussion of beliefs, with projects for captivating the eye and ear of the world, with diligent effort and liberal contributions for entering the city of the Samaritans, and for going into the way of the gentiles rather than for beginning at home. The utmost ambition is manifested to secure popular preaching, but comparativly little attention is given to healing the sick, cleansing the lepers, raising the dead, or casting out devils.

"There is one exception to this rule if applied to far-away conditions of human degradation and suffering. India is to-day attracting far more attention than Indiana, and yet investigations made and reported to this conference within the past three years by Mr. McCulloch indicate conditions of social degradation and human depravity that could scarcely be surpassed in pagan lands or among savage tribes. I trust I shall not be understood as holding forth Indiana as worse than other communities. The reference is made simply because the facts had been ascertained and set forth. It may be possible that when these moral and social conditions can be seen they baffle hope."

We trust that the churches will heed the advice of Dr. Byers and endeavor to perform a few miracles, such as raising the dead, and reforming the Roman Catholics and the Protestant deacons and Sunday-school superintendents in the penitentiaries. We promis to faithfully report all successful attempts.

As to the hypocrisy of Christian solicitude for far-away peoples, that has long been a matter of ridicule by the worldly, who wonder that the condition of the "heathen" in India, Japan, and Africa, should so excite the sympathies of the pious, while the ten-thousandfold more miserable condition of millions in "Christian" countries attracts no notice. A good sample of this is the petition to the czar of Russia to ameliorate the condition of prisoners in Siberia while in some states of our own Union the dungeons and knoutings of the Russian penal system are duplicated. We desire to aid Dr. Byers in calling the attention of the church to that saying in its holy book relativ to motes and beams; though perhaps it would overlook the mote and see the beam more quickly if at the same time it could see how a dollar is to be made for the ministers by alleviating the human misery at our own doors.

But, at any rate, the church ought to make the attempt to clear its skirts of the suspicion of hypocrisy in this mission work which now clings to them. And it can do this the more readily, and lose nothing, because all the world is about convinced that foreign missions are the synonym of humbug, and valuable only in furnishing soft berths for officers of mission societies, chances to trade for the men sent to "heathen" countries, and an excuse for begging money from children and benevolent people who are deluded by the notion that the church is doing useful work. Let's hav some domestic missions which shall save the criminals of our own country, remove the plague-spots in our cities, and giv to every individual a chance to earn a living and the opportunity to enjoy it when he has earned it. The Japanese do not need help; the Christian Irish and Italians who hav come over here do need it, if those in this city are fair samples.

Brazil and Peru.

The new government of Brazil continues to hold its own against the venomous assaults of Catholic tongues and pens throughout the world. The church people are writhing in pain and resentment at the expulsion of ecclesiasticism from the government. They produce no end of arguments in support of their claim to the parochial stipends whose discontinuance has been enacted.

We may hope that the noble strides along the path of progress taken by Brazil, will incite other nations to imitation. A voice from Peru betokens the stirring of some such intentions there. It having been rumored that the Jesuits will be expelled from Brazil, the Lima, Peru, Nacion says:

"It would form an example Peru should imitate, by not only decreeing that the Jesuits should leave the country, but strictly enforcing the law in this respect, since we hav a law in existence which defines in a proper manner that Jesuits should not be allowed in the republic."

It is with rejoicing and hope that we view every mark of the working of new thought in these and all their sister nations. Meanwhile there is in present appearances at home sufficient to call forth our own most anxious and earnest efforts to contend with the great institution of dishonesty, ignorance, and intolerance, the Roman church, in our own country itself.

Slate Writing.

It seems that our article, "In Search of a Spirit," in the current TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL has stirred up the discussion in spirit manifestations again. Mr. McArthur has in this issue a rejoinder to some comments of ours upon his criticism of that article, and we hav followed his rejoinder with an extract from a German paper which reveals some of one medium's peculiar methods.

So far as our personal share in this controversy is concerned, we are through talking about the phenomena, and are calmly waiting for Mr. McArthur to fulfill his promis to find a medium who will produce writing on slates under the simple conditions that the medium is not to take the slates from our possession, nor open them, nor to in any manner touch them except to put his hands upon them to connect the power. As it has been stated of all slate-writing mediums that they do this, the "test" is nothing but a compliance with their "conditions," and there ought, therefore, to be no difficulty in obtaining communications in the manner described.

Regarding Mr. Slade's sleight-of-foot, we do not believe that Deutschland's explanation is borne out in full by facts, but we do believe that Mr. McArthur is at a much greater distance from actuality in poohpoohing the possibility that Slade's foot is an important factor in the alleged manifestations of spirits in his mediumistic presence. But there is no use of multiplying words in the matter; Slade will not allow his methods to be examined, and there is little hope of getting at the genesis of Slade's phenomena.

The Two in Bonds.

A bill of exceptions in the Harman "trial" has been made out by Mr. Overmyer, and he has strong hopes of obtaining a new and a real trial for the unfortunate editor of Lucifer. The motion will be argued in June, and if it is granted Mr. Harman will be released on bail. In the mean time, unless the lawyers think it will prejudice the case, petitions to President Harrison for a pardon will be circulated.

Mr. Harman is in the penitentiary at Lansing, shorn of his beard and dressed in prison garb. The change in his mode of life has made him so ill that he has not been able to add to the revenue of Kansas by his manual labor. But, broken in health though he is, his spirit is strong, and he prefers to stay five years in jail rather than admit that he has done anything wrong.

Since receiving the letter from Mr. Heywood, printed on another page, the following has come to hand from him:

"PRINCETON, MASS., May 19, Y.L. 18.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: During my absence from home last week deputy United States Marshal F. X. Macdonald came here with a warrant for me Friday morning. When told I was not at home he spoke of searching the house, but finally asked Mrs. Heywood if I would not come to Boston voluntarily and get bail Saturday. At 5:40 A.M. I started for Boston; found Walter C. Wright, O. A. Mann, and with them my bondsman. I walked into arrest at 11 A.M. Bond, $1,000; alleged offense, mailing Words. Judge Hallett's mind seeming to be immovable (as of old), I waived preliminary hearing, and the case goes to the grand jury to-morrow. So you see the United States as well as the state hounds are upon us. Trial some time in June, probably.

"Comstock was in Worcester yesterday. He lectured twice to many Christians and credited God with all he had done. I trust God appreciates the taffy. E. H. HEYWOOD."

Who ever heard of a real criminal in whom an officer had sufficient confidence to rely for his appearance upon a simple invitation to come and be put in prison? The piling up of indictments shows it to be another persecution by Comstock; and to drag a man into two courts, and to seek to punish him twice for the same offense, is evidence that the prosecution is purely malicious. Mr. Heywood is to be condemned for having placed himself in Comstock's power by printing the vulgar letter, but his hounding by Comstock's ecclesiastical smut society is a thousand times worse. It is a misuse of authority, which the courts ought not to tolerate.

Editorial Notes.

OUR Chicago friends can now find a very complete assortment of books published by the Truth Seeker Company at the store of the P. O. News Company, 101 and 103 Adams street.

THE three excise commissioners of this city hav been indicted for misdemeanor, consisting, as charged, of willful neglect of official duties. They are all Tammany Hall men, and Tammany Hall, do not forget, is the political side of Roman Catholicism in this burg.

THE Christian Statesman says:

"The popular capacity for being fooled is marvelous."

That's the truest statement we recollect to hav ever seen in that journal. It must be true; how else could there be nearly twenty million believers in Christianity, i.e., church-members, in this country?

IN the debate on the silver question in the United States Senate last week, Senator Sherman said:

"I do regard silver, as well as gold, as one of the metals chosen by the almighty for currency."

The Herald calls this citing high authority, but we should like to know when, where, and how any almighty chose any form of currency. It is such claptrap utterances as this by Senator Sherman that makes men ridiculous.

THE preachers of Newark recently waited upon the editor of the Press-Register, and requested him to suppress the reports of the lectures at the Newark Liberal League and of H. O. Pentecost. The editor was pusillanimous enough to comply. It reveals the smallness of the preachers, that they will resort to such despicable ways as this to suppress common sense, and it also reveals very plainly that they are afraid of the heretics. Perhaps the consciousness has at last crept over them that their religion is without a fact behind it, and that the people are finding it out.

THE Lutheran church in Chicago is going into politics to oppose the Illinois compulsory education law. The particular clause aimed at is the one requiring all the common branches to be taught in the English language. The Lutherans will try to nominate and elect members of the legislature in a number of the northern districts, hoping to elect enough members pledged to a modification of the Compulsory Education law to control the balance of power in the legislature and force their point. The Lutherans are almost all Republicans, but in this they expect the aid of the German Catholics, who are largely Democrats, and between the two forces it is thought half a dozen districts can be carried.

THE priests of New Brunswick, N. J., hav announced that Catholic children who attended the public schools would not be confirmed. The priests hav taken this step to compel Catholic parents to withdraw their children from public schools and send them to their parochial schools. Bishop O'Farrell, who was in New Brunswick on Sunday, it is understood upholds the priests in their action to compel Catholic parents to keep their children out of the public schools. Some of the Catholics of the city openly announce their intention of disobeying the priests' orders, and say they will continue to send their children to the public schools solely because they can get a better education there than in the parochial schools. We trust that this spirit may spread. If it does not the priests will bring up among us a lot of slaves who know nothing but the catechism and the way to the contribution-box.

ONE of the little swindles which the churches are constantly perpetrating upon the people of this city, and almost everywhere else, was consummated by the help of the last legislature—a legislature which for disgraceful deals and general disregard of political decency, has not been paralleled for many years. Like many church swindles, this one is in the form of an exemption. There is a law compelling all owners of buildings who dig under the sidewalks and construct vaults to pay seventy-five cents per square foot for the privilege. Governor Hill has signed a bill exempting churches from this payment, and now the churches can hav half the street for nothing. It is such a petty swindle that it must occur to the taxpayers that they are tossing pennies to beggars. The injury to the giver is nothing compared to the loss of self-respect on the part of the mendicant—that is, if religious mendicants possess any self-respect.

THE Liberals of Texas will hold a convention at Waco July 15th to the 17th. The object of the gathering, Mr. Shaw says, is "to inaugurate a system of positiv, tolerant thought, ethical culture, and practical benevolence, in which all Liberal-minded people can unite and work in harmony for the moral elevation, intellectual improvement, physical amelioration, social well-being, and consequent happiness of the human race. Therefore, the following subjects will no doubt be discussed in such order as may be agreed upon by those in attendance: 1. Is an organization practicable? 2. On what basis shall it be established? 3. What particular aims are to be attained by it? 4. What methods of work will be most effectiv in the attainment of its aims?" The Liberals of Waco are appealed to by Mr. Shaw to make the occasion pleasant to their state visitors. "One thing," says the editor of the Pulpit to his home friends, "we feel assured of is that you will not be ashamed of your guests. In point of intelligence, moral rectitude, and general respectability, we think they will compare favorably with any gathering Waco has ever had, and our present solicitude is centered solely in the task of entertaining them as they deserve."

W. E. REID, the medium at Grand Rapids, Mich., convicted of fraudulently using the mails in advertising to obtain answers from spirits to sealed letters, has been refused a new trial. The sentence has not yet been pronounced. The full penalty of the offense is $500 fine and eighteen months' imprisonment, and it is the opinion of many, says the Grand Rapids Daily Democrat, that Dr. Reid will get the full dose. An appeal can be made to the United States circuit court, but it would be only a matter of form, as Judge Jackson has already passed upon the case. From there, it can be taken to the United States Supreme Court, but as that court is several years behind in its work, Reid's case cannot be reached until long after his time is served. After his sentence is pronounced, he will hav to go behind the bars at once. The attorneys for the defense, however, state that they will at once begin to prepare the case to go up, and will probably carry it to the United States Supreme Court on a motion for certiorari and habeas corpus. This would bring the case to a hearing at once, probably after Reid has served only three months. They hav hopes of saving him the rest of the sentence. This is another case whose force lies in the application of the principles laid down. If the law should be impartially applied every Roman Catholic priest advertising to say masses for pay would go to jail, and all the Spiritual mediums likewise. It is an attempt on the part of the government to continue the connection between certain people and their money, when they ought to be allowed to suffer the consequences of their folly. It is no legitimate part of the government's province to say that spirits do not communicate with their living friends, and the Spiritualists ought to take more interest in this case than they hav done, for if it be admitted as a precedent their liberty to choose their own supernatural faith is seriously impaired.

IF the facts related in the following from the Cleveland, O., Sunday World were reversed, the pious would see in it the "hand of the Lord:" "The man giving his name as T. Hackett, who was refused transportation at the expense of the infirmary department, applied for aid at the mayor's office on Saturday, and told an extremely strange story of his trials and misfortunes. Hackett is in some respects a bright man, and has a good education. For some time previous to the last five years he was employed by a large Buffalo manufacturing house and had a good position. He claims to hav had his duty in life providentially suggested to him. He was struck with the idea that some one should go through the country and lecture to overcome the baneful influence of Bob Ingersoll's lectures. He gave up work and at once began to write a lecture which he thought would make him famous and honored throughout the country. For about four years he labored on this lecture, spending all the money he had previously saved for the support of his wife and child. Just as the money was about all gone the lecture was completed and he fixed on Cincinnati, as a city thoroughly wicked enough to need his help. He hired a hall there but says that on account of bad weather his audience was small and he did not make expenses. Some one, however, criticised his lecture and pointed out flaws in it. These he has since endeavored to remedy. His Cincinnati lecture was given on November 15th, and it was only a week ago that he was satisfied that his revision of his work was complete. He lectured then in Dayton, but the weather or some other cause again kept his audience small, and he was obliged to pay out his last cent for expenses. The infirmary department at Dayton sent him to this city, as he desired to go to Niagara Falls. Mayor Gardner had not returned Saturday morning, but his clerk Charles McNairy sent the man together with his wife and child on to Rochester en route for his desired destination." Probably the next thing we shall hear of the man he will be applying to Colonel Ingersoll for help to feed his wife and child, and no doubt that great-hearted individual would grant it, for he is a much more real providence to a lot of people than ever Jehovah was.

Letters from Friends.

EUREKA, CAL., April 27, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2, for the picture book as soon as published. Yours truly, ARTHUR W. HILL.

CRETE, NEB., April 26, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is $3 as a new subscription I hav procured you. If I can get you a few more subscribers here I will cheerfully do so. HENRY G. GINDRA.

NEW HARTFORD, IA., May 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is $5 for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year to my address, and for a new subscriber, who votes for pictures. MEL PIERCE.

RENO, NEV., May 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $9, for which send three copies of the book of pictures to the addresses inclosed, and the other books named. Present fifty cents to Heston.

H. S. WRIGHT.

CARTHAGE, MO., May 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: We are so delighted with the grand old TRUTH SEEKER that we cannot afford to lose a single copy. For my part, we will take it with or without the pictures, but I vote in favor of continuing the cartoons. I think that no thinking person can be offended by the pictures, as they are very mild, though they strike direct from the shoulder to the smelling-machine of those bigoted old sky-pirates. In unbelief, with the best wishes for success to Heston and the best paper published on this side of the Atlantic,

Yours truly, ADOLPH ROTSCH.

NORTH PLATTE, NEB., March 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a Freethinker nearly all my life, and hav constantly been hampered by the Christian element of this country in regard to my religious views. Lately I hav purchased a few copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hav found just what I want. I am a school-teacher, and hav devoted little time to reading, except educational works, and as a result I was much surprised to find my views corroborated by so many. I hav been greatly amused at the xtreme ignorance of the greater part of this community and at what they based their claims on. W. O. WISNER.

LAMONI, IA., March 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The world is full of extremes. Some believe in nothing that they call God; others claim to disbelieve in a God. Some teach that there is a never-ending hell; others believe that there is no hell and no devil. Now, I believe that to keep between extremes is the golden mean. I think it best to believe in a God who created the universe, to accept the evidences in the works of creation in this regard, as Mr. Paine showed in his "Age of Reason," and to observe the Golden Rule. Then if there are any God, any hereafter, etc., we will stand a better show than if we went on extremes. W. C. LANYON.

BOSTON, MASS., May 13, 290.

MR. EDITOR: Another of "the old guard" of Abolitionism for chattel slavery and of Freethought for mental slavery, has gone to his well-earned rest, Dr. Simeon Palmer, of Boston—the S. Palmer of many TRUTH SEEKER articles and the "Senex" of many Investigator ones—having deceased on the 9th inst., aged seventy-seven years. He now lies in that spot rendered forever sacred to Liberals, because of its being the last resting-place of grand old Horace Seaver, viz., Forest Hills cemetery, and he, like the glorious old heroes of the Investigator and TRUTH SEEKER, left the most splendid of heritages for us who remain, viz., an inheritance of true liberty for both mind and body, and without which all else is worthless. GEO. N. HILL.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 30, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: And the spirit saith, blessed are they that hav faith and do not trust the wrong fellow, for verily they are not to be disappointed. Amen. Selah. If this is not a scripture quotation, I am quite sure that our good friend John Peck will agree with me that it is a darned sight truer than a great deal that might be quoted. All of which being interpreted meaneth that I am very, very much obliged to you for your kindness in sending me the paper you so very ably publish.

I do not want to flatter you, Brother Macdonald, but I must say that I indorse heartily the strongest commendations that any of your correspondents hav written. THE TRUTH SEEKER just suits me, and I sincerely hope—and would pray if I knew anyone to pray to—that you may liv long to edit it, and do the work you are so well qualified for and which the need of humanity so much requires to be done.

J. R. BARRY.

READING, KAN., May 6, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I vote for Heston and both cartoons, as it is easier to comprehend by pictorial representation than voluminous reading. "Having many things to write to you" (2 John 12) and to the TRUTH SEEKER family, I will select only a few things. First, I rejoice over the decision of the supreme court of Wisconsin regarding the Bible in public schools, as it is not a text-book nor a moral guide, and will be a bone of contention as long as it will hav believers. Every Liberal should stand up for his rights, as the opposit element stand and sacrifice for their idol on this subject. I hav oftentimes been called a crank. I tell them it takes cranks to turn this world.

Second, I will say that the oath should be changed to affirmation, as no honest man wants the help of a God to tell the truth or perform his duty. Punishment here is more dreaded than in the hereafter, because the Christian evil-doer hopes for remission of all his sins, in which all believers hav faith.

I hav failed to obtain a new subscriber, as money is scarce except for church purposes. W. O. DAVIES.

BLACK JACK GROVE, TEX., May 6, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I would not be without the THE TRUTH SEEKER for three times its value. It is the best paper I ever read. I am alone in the cause here at this place, with the exception of one man who borrowed of me and read "The Age of Reason." But often I am rejoiced by meeting a traveling man whose mind has been freed from the clouds and darkness of superstition. I know from experience how free a man feels who has been loosed from such bonds. My Christian friend feels very badly hurt because I can see no point or grounds upon which to base my faith in the reasonableness and justice of the scheme of redemption. Some say that belongs to the divine arcana. It is a shame that a man is reproached by his fellow-man because his reason revolts against such stuff as is contained in that old book of lies. May you prosper in the work and cause of intellectual freedom. Yours ever, JOSEPH SLIDHAM.

HURON, S. DAK., March 7, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: As we are to hav a vast display of all products of the loom and workshop, all showing the evolution of mankind from one degree of intelligence to another, why can we not hav a display showing the evolution of mankind from darkness to light? Let a display be made of the appliances used by the Inquisition—the rack, thumb-screw, and all the instruments of torture; hanging the witches; wax figures of the burning of Servetus; drowning the Quakers and hanging them. All these would serve to educate the young, and interest the old folks, too. Cannot our foreign Liberals see to it that such an exhibition can be made? Why not demonstrate the march of mind in theology as well as in mechanics? Why not show the falsehoods of the past, the tyranny of the church in the fourteenth century as well as the enlightenment of the nineteenth? By all means let such an exhibit be made.

The pictures are all right. Keep them going.

Respectfully yours, A. H. RISDON.

DETROIT, MICH., May 15, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to correct the corrections of our friend, C. H. Greene, of Rochester, Mich., about woman suffrage in Kansas. I think Brother Greene is somewhat too previous with his criticisms. Kansas is a large state, and has been boomed for many years by the money-lenders, whose great object always is to make cities as places to put banks (pawn-shops), to create debts, to increase expenses and taxes, whereby to compel the people more often to borrow bankers' (pawn-shop) tickets, putting their property in pawn therefor. At least, Mr. Greene makes one mistake in saying that Kansas City is in Missouri. It is true that there is a Kansas City in Missouri. There is also a Kansas City in Kansas. The two cities are near each other, West Kansas City being separated from Kansas City, Kan., by the Kansas, or Kaw river, which divides Missouri from Kansas, where it empties into the Missouri river, Kansas City, Kan., and Kansas City, Mo., being situated on the same side of the Missouri river. I hav been in bot

J. H.

QUINCY, ILL., April 6, 290.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in one of my Liberal papers that you expect some time in the near future to publish the richest of your pictures as they from week to week appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER in book form. Put me down for a copy if the price is reasonable. Those that I hav had the pleasure of seeing are well worthy of an art gallery.

I hav read over Chapter III in the Presbyterian Confession of Faith two or three times, and I cannot see any sense in revising the creed until they pitch the Bible overboard, where it ought to hav gone centuries ago. Some years ago an uncle of mine, a sea captain, took on board at New York two casks. The ship was bound for Valparaiso. Having arrived at his destination and no one having called for the two casks, the heads were knocked in. They were found to contain Bibles. Not having any use for such stuff, my uncle ordered them thrown overboard. The next time you read statistics of how many Bibles hav been sent to the heathen, you can account for two large casks full. And there is no doubt that this way of getting them into the hands of the so-called heathen has often been practiced. "The fool and his money are soon parted" fits this case as snug as two peas in a pod. Yours for truth, JOHN L. MOORE.

MONTREAL, March 21, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: For the inclosed sum of money kindly mail me as soon as possible one copy of the "Age of Reason." I am sending for it at the request of a young friend of mine who, up to but a short time ago, was a strict church-goer, made so by strictly religious parents, and the influence of their "beloved" pastor, but who, through the agency of THE TRUTH SEEKER, to which I am a subscriber, and of which I occasionally hav lent him a copy, and the more forcible than eloquent manner in which I explained certain things which he had hitherto been made to understand should not be subject to investigation, has come to the conclusion that in the teachings he received at the earlier stage of his existence there is a "nigger in the fence" somewhere. So much for the first grand principles of Freethought, common sense, and reason. Eventually I hope to secure for you a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, in the person of this young man, and this would be quite a victory for me, as the districts in which he and I liv are hotbeds of adherents to the "Holy Roman" and Protestant churches. In the opinions of members of both the latter, I am a blacker sheep than any that ever has yet found his way into their midst, and well do I recollect one party telling me that at the close of my earthly existence the devil would hav great fun chasing me around the rocks of damnation. JOHN R. CONWAY.

CONCORD, N. C., March 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote you several days since in regard to an uneducated drummer, Mr. Fife, who has been a gambler, drunkard, etc., coming to Concord and holding forth in the Methodist church, lampooning everybody à la Sam Jones. Mr. Fife is what I term a religious tramp, who wears good clothes and stops at the best hotels, and carries off lots of the "In God We Trust," he having secured $280 for ten days' abuse of everybody except the preachers. He caused a big excitement, the result of which was one woman, a married lady, Mrs. F. A. Archibald, losing her reason and having to be taken to the asylum. How sad, how sad to her husband, family, and friends! But not sad to the evangelist, whose object, like Sam Jones's, is to gather in the shekels. Outside of this sad case of insanity he made uncalled-for remarks about Rev. Mr. Campbell, of the Lutheran church, and his congregation, which hav stirred up bad feeling here which will take a good while to heal. One of the pillars of the Methodist church here is a man who failed in business in 1876 and swindled his creditors out of $15,000. He livs in a $3,000 house on a $2,000 lot, all belonging to his wife. Mr. Bill Fife failed to make this pillar of the church honest enough to pay his debts or any part of them. This was not the kind of game Mr. Fife was after, but no doubt this pillar (pillager) shelled out a V or an X to the religious tramp. How disgusting to us Liberals to see honesty and justice trampled into the mire, and corruption sitting on the housetop basking in the sunshine of popular honor. J. W. MEHAFFEY.

BEAUFORT, S. C., March 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: It was about the 1st of July, 1838, that I went North to pass the summer, to the beautiful village of Liberty, N. Y., up among the Kattskills. A new Catholic church had recently been erected there, and neatly and commodiously finished and consecrated, with a high and flaming cross on the top of the steeple. It is truly a handsome and elegant building. I thought one day, I would walk up and take a survey of things. As I went round the church, I discovered the fragments of a dirty old box that looked like a pine board coffin, such as is generally got in Christian parishes in which to bury paupers, and church-members who hav never done much—being of the Lazarus breed—to support the church. The aforesaid box was empty save a lot of dirty straw and a large quantity of old rags, cotton, and shavings that were in the box and out of it on every side. I had a great curiosity to know what had been in the box, which, after a little peering about, to my utter amazement, I discovered to hav been "Mary, the mother of God." To be perfectly satisfied, I had only to look in the church, and lo, there she stood at the left of the altar with her baby, the little God, in her arms, dressed up as a sort of wax figure doll, and not by any means so well done as are some of the dolls got up for our children for Christmas presents; but as it was the real baby Jesus of the church, we could not doubt.

he holy Virgin herself was a very shabby affair, and such y no means answered to our idea of the mother o God, and looked as if some of nature's journeymen had made it, they had "imitated nature so abominably." The holy mother had one leg thrust forward with the foot and toe so as to be convenient for the worshipers to kiss. This was the mother of God, the holy Virgin that came in the old dirty box, straw, rags, and shavings. How the manufacturers of this holy mother must hav laughed as they looked at it and stowed it away. Of course, all other Catholic churches hav their holy Virgin, but theirs are all shams; this was the real Simon pure, the identical "mother of God."

But what was my astonishment to learn that, about a week ere this, God had so little respect for this same church as to strike it with lightning, knocking the tower and the cross into flinders, killing two men while working in the church, and nearly killing a third, and knocking his holy mother and her baby clear off their stool, to the utter grief and wonder of the faithful!

Now, we suggest that this was not quite doing the clean thing for God to treat his own mother and his own baby-self in this unhandsome and scurvy way, for it took nearly all summer, and a goodly sum of dimes, Peter's Pence, and hard labor to put things to rights after the holy mother and baby were set up again. However, it did not quite amount to matricide, as the mother and child did not seem to be much the worse for the undutiful, shocking, and strangely ungrateful and inconsiderate outrage, and came out as good as new, without a word to say. E. CASE.

GRANTFORK, ILL., March 19, 290.

MR. EDITOR: After reading John Peck's criticism on J. W. Reed's sermon, which appears in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 19th ult., I felt so deeply impressed with Mr. Peck's bold, honest, and yet moderate remarks that I hav been impelled to add a few of my own. Some, even amongst the Liberals, so called, hav found fault with Mr. Peck for his severity, as some do object to the irony, sarcasm, and ridicule of Heston's cartoons. As I started out very young to labor for the Lord and to save souls, honestly believing the Bible to be the word of God, because I was taught so, I am sure I am a pretty good judge of the proper manner to reach every class, and will proceed to giv my opinion. First try reason. That will convince where those attracted are endowed with that faculty. But there are so many like Mr. Reed, who know better but for the loaves and fishes will not down. Then by what means can such rascals be reached? There are three —they must be bribed or shamed or starved out. Of course, had we the necessary means we would be courteous enough to bribe or hire the rascals to quit humbugging the people, but as we hav not we must appeal to the other two plans, and as they are as a rule men that do not know or acknowledge there is such a word as shame, the last resort is with the common people, that we may effectually starve out the leeches. I started, as I suppose Mr. Reed did, with all honesty, but when I got in company with men who made money their hobby (for I would not hav a cent for my services), I got ashamed of the delusion they were practicing.

Now, in addition to what Mr. Peck has said, I will state for the benefit of Mr. Reed that although I hav five fatherless children and hav been compelled by sheer poverty to liv separate from them; suffer from publishing $90 worth of books at a clear loss to me, and from constantly buying and giving away Infidel books free; and although I am now preparing to go to the soldiers' home on account of being unable to make a living, yet I will try and send the Lord a few dollars if Mr. J. W. Reed will answer me the following questions satisfactorily: 1. What is God's need that he must hav money? 2. In what way are remittances required to be sent, by registered letter, postal note, money order, or bank draft, payable to the Lord or to J. W. Reed? What is the Lord's post-office address? Shall I get a return receipt when the Lord gets the money? Please let me know just how much the Lord is short, as times are hard and we can not afford anything for contingencies. Also, the Lord must giv bond as security. In case there should be a surplus a just dividend will be made and each donor will get his dues in return. As Mr. Peck intimated that it is Mr. Reed instead of the Lord receiving the money, then we want to know how the Lord is benefited. Does the Lord wear Mr. Reed's old clothes when they are no longer fit for Mr. Reed, and can the Lord utilize the food Mr. Reed has eaten? These are very important questions. We want to know just what is right in relieving the Lord's suffering. Mr. Reed, a servant of the Lord, then must be a thief, for to beg by and through deceit is as great a crime as larceny. We hope the people will look at these things in the light of common sense, and should the Lord call on them, then giv.

Ex-Rev. Joseph N. Maxey.

Bronston, Ky., March 11, 1890.

Mr. Editor: I hav never been more surprised than I was on reading a letter in the The Truth Seeker of the 8th inst., written by A. Moot, of St. Catharines, Ont. Friend Moot must hav totally misconstrued a letter of mine in The Truth Seeker of January 1st, and yet that letter was so plain that a wayfaring man, though a crank, need not hav erred therein. I said in that letter, I believe it to be a matter of fact that there is not a sensible man or woman on earth but is perfectly willing to believe that there is a personal God somewhere that hears the prayers of man, and can grant or reject them. Now, here is what Mr. Moot says after reading the above: "You hav said you believe it to be a fact, etc., that there is a personal God somewhere." I said no such thing. Mr. Moot ought to hav seen from my letter that I was anxious to hav Talmage and others like him called on to produce this evidence about a prayer-answering God. The belief in the efficacy of prayer is the main lever by which priestcraft is enabled to enslave and fleece the masses. Mr. Moot complains that I hav not produced one fact, and then says, "Then why do you harp such ignorance and traditional nonsense?" I did not propose to produce a solitary fact. I was calling for the facts or evidence sufficient to make one believe. There is a large oak-tree in my yard which I hav known for the last thirty years. I know that it is firmly in the ground. I hav seen it resist successfully many severe storms. Well, Mr. Moot, suppose that there should come into my yard a tall man with long gray beard and dark, sparkling eyes, and say to me, "Mr. Brown, I understand that you do not believe in a personal God who hears and answers prayer." I might say, "No, stranger, I do not." And then he might say, "Mr. Brown, I want to convince you that there is; so please prepare a test in order that I may convince you. I liv on the south side of Cumberland river. It is just one half mile from my yard to the north bank of the river." Then I would answer him, saying, "Stranger, if you will hav this oak-tree plucked up by the roots and hav it transported and firmly transplanted on the north bank of Cumberland river in just five minutes I shall be compelled to believe." The man accepts my test. And then suppose, Mr. Moot, that this tall, prophetic-looking man looks steadfastly up toward the sky and says, "O God, for Christ's sake, and in order to convince J. N. Brown that you do exist, and hav power over nature, please pluck up this oak-tree and transport it across Cumberland river and plant it firmly on the other side as it is now on this side in his yard." And then suppose, Mr. Moot, that I see with my own natural eyes this oak-tree come right up out of the ground and move across the river without any visible hand touching it, and in five minutes become firmly and to all appearance naturally planted on the other side of the river. Now, Mr. Moot, suppose all this should occur just as I hav described it, what effect would it hav on my belief? Now, Mr. Moot, please do not say that I believe that trees can by the power of God be plucked up and transported across rivers. You must learn, Mr. Moot, that men do not believe as they will, but as evidence compels them.

J. N. Brown.

Portland, Ore., March 6, 290.

Mr. Editor: I hav just received Vol. iv of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." Like everything written by D. M. Bennett, it is very thorough and searching. He observed with critical eyes, unbiased by any religion.

We hav had snow in large measure, and rain and freshets and la gripps, and, last but not the least, revivals. I was present at a meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association when they voted to receive two hundred and seven candidates into membership. I believe one of the churches claim that they hav had six hundred or more converts to the Christian religion this winter in East Portland. The president of the Young Men's Christian Association here said, when Mr. Driver went to Chicago to debate with the leaders of the Secular Union, "He downed them, every one of them." I thought he refused to hold a debate with Charles Watts. Am I right? Mr. Driver delivered a lecture before the Young Men's Christian Association of Portland, February 14th; twenty-five cents admission; subject, "Robert Ingersoll and his Mission." I attended and tried to make a report, but I am a slow writer. He said he could meet Mr. Ingersoll as a friend on the platform but not elsewhere. Colonel Ingersoll taught good morals, and lived them too. When a man tries to take your life you are justified in using any weapon in self-defense, and may kill him and be acquitted. You may use a club or a knife or a gun. Colonel Ingersoll had threatened to destroy Christianity, but he had not succeeded. He should be judged by his intention and not by the result. His intention was to destroy Christianity, but his attacks had strengthened Christianity. He has been the devil's whetstone to sharpen up dull preachers. He had caused them to dig deeper for truth, and they found it. He had tried to destroy Christianity with the same weapon Samson used to slay the Philistines. (Applause.) Where did we get our republican form of government? Or rather, where did Moses get it? Our government is substantially a copy of theirs. They were not satisfied with it, and would hav a king. So when Samuel sought Saul he was looking for his father's asses. Things hav changed. Then the prophets went after the asses; now the asses go after the prophets. (Applause.) Mr. Ingersoll does not say anything new. He uses beautiful language, and probably has no equal in this respect in the United States. But he says nothing new.

The lecture was well attended, and lasted one hour and twenty minutes; was frequently applauded. The foregoing is only a synopsis of the leading points, partly by memory. I hav time and room for only one more quotation: "Did not Girard giv a million dollars to build a college in which the Bible should not be read, but moral books might be read, and it had been legally decided that the Bible is a moral book and accordingly it is read in Girard College. And ever since that college has been built Freethinkers hav been looking for one who has brains enough to take charge of it and cannot find him."

If I understood the foregoing lecture, I understood Mr. Driver to mean that because Colonel Ingersoll had threatened to try to destroy Christianity, Mr. Driver thought that justified him in using any weapon that came to hand. He accused Colonel Ingersoll in one part of his lecture of teaching untruths, and in another acknowledged he taught good morals. If I hav reported the subject-matter of this lecture wrong and Mr. Driver will state it nearer right, I shall be happy to acknowledge it. If I hav drawn a wrong inference as to Mr. Driver trying by all means at hand to vilify Colonel Ingersoll, and Mr. Driver will say publicly that I am mistaken, I will ask his pardon publicly.

Yours for truth, George F. Elliott.

Dayton, O., May 9, 1890.

Mr. Editor: I almost feel ashamed to acknowledge that I hav been reading your valuable and interesting paper, The Truth Seeker, sub rosa, for many years without contributing to its columns much useful information picked up all over the world, and which I hav had locked up in my bosom. The only apology I can offer is, that church people force men to be hypocrits. Thousands hav told me, "We could not get along in the world and obtain a support if we did not join the church." From my boyhood up, I hav been secretly a Freethinker and Agnostic. The first Bible I read in my youth so disgusted me that, from that day to this, I hav pronounced the whole book a lie.

It was my peculiar good fortune to spend my younger days on the river Jordan and in all the Eastern world chiefly mentioned in the Bible, and the first question I asked myself was, Why has the sea of Galilee six names? I was taught a sea was a body of salt water surrounded by land, a lake was a body of fresh water surrounded by land, and a river a stream of fresh water running into another body. Now, the river Jordan is only a creek about one hundred and fifty miles long. And the little fountain flowing from the mountains of Lebanon, erroneously called the sea of Galilee, is nothing more than a little widening of the river. Hence I pronounce the story of big ships, big fish, and big waves a monstrous lie.

And the mouth of the river Jordan where it empties into the Dead sea, where stood one or two houses termed Sodom and Gomorrah, was swallowed up by a volcano, and as salt was scarce in that country, I concluded Lot and his daughter must hav eaten her up to save food, as no part of her body remains.

When I reached the Ganges and Euphrates, I cast my eyes about to see where the tower of Babel had fallen, which must hav had many large stones to support it. But in vain. I could not see stones enough to build me a decent house. I turned to the Bible, and as it was only one hundred and fifty years after the deluge, and Noah lived two hundred years after it was built, I concluded in my mind that Noah and his boys must hav done all the work, as there was no one else in the world, for God had drowned all his children.

Then I asked myself, Where is the great city of Palmyra and the other noble and wonderful cities said to be then existing? And as I could see no evidence of their existence, I concluded this also was a fable.

These thoughts, with many others, hav kept me a firm believer in Agnosticism. It is worthy of remark that, having spent seventy years constantly moving all over the world, I can safely and honestly say I never met with any ghosts, spirits, or anything but that I could account for in my mind. I thus became an Agnostic, satisfied in my mind that as we cannot tell why the tall tree sheds forth its leaves and dies, we hav no evidence to tell why man comes forth for a few days and dies. We are perfectly ignorant by what means and for what end all nature exists or to what end man is journeying.

I will close with one illustration showing the character of one of my neighbors. I visited him often. He was a confirmed Infidel. But wishing to accumulate wealth he brought upon himself trouble and sorrow by an act that made his only son, twenty years of age, a madman and idiot, compelled to wear a strait-jacket in a lunatic asylum. Believing he could influence the Christians to buy tea from his store, he sent his noble but weak-minded son to a Sunday-school; and, like Beecher's brother, who committed suicide, and many others, not understanding or comprehending the Bible, his mind became dethroned and he was a lunatic. And this man, that I would call an unnatural father, livs to see the effect of risking a noble boy for a little money. His case is like many forcibly illustrated in The Truth Seeker, which has done more to inculcate ethical knowledge among the people than all the books on moral science.

Frederick Robertson, M.D.

Granada, Col., May 5, 1890.

Mr. Editor: Find inclosed $3, which apply on back account for the paper, and when the amount is exhausted please discontinue the paper till further orders. If the American Freethinkers turn into Knownothingites, which, judging by Mr. Downes, of Steubenville, O.; Swan, of Chicago; Winter, of Cincinnati, and H. A. Holcomb, of Glens Falls, N.Y., and others writing Knownothing whinings, they may, I choose, like thousands of sensible people, to keep myself outside the activ Freethought ranks. For a Knownothingite is a composition of political fanatics of forty years ago, Prohibitionists, White Caps, and Bald Knobbers. A Knownothingite is not only an enemy in his community, to his state, but to America and to his race. Stop immigration and in twenty years every lower labor channel in New England and the Middle states will be filled by negroes, who no doubt would marry the surplus maiden ladies, without being coachman first. It, however, looks all bright and hopeful for the future of America to me, and instead of immigration stopping, it looks as if the New Englander is becoming a thing of the past, judging the ways families are dying out, and pamphlets published in Vermont in different languages, and people wanted to come and settle the deserted farms of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts. Some time ago, I traveled through eastern Kentucky and Tennessee, south Missouri, Arkansas, north and west Louisiana, and what did I find? Why, thousands and thousands of pure American nativs, who lived in a fine country all their lives, the future garden of North America; but they hav only an old quilt, gunny sacks for doors, and no windows to their houses. So you may judge of their civilization. These same people who now see European immigration, which has turned from the west and north southward, building railroads, towns, and industries by thousands, talk just like your numerous Knownothingite correspondents. They think the government allows them to be imposed upon by allowing people to invade their country, and build such houses, which their forefathers never practiced—"neither will we uns do it," as they say.

I hav spent enough money to rent halls, pay for charters, hav a League, or, as now called, Secular society, organized, and hav had it all broken up by a bigoted Knownothingite offering some Knownothingite resolution; then a heated debate that resulted in having the last meeting. These so offered resolutions always were written or uttered by some blatherskite of a Freethought lecturer. Some years ago, we secured laws in California that secured man's blessings, free Sunday, taxation of church property, without the assistance of any Freethought lecturers, and except a few Irish, the main enemies we had to fight were nativs from the Eastern states who could not tolerate "such Dutch barbarism" as the civilized Sunday liberty. In Iowa these same Prohibition Knownothingites established the most infamous bastard civilization, where constables, as of old in New England, secure papers and search houses not only from cellar to garret, but invade a ladies' bedroom, uncover the bed, and search for wine or beer bottles between its folds. Not finding any, they search under the bed. Every box containing sanitary means is investigated by these Prohibition state officers. In short, an infamous civilization these fanatics from New England hav established. I prefer the company of large, broad, and Liberal-minded, industrious and progressiv people, to narrow-minded, Knownothingite Freethinkers. So stop the The Truth Seeker, when the end of payment is reached, until further order. Did your Eastern people ever read how many White Caps and Bald Knobbers and other Knownothingites we had to kill in Missouri and Kansas last year, what did not get hanged or shot by the state militia being sent to the penitentiary? Self-conceit and Knownothingism is the most poisonous and most powerful sentiment to destroy intellectual development and progress. Some years ago I was a subscriber to a Freethought paper published in Indiana. I called the attention of Liberals. Soon seventeen Swedes, Danes, and Germans subscribed, but the way that paper expounded Knownothingism not only lost all the subscribers, but at last I felt ashamed too, as every prominent man and Freethinker denounced it. Respectfully, Jacob Blumer.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Light o' May.

I found a new, sweet world to-day
When I was ill and sad;
Green carpets from the looms o' May
That made me almost glad;
And birds are building in the trees
That welcome all the miser bees,
While boys that plow sing in the corn
From very joy that June is born.

'Twas but a little light o' May
Fell on the willows brown,
And cottonwoods burst out as gay
As blackbirds o'er the town.
Oh! hav we ever seen before
Such flowers upon this prairie shore,
With nature's music drifting in
Like boatman's song with violin?

Each path along the shining land
Is clothed in full with green;
And morning with her beauty hand
Sows crystals in between;
And fragrance from the boughs that blow,
The cottonwoods and willow row,
And walnuts tossing arms of brown
Upon the bushes farther down.

MARY BAIRD FINCH.

Cry all the Time.

Mrs. Way and her little son Lannie were sitting by the grate just after tea, when the latter questioned: "Mamma, did not the minister say the other day that only the elect would be saved?" "Yes, dear." And al the rest of the people will go to hell?" "Certainly, there is no alternativ." "Do you really believe it, mamma?" "Yes my son." "Now, mamma, I don't want to dispute you and be a naughty boy, but I don't see how it can be that you believe it, because if you did, I should think you would cry all the time." "Cry all the time!" "Yes, mamma; I should not think you could help crying all the time. You cried when papa got his leg broke, and when I hurt myself so falling down stairs; and you cried and cried when little baby sister died, and I hav seen you cry about a story you was reading; and you cried when pony Midget died, and the kitten fell in the cistern and was drowned, and Rover got poisoned, and the hawk killed the parrot, and the canary bird flew away, and lots of things that are not one half or quarter so bad as it is to think that perhaps papa, and you, and I are not among the elect, and will not be saved, but go to that awful hell. Now, mamma, you think you believe it, but do you way in deep? If you did, would you not cry all the time?"

Mrs. Way was wrapped in thought a long time, but finally answered:

"Lannie, you are right; it cannot be that I believe it, because I know if I did I would be very unhappy."

"Just as I said, mamma, you would cry all the time." SADIE A. MAGOON.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Origin of Phrases.

The common phrase, "catching a Tartar," says Grose, the antiquarian, arose out of the adventure of an Irish soldier in the imperial service. During a battle with the Turks he called out to a comrade that he had caught a Tartar. "Bring him along," was the reply. "He won't come," declared Paddy. "Then come yourself," rejoined his comrade. "Ah, but he won't let me," replied Paddy. Instead of capturing the Tartar the Tartar had captured him.

"Putting the cart before the horse" means to begin to do a thing at the wrong end. The phrase is very old and is quoted by Lucian, a great Greek writer, who lived almost seventeen hundred years ago. It is surprising how frequently a search for the origin of phrases lands us among the ancient Greek or Latin writers. For instance, the couplet,

He who fights and runs away
May liv to fight another day, is almost invariably declared to hav originated with Butler, the author of "Hudibras." It is really a Greek proverb, and mention is made of it by Tertullian. As early as the beginning of the second century a Latin writer, Aulus Gellius, puts it into the mouth of Demosthenes as an excuse for his cowardice at Cheronea.

"Begging the question" is supposed to be a modern phrase born of the many political discussions which occur in Congress. It is known in logical disputations as "the petition of the principle," almost a literal translation of a Latin phrase. "Begging the question" was first used by Aristotle. "Birds of a feather flock together" is also from the Latin. Translate this sentence from Plautus, "Pares cum paribus facilime congregantes," and you'll hav it almost literally.

The expression "Mind your P's and Q's" is said to hav various derivations. In old times the score of the alehouse customer was kept on a slate or was chalked on the door of a cupboard, the P and Q standing for pint and quart. The score was settled for and wiped out every Saturday night. If the customer was dilatory in making settlement he was reminded of his P's and Q's. It has been inferred that the word tick, equivalent to credit, arose from the tick or mark which indicated each glass of ale. Others date the phrase to the time when perukes were in fashion. The toupee was the artificial lock of hair and the queue the pig-tail. The phrase was "Mind your toupees and your queues." An old riddle givs color to this explanation. "Who is the best person to keep the alphabet in order?" was the conundrum. The answer was, "A barber, because he ties up the queues and puts toupees in order." It may be that this old riddle suggested the more modern one of "When does a blacksmith set the letters of the alphabet to quarreling?" "When he makes a poker (a poke r) and shovel (shove l)."

"Blind as a beetle" is a phrase as familiar as it is false. The insect, in its rapid flight in summer, often strikes the faces of those that are walking, which led to the erroneous impression that it is blind. Collins refers to this freak of the beetle in his "Ode to Evening:"

And oft he rises in the twilight path
Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum.

The poet, however, was too much of an entomologist to impute blindness to the insect.

"Carrying the war into Africa" means to retaliate upon an enemy by adopting his own tactics. It grew out of the battle of wits between Scipio and Hannibal. The latter, a Carthaginian leader, led his army into Italy, and for several years continued to threaten Rome and lay waste the surrounding country. Scipio, the Roman general, saw the necessity of getting rid of Hannibal and his forces. So he led an army into Africa and threatened Carthage, thus making it necessary for Hannibal to return home for its defense.

"Cimmerian darkness" is derived from the traditions concerning the Cimmerii, a people of Italy who lived in caves near Lake Averno. From these gloomy habitations, so inaccessible to the rays of the sun, the sybils gave out their oracles.

The old proverbial expression, "Dead as a door nail," had a very simple origin. In olden times the doors were supplied with knockers instead of bells. The knocker itself, in order to make the necessary noise, was made to strike on a piece of iron inserted in the door, and this piece of iron was called the "nail." So many blows rendered the nail multa morte, as Virgil says, "abundantly dead," "very dead!" In Shakspere's "Henry IV.," Falstaff says: "What! is the old king dead?" Pistol replies: "As nail in door."

"Escaped with the skin of his teeth," is from the twentieth verse of the nineteenth chapter of Job.

According to the historian Macaulay, the expression, "The gray mare is the better horse," originated in the preference given to the gray mare of Flanders over the fine coach horse of England.—Frank H. Stauffer in Detroit Free Press.

Persian Lying.

The forms of untruth which prevail among a people are always highly characteristic of mental, if not of moral, qualities. The humorous exaggerations of our people are in strong contrast with the bold inventions of the Persians, which resemble the extravagances of the "Arabian Nights." The author of "From the Indus to the Tigris" tells the following as a specimen of Persian mendacity:

One of the Persians of our escort assured us that the wind often prevailed with such furious force that it knocked people off their legs.

"Why, only last year," said he, with most animated gestures, "it tore up the sand in that hollow away to the left with such force, and swept it away in such quantities, that it exposed the remains of an ancient town of which nobody ever dreamed the existence before. The houses were discovered in rare order. The chambers were clear of debris and clean swept of dust, and, marvelous to relate, the furniture was found just as it stood when the city was swallowed up in the earth."

"You astonish me," I said; "this is something very wonderful."

"Yes," he continued, "you speak the truth—it is wonderful. God is great, and his power is infinit. But I will tell you the most wonderful thing of all. Everything looked perfect and most substantial, but the moment a hand was stretched out to touch an object, the object at once crumbled to powder. The place is only a few miles off our road; would you like to gallop over and see it?"

"Your description," I said, "is so complete that I see the place before my mind's eye. Why incommode ourselvs in this rain for what is so apparent?"

I saw that he felt the sarcasm, though, with genuin Persian nonchalance, he covered his retreat with an "As you will! There the place is, and if you like to see it, I am ready to accompany you."—Youth's Companion.

Correspondence.

MILFORD, May 3, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Children's Corner. My school commenced last Monday, the teacher coming from Maine. I study reading, spelling, geography, Colburn's arithmetic, grammar, writing, and drawing. I hav a brother Willie, twelve years old; one sister, whose name is Norma Maud. She is a little over one year old, and I shall be eleven next August. Willie and myself like the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and Norma looks them over, but will tear them to pieces if we do not watch her, which shows how she likes them. Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER seven years last fall. He went to the Secular Union Convention in Philadelphia last October, and liked it very much.

I cut out the "Five Cents a Drink" verses from the Corner and spoke them the last day of school. One of the committee said it was a very good piece, and hoped the boys would remember it and heed its advice.

Papa bought me the "Story Hour" three years ago at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, and I like to read it and look at the pictures.

I will send you a card with my name on it.

Your friend, ETTA V. FISK.

OAK MILLS, KAN., May 5, 1890.

MISS WIXON, Dear Friend: After so long a time I will endeavor to write you a brief letter, and I will begin by saying that your poem entitled, "When Womanhood Awakes," is a fine one. I hav read it in several papers, and the more I read it, the more I am convinced that its author is a poetess of more than ordinary ability. I hav read several poems written by you and they are all poetical gems.

I hav read in late copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER some valuable articles from the pen of Mr. Edos Santos, of Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, West Indies. I correspond with him and I take great pleasure in reading his letters. They are always so interesting. He is a young Freethinker, and from all appearances is doing a noble and needed work in his nativ land. He was recently chosen secretary of the new Freethought league which was lately organized there.

We had Grant memorial services, also a literary entertainment, at our school-house on Monday night, April 28th. The house was crowded and the speeches were highly applauded. This was the third meeting in honor of a noted American that has been held in that school-house. Washington, Lincoln, and Grant hav all been honored there, and next year we will probably do honor to the memory of Garfield or Jefferson.

I hav a fine collection of curiosities, relics, mineral specimens, etc., such as starfish, sea beans, corals, skate eggs, alligator and shark teeth, cowry shells, California live oak acorns, petrified wood, calcite formations, agates, flints, gypsum, quartz crystals, petrified lily heads, a piece of wood from Libby prison, a stone from the buried city of Pompeii, a piece of wood from the house in which Spiritualism originated, a newspaper published at Vicksburg the day before Grant took the city, a newspaper as it appeared the morning of Lincoln's assassination, postage stamps from all parts of the world, also postal cards and old coins, Confederate money, old documents, Indian war ax and arrow heads, Indian pottery, buffalo horn, buffalo teeth, relics of the Johnstown flood, porcupine quills, petrified elk horn, and fossils of all kinds, besides many other specimens too numerous to mention. I hav a fine collection of minerals.

I can think of no more to write, so I will close with best wishes to you all. I remain,

Your true friend, GEO. J. REMSBURG.

[Thanks, George, for the above interesting letter. Always glad to hear from you.—ED. C. C.]

FROM SOUTH AMERICA.

[The writer of the letter below has grown up, as it were, in our Children's Corner. Last autumn he went to South America on an important business mission. We hav every reason to be proud of the fine promis of our children who graduate under the teachings of Liberal principles.—ED. C. C.]

CARACAS, VENEZUELA, April 19, 1890.

MISS WIXON, Dear Friend: Your esteemed and welcome favor of the 28th ult. has just come to hand. To say that I was highly flattered by your kind epistle is a very mild way of expressing my pleasure at receiving it. . . . My travels here in South America hav been quite interesting, although in many instances the interest has been aroused more by novelty than pleasure.

The musketoes and fleas are somewhat trying occasionally, particularly in the seaports, and more so than anywhere else at Maracaibo.

This little city, poetica, called by Venezuelans the Sultana del Lago (Sultana of the Lake), is situated near the entrance to Lake Maracaibo and derives its chief importance from the fact that it is the seaport and only means of communication between the outside world and the entire northwestern part of Venezuela.

There are no railroads in that section of the country, the popular vehicle, if I may use the word, being the patient and often calumniated donkey. Sure of hoof and often endowed with more common sense than his owner, this small but headstrong animal is employed in every possible manner.

The hotel at which I stopped in Maracaibo is situated directly opposit the market-place. And in the morning, looking from my balcony into the street below, I could hardly see the ground, so thickly was it covered by donkeys and guajiro Indians. These Indians, by the way, are the most degraded race I ever saw. Brutal, cowardly, and stupid, they hav nothing at all in common with their North American brethren. All I hav seen, male and female, old and young, were indolent and fat, and, in my opinion, without the pale of philanthropic influence. They even sell their own children at the tender age of six or seven years, and these hav to drudge along as servants till they become of age, which occurs at twenty-one, as with us.

The higher classes all over Venezuela are, as a rule, educated, affable, and refined. And in this city, Caracas, is to be found as brilliant and genteel society as in any part of the world.

The ladies here are very pretty and scandals exceedingly rare. Not long since a person—I regret to say he was attached to our diplomatic corps here—wrote an article for the New York Herald in which he greatly exaggerated the faults of Venezuela. Of course the press here took the matter up, with the result that the offender was recalled.

The politics of the country are in a very unsettled state, influence having more weight in some cases than justice. But this is owing to want of experience and will eventually disappear. Since the overthrow of Guzman Blanco, for which the country owes much to Sr. Rajas Paul, they hav advanced and are advancing rapidly.

Just now the whole nation is excited over the Guayana question. The English government, with its usual audacity, has usurped a large tract of Venezuelan territory at the mouth or delta of the Orinoco, and the government of Venezuela is preparing to drive them out. In this they will hav my best wishes, and I trust the moral, if, indeed, not the material, influence and aid of the United States.

Traveling is at times rather perilous, as most of the roads are only footpaths cut along the sides of mountains, with a thousand feet or so up and down on either side. Of course, if your beast stumble or slip—imagin!

I leave La Guaira on the 30th inst. for New York, and expect to arrive in that city about May 15th, from which time until October you will find me there at your orders.

With many thanks for your kindness and attention, and best wishes for yourself and the Corner, I remain,

Your friend, G. L. NEWTON.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau st., New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.
Emory P. Robinson, Sydney.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

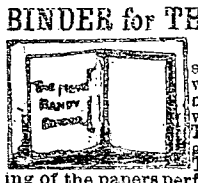
GIRARD'S WILL
AND
Girard College Theology.
AN EXPOSÉ
Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.
By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.
Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

FREETHOUGHT
IS IT
DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?
A SYMPOSIUM
BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAM
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,	THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:
Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?



PRICE 25 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE
CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:
THEIR
Crimes and Persecutions.
8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

TRY-SQUARE:
OR,
The Church of Practical Religion.
BY REPORTER.
This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.
For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.
Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;
OR,
A Key to Bible Investigation.
Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.
BY A. JACOBSON.
Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.
Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.
Price only 25 cents.

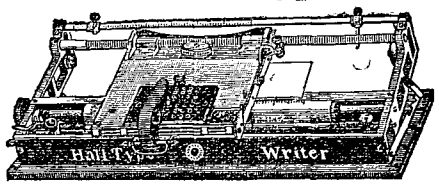
Col. Kelso's Works.
The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.
Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.
BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.
The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.
Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Giordano Bruno.
His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.
With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.
BY
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.
Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Charles Watts's Works.
The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.
Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of Mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.
A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.
Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.
The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.
Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.
Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.
Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.
Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.
Saints and Sinners - Which?. 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.
The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.
The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.
Nature and the Supernatural; or Self and Knowledge. 24 pages Price, 10 cents.
The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.
Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3. Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.
NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.
Christianity: Defectiv and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,
OR, THE
Conflict between Reason and Superstition.
BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.
Price, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.



The Candle from Under the Bushel
(Mark iv, 21); or,
1,306 Questions to the Clergy:
And for the Consideration of Others.
Instructive, Interesting, and Laughable.
BY WILLIAM HART.
Price, - - - 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ON THE WORD GOD.
By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."
The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.
Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.
Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS
AN ADDRESS
By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL,
DELIVERED BEFORE THE
New York State Bar Association, at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1890.
The only Complete and Authorized Edition.
PRICE, TEN CENTS.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

New Model Hall Typewriter

The Best Standard Typewriter in the World.
Cheap, Portable, No Ink Ribbon, Interchangeable Type in all Languages, Easiest to learn and rapid as any. Agents wanted everywhere.
WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED. Address
National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. P. O. box 5159.
Send for catalog and specimens of work.
13 10

LOOKING BACKWARD
By Edward Bellamy,
Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.
It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.
The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.
A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.
12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Essence of Religion.
By L. FEUERBACH.
Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.
The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE
Cosmian Hymn Book,
A COLLECTION OF
Original and Selected Hymns
(Words and Music)
For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.
COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.
PRICE, . . . $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Every Liberal Should Read
THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.
By ARTHUR B. MOSS.
WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.
INTRODUCTION.
Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution; Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.
Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. gives a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00;

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 66 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

IRON-CLAD AND MANNA SERIES.

IRON-CLAD SERIES.

1 Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
2 Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake.. 5
4 Influence of Christianity on Civilization, Underwood..... 25
7 Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Mueller... 10
8 Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison..... 15
9 Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 10
10 Epidemic Delusions. Marvin..... 10
11 Philosophy of Spiritualism. Marvin..... 50
12 Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural, and Portrait.. 25
13 Essay on Miracles. David Hume..... 10
14 Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
15 Were Adam and Eve our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
16 Why do Men Starve? Chas. Bradlaugh.. 5
17 Logic of Life Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. George J. Holyoake. 10
18 A Plea for Atheism. Chas. Bradlaugh.... 10
19 Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake.. 5
20 Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake..... 5
21 Defence of Secular Principles. C. Watts.. 5
22 Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts..... 5
23 The Christian Deity. Charles Watts..... 5
24 Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts.. 5
25 Freethought and Mod. Progress. Watts. 5
26 Christianity: Its Nature, and Influence on Civilization. Chas. Watts..... 5
28 Thoughts on Atheism. Austin Holyoake. 5
29 Is there a Moral Governor of the Universe? Austin Holyoake..... 5
30 Philosophy of Secularism. Chas. Watts... 5
31 Has Man a Soul? Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
38 Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
39 Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
40 Poverty: Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H.. 10
42 Science and Bible Antagonistic. Watts... 5
43 Christian Scheme of Redemption. Watts. 5
44 Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10
47 Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5

MANNA SERIES.

1 Original Manna for "God's chosen."..... 5
3 New Life of David. Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
4 Why I was Excommunicated. Barnard... 20
5 200 Questions Without Answers..... 5
6 Dialogue between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin..... 10
7 Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian..... 10
8 Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake..... 5
9 New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
10 A Few Words about the Devil..... 5
11 New Life of Jacob..... 5
12 Daniel, the Dreamer. Austin Holyoake... 10
13 Specimen of the Bible: Esther. Holyoake 10
14 Acts of the Apostles: A Farce. A. H.... 10
15 Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. H. 10
16 Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
17 Who Was Jesus Christ? C. Bradlaugh... 5
18 What Did Jesus Teach? C. Bradlaugh.... 5
19 New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5
20 New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh... 5
21 A Secular Prayer. Holyoake. Per doz... 10

On orders for Iron Clad and Manna we will send $1.10 worth for $1; $2.50 worth for $2; $5 worth for $3, and $10 worth for $5.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

BY JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Brain and the Bible.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.

By EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

Unanswerable. Price, $1.

Creed of Christendom.

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in 1 vol., 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

WHICH:

SPIRITUALISM OR CHRISTIANITY?

By MOSES HULL (Spir.) and REV. W. F. PARKER (Chris.).

Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

HEBREW MYTHOLOGY;

OR,

The Rationale of the Bible.

Holy Scriptures Treat of Natural Phenomena Only.

By MILTON WOOLEY, M.D.

8vo, 613pp., - - - - - $2.50.

Faith and Reason.

ACCOUNT OF THE

Christian and All Prominent Religions Before and Since Christ. Extract from Sacred Books of the East.

By H. R. STEVENS. Price, $1.50.

Nature's Revelations of Character.

Physiognomy Illustrated.

By JOSEPH SIMMS, M D.

Individual traits indicated by the temperaments and features.

260 woodcuts. 8vo, 650pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS.

His Character and Doctrines.

From the "Analysis of Religious Belief."

By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

REVELATIONS OF ANTICHRIST.

PROVING

Jesus Christ Did Not Exist in the Reign of Tiberius, but a Jesus was Hanged a Century before, and Peter and Paul died before the Christian Era.

Full index, 446pp., - - - $1.50.

THEOLOGY AND MYTHOLOGY.

AN

Inquiry into the Claims of Biblical Inspiration and the Supernatural Element in Religion.

By A. H. O'DONOGHUE.

Price, - - - $1.

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN.

A Radical Novel of Marked Ability.

BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. . Price reduced to $1.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT the DEVIL.

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

By CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

MONKS, POPES, AND THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

By J. ALBERGER.

376pp., $1. Soiled copies, 50 cts. and 75 cts.

POPES AND THEIR DOINGS.

ACCOUNT OF

Vicars of Christ and Vicegerents of God.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments against Christianity.

Price, cloth, 50 cents.

NEW DISPENSATION.

By D. W. HULL (Spir.).

Price, - - - - - 15 cents.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:

A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, 25 cents.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.

"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."

Price, 10 cents.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.

By F. R. MARVIN.

Price, . . . 5 cents.

For all of the above books address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO. 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity.

Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed.

By GEORGE REBER.

12mo, 400pp., - - Price, $2.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A Compendium of Universal History.

By WINWOOD READE.

Sixth edition, 544pp., - - $1.75.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS.

With Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism.

By H. R. STEVENS. 419pp., $1.50.

ETHICS OF POSITIVISM.

A Critical Study and Survey of the Moral Philosophy of the Present Century.

By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI,

Prof. of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence.

Price, $1.50.

OLD FAITH AND THE NEW.

A Confession.

By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS.

Authorized translation from sixth German edition by Mathilde Blind.

Price, ... $1.50.

HEALTH HINTS TO WOMEN.

Important Information for All, and "Danish Cure." With Portrait.

By MME. W. SCHOTT. Price, $1.50.

The Legends of the Patriarchs and Prophets.

By S. BARING-GOULD.

Will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.—[Congregationalist.

Price, $1.50.

RADICAL PULPIT.

Discourses of Advanced Thought.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER.

Price, $1.

INSTITUTION of MARRIAGE.

And Remarkable Divorce Cases.

By PHILANTHROPUS.

446pp. - - - - - Price, $1.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared.

By MOSES HULL.

Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY

AND OTHER PAPERS.

Candid Arguments for and Against Immortality

By JOSIE OPPENHEIM. Price, 75 cents.

SIXTEEN SAVIORS OR NONE.

By KERSEY GRAVES.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.

For Organizing Societies; for Marriages, Funerals, Naming of Infants, Obituaries, Epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns for Social and Various Public Occasions.

18mo, 550pp. Price, 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Nunneries.

By W. HOGAN.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Shelley: Philosopher and Reformer.

By C. SOTHERAN.

8vo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Lithograph of D. M. Bennett.

Heavy plate paper 22x28. Price, 50 cts.

Lithograph of Bennett Monument.

In 4 colors, 22x28. Heavy plate paper.

Price, 50 cents.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE.

With Remarks on Rousseau and Comte.

By CALVIN BLANCHARD.

Paper, - - - 40 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS.

WITH

Theological Amendment and State Personality.

By JOS. E. PECK.

Price, - - - - - 25 cents.

For all of the above books address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Due Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No.2.Rev.Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr.A.G.Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps. 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Bible-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell..... 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Capphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 5
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev.M.J.Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology..... 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
10 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson..... 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
13 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Addr ss THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ASTHMA-CURED DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial BOTTLE FREE
DR. TAFT BROS., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR BOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SPECIAL SALE OF WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2.50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4 50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.50; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels, $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart-shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can have their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 5th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,
Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union
Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club
Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Milwaukee, Wis., Liberal Club
Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 216 Grand ave., (Fraternity Hall). Lecture followed by debates. The public cordially invited.

Brotherhood of Moralists, No. 903, Prairie City, Ia.,
Meets every Sunday in the Liberal reading-room hall at 2:30 P.M. All Liberals are cordially invited. F. V. DRAPER, Cor. Sec.

San Francisco, Cal., Freethought Society
Meets every Sunday evening at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Seats free.

Des Moines Secular Union
Holds regular meetings at Good Templar Hall, Flynn Block, S.E corner 7th and Locust streets. Lectures followed by discussion. Friends from abroad heartily welcome.
FRANKLIN STEINER, Pres.

Portsmouth, O., Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7 P.M. in Grand Army Hall Lectures, discussions, readings, poems, music and songs. A cordial invitation is extended to all; especially to friends from abroad. Correspondence solicited. J. L. TRENTHART, President. WILL S. ANDRES, Secretary.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indescretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT.

"Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N.J.

Inquiries are frequently received asking what we know about Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, N. J., First, we know that he is a reliable gentleman of rare professional skill, who has earned success by good work. Second that he fulfills all his agreements to the letter. Third, that he has performed cures of hopeless cases that in the olden time his skill would have been called miraculous. Fourth, and last, we know him to be an honest man and a stanch Liberal.—The Better Way.

News of the Week.

In Germany, Austria, and Spain strikes and commotions continue.

A federation of all the Catholic societies in the Union is under way.

Another death from electric light wires occurred in New York on the 17th.

The Senate has voted to appropriate $100,000 for a monument to Grant at Washington.

A mob of Protestants recently attacked and wrecked the Catholic church at Hoyerswerda, Germany.

On the 15th, at Ashley, Pa., thirty-one men were buried in a mine by an explosion, and only two were rescued.

At Havana on the 18th fire in a hardware store reached a barrel of gunpowder, and the explosion killed thirty-four persons.

The monument at Rome of the pope blessing the world, will be copied in marble for the Catholic University at Washington.

The Independent has made a canvass of Presbyterian sentiment on revision of the creed, and found 133 for and 69 against.

At an anti-Jewish meeting at Berlin on the 18th there was a conflict between the anti-Semitic attendants and Socialists, which the police quelled.

The Rothschilds hav informed the Austrian emperor that unless oppression of the Jews ceases in Vienna they will remove their banking house.

In Belgium the Liberal and Masonic ascendency in the government is giving way to a Catholic one, and the public schools are being crushed.

In Germany the extensiv Employers' Protection Association now forming will be met by a central strike union in which all the trade unions will be ranged.

The London branch of the Social Democratic Federation, as the international Socialist organization is called, will run a candidate for nearly every London constituency.

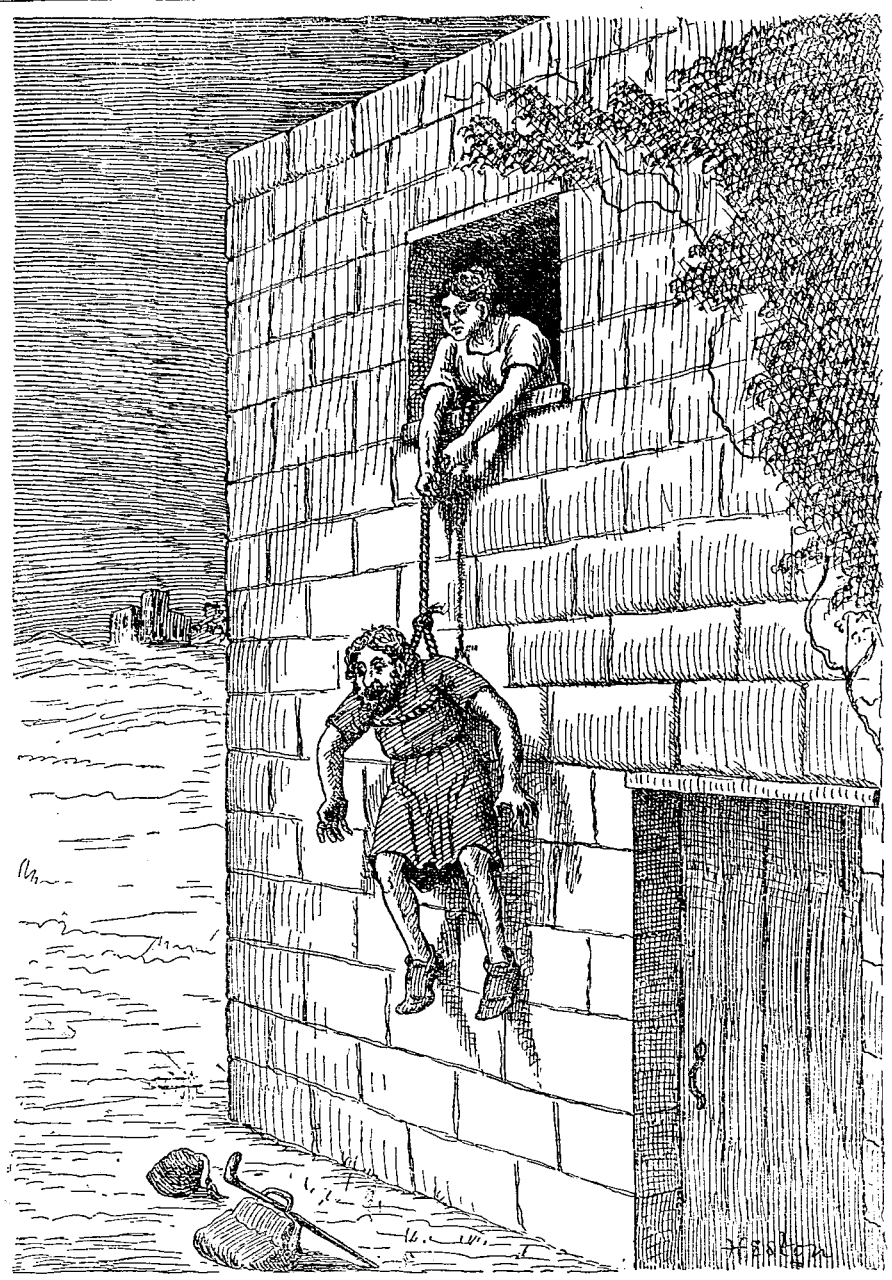
A number of women of Galicia, Austria, hav petitioned the emperor to admit them to an equal standing with the male sex by creating in the army a corps of volunteer amazons.

The Universal Revi w, of London, publishes an address in which 254 Parliament members, litterateurs, artists, and other celebrities remonstrate with the czar for his treatment of Siberian convicts.

Louisiana will probably accept the offer of its famous Lottery Company of $25 000,000 for a license for twenty-five years. The governor is opposed, but the press and most of the legislature are for it.

The movement to secure the release of the imprisoned Anarchists, on the ground that they were not present in the Supreme Court to hear its affirmation, is being pushed by General Butler and the other counsel.

Dr. Windthorst demands in the German parliament readmission of the Jesuits and all religious orders to the country; enlarged ecclesiastical control of the schools, and the establishment of a Catholic section in the ministry.



The other day several offenders were publicly flogged and pilloried in the streets of Georgetown, Del. This degrading medieval practice is receiving much blame from the states that hav emerged farther out of Christianity than pious Delaware, and hav consequently laid aside barbarous customs in a corresponding degree.

Heber Newton calls attention to the low rank of New York city in municipal management, comparing its ill-kept docks, scanty gas and water supply, lack of public libraries and museums, inadequate schools, and high taxes and official waste, with the admirable provisions and less expense of other cities, those of Germany in particular.

The census to be taken in a few days will include questions in the interests of statistical science which will be new. One question is what disease, if any, the citizen has. All questions must be answered under penalty of a fine. Some papers exclaim against these inquiries as unduly intrusiv, while others welcome the design as productiv of beneficial results in scientific knowledge.

The Bruno statue receives much admiration for its workmanship and honor for its subject, and it is also proposed to erect a monument to Pomponius de Algerio, burnt in 1556. On this a Catholic journal says that "if the existing fanaticism continues, Rome, and indeed the entire land of Italy, bids fair to become one vast 'Rogue's Gallery' in marble, stone, and bronze."

The pope received an Italian pilgrimage a few days ago, and declared that temporal power must be reacquired; that they must heed the teaching of his encyclical on the duty of citizens to resist the state if it oppose the church; that a stigma rests upon those who "hav a foot in both camps," and urged "Italian Catholics openly to manifest their true convictions, courageously to follow the dictates of faith and conscience, and range themselvs round the throne of the Roman pontiff."

DAVID FLEETH FROM SAUL.

So Michal let David down through a window: and he went, and fled, and escaped.—1 Sam xix, 12.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1890.

(E. M. 290.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Calendar for 1890,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1889,	17
Faded Flowers. Poem by J. E. Remsburg,	24
The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue. T. B. Wakeman,	26
Mostly Fools. W. Stewart Ross (Saladin),	36
Record of the Spanish Inquisition,	44
Dates of the Fabrication of Some Roman Catholic Dogmas,	44
The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a Moral. Helen H. Gardener,	45
The Middle Ages. Illustrated,	69
The Priest,	70
The Supernatural World,	71
The Reformation,	73
Future Terrors,	77
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated,	79
Freethought Journals in the United States,	96
In Search of a Spirit. E. M. Macdonald,	97
Why I Left the Church. H. O. Pentecost,	109

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

28 Lafayette Place.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Gems of Thought.

Modest doubt is called
The beacon of the wise.—Shakspere.

The doubter . . . has been the savior of liberty.—Ingersoll.

The ignorant trust their eyes, not their reason. Ignorance has always been and always will be at the mercy of appearance. Credulity, as a rule, believes everything except the truth. The semi-civilized believe in astrology, but who could convince them of the vastness of astronomical spaces, the speed of light, or the magnitude and number of suns and constellations? If Hermann and Humboldt could hav appeared before savages, which would hav been regarded as a god?—Ingersoll.

Then Hobbes comes to a favorit subject, the mistaken courses whereinto men fall that are ignorant of natural causes and the proper signification of words. The effect of ignorance of the causes of right, equity, law, and justice, is to make custom and example the rule of actions, as with children, or to induce the setting of custom against reason, and reason against custom, whereby the doctrin of right and wrong is perpetually disputed, both by the pen and by the sword.—Bain's Moral Science.

Innovation of every kind was regarded as a crime; superior knowledge excited only terror and suspicion.—Lecky.

He who surpasses or subdues mankind
Must look down on the hate of those below.
—Byron.

To morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays hav lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing. —Shakspere.

Often as Shakspere's questionings turned to the riddle of life and death, he leaves it a riddle to the last without heeding the common theological solutions around him.—Prof. J. R. Green.

We should learn, as part of liberty, tolerance for those who differ from us. We require it of others, since we differ from all; and it lies at the basis of the mutual concessions necessary for society. The more intelligent men are the more they differ, since they develop greater individuality; so that the better the people the greater the amount of tolerance necessary. The problem of the state is, how differing men may get along together, and not how agreeing ones may do so. . . . We should even learn to see others working against us without being offended. If they do not agree with us, we cannot expect them to coöperate with us. Hence to tolerate antagonism becomes a virtue—political patience. We should learn to do all we can to promote our ends, without preventing others from doing likewise, which is simply equality. . . . One who values his own peace of mind must learn to not be disturbed by the differences of his antagonist. Displeasure at another's opinion is like displeasure at his wealth. If you can be pleased only with your own, you are necessarily unhappy. . . . An honest opinion, like an honest dollar, should elicit respect. We should demand no more for our views than for our property rights, but remember that the like rights of others are part of the same system which makes ours possible.—Bierbower.

All hav the same interest, whether they know it or not, in the establishment of facts. All hav the same to gain, the same to lose.—Ingersoll.

Belief in the Bible story of creation, which hindered the ideas of Copernicus and Galileo, and has opposed all progress of "earth knowledge" in the past, still prevents the intellectual growth of man, and the improvement of his circumstances by the discovery of the laws regulating the forces of nature.—Robt. C. Adams.

Miserable human beings, whether in green robes, or in turbans; whether in black gowns or surplices, or in mantles and bands, I adjure you, never seek to employ authority where nothing is concerned but reason, or consent to be reviled in all ages as the most impertinent of men, as well as to endure public hatred as the most unjust. You hav been told a hundred times of the insolent absurdity with which you condemned Galileo, and I speak to you of it for the hundred and first. I would hav you keep the anniversary of it forever. I would hav it inscribed over the door of your holy office. Seven cardinals, assisted by certain minorite friars, threw into prison the master of thinking in Italy at the age of seventy; and made him liv upon bread and water because he instructed mankind in that of which they were ignorant.—Voltaire.

Mental slavery is mental death, and every man who has given up his intellectual freedom is the living coffin of his dead soul. In this sense, every church is a cemetery and every creed an epitaph.—Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 17. No. 22. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. { New York, Saturday, May 31, 1890. } 28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

THE DOG IN THE MANGER.

Notes and Clippings.

THE pope has protested against the placing of a tablet to the memory of Garibaldi in the church of Santa Maria Novella at Florence.

A MAGISTRATE in South Australia, according to the Australian Radical, recently startled a lawyer who was endeavoring to discredit a witness because he did not believe in the Bible, by declaring that "nobody believed in it." The lawyer said he believed in it, and the magistrate laughingly remarked that the bishop of Peterborough did not believe in it —probably to show that those who know it best believe it least.

THE Vienna Reichs-Correspondens announces that the pope recently addressed a circular to about a hundred bishops in different countries asking whether, in their opinion, the proclamation of the dogma of the temporal power of the holy see would be opportune. Sixty-six bishops are said to hav declared in favor of the dogma, while all the Italian bishops expressed themselvs as opposed to it. The Jesuits are in favor of proclaiming the dogma without delay.

THE bishop of Liverpool is not in entire agreement with some of the directors of societies for the care of young women. At a meeting of the Liverpool Rescue Society he said: "I do not quite agree with the White Cross and other societies which look upon all young women as lambs and angels, and all young men as ravening wolves going about seeking whom they can devour. I think human nature is the same in females as in males, and that young women are often as prone, unless there is a good principle in them, to run into sin as young men. We must look at the matter in a common-sense manner."

ELDER WOODRUFF, head of the Mormon church at this time, and in consequence the authorized prophet thereof, must hav astounded the brethren very much recently, says an exchange, when he publicly announced that "there will be no more revelations from God to the Mormons." The elder did not state whether this conclusion was arrived at on his own motion, or by a change of the omnipotent mind, or a joint conference. We are very decidedly of the opinion that the elder is solely responsible for this fundamental change of program.

THE Rev. Father McCanna, a Roman Catholic priest, preaching in Joliet lately, warned parents against sending their children to the American public schools, saying that they would be lost, and when the parents were asked on the judgment day, "What hav you done with the little ones I gave you?" the awful reply would come, "Damned, dammed, all eternally damned." He said that the American public-school system was immoral, unjust, and unconstitutional, and that the result of education in the public schools was paupers, lunatics, and criminals, Communists, Socialists, and Anarchists, and parents might as well send their children to the jails and penitentiaries at once, as education in the public schools ended there.

THE State Congregational Association of Iowa hav adopted a memorial against their Romish brethren. The document "views with apprehension" the "concerted, persistent, and virulent attack which the church of Rome is everywhere making on the free schools of America. By all lawful means we must oppose," continues the memorial, "the pretensions of that foreign power which, under the guise of religion, claims from American citizens an allegiance greater than that which they owe to their flag. We must firmly oppose that ecclesiastical tyranny which now, by priest and bishop, is exercising a power over its members greater than that exercised by the constituted authorities of this government." The Congregationalists desire the schools to remain nurseries of Protestantism.

THE Chicago Herald, in a recent leading editorial, announces in favor of an anti-Sabbatarian movement at the World's Fair. "The struggle," it says, "is bound to come. It may as well be invited at once and debated to a finish. Shall not the Columbian exposition be open Sundays? Yes. All considerations, viewed calmly and rationally, are in favor of the open Sunday at the Columbian exposition. It is vain for narrow pedants and shallow preachers to remind us that the Sabbath was made for rest and prayer. Sunday is not the Sabbath. Saturday is the Sabbath. Those for whom it was instituted do in decreasing numbers keep it holy. Modern Christianity is not under the Hebrew dispensation. The Hebrews themselvs acknowledge that the social conditions which rendered the Mosaic Sabbath one of prayer and worship under a hierarchical government hav long since passed away, and that we are under no more obligation to heed them than to rebuild Solomon's temple."

THE San Francisco News-Letter is uncharitably disposed toward Sam Jones, for it says vehemently: "Mr. Sam Jones, inappropriately called the reverend, is not making much of a fist of the soul-saving business in this city. Mr. Jones's methods of rubbing in the gospel are a mingling of the clown and the grave-digger. He is at one time preternaturally solemn, and at another disagreeably grotesque. When he dwells upon the moral relations of the sexes, he is unpardonably indecent. He assured his audience last Sunday that among his friends his chastity was of the most admirable character. This sort of self-laudation is ever prolific of suspicion in analytical minds. If Mr. Sam Jones did not imagin that some worldly-minded man might assert that he cast an unshepherd-like eye on the fair lambs of his cougregation, he would not go about from city to city blowing the trumpet of his own purity. The best proof of the little value his audience of last Sunday set upon this assertion was that a large number of them got up and left. Whereupon Mr. Jones howled after them that he wished they might never come back, as they were not worth saving. A nice sort of mountebank this, to undertake to lead the erring back to the straight and narrow path. The very best cure for this sort of inspired preaching is the introduction of a basket of spoiled eggs and a bushel of highly-scented cabbages into the tabernacle. The alternate application of eggs and cabbages to the unclerical physique of Mr. Sam Jones will teach him in a few short lessons that there must be some limit to the license of the pulpit. And after this I should recommend a little equestrian exercise on a nice, sharp fence rail. If the heart of Mr. Jones still remains untouched, the application of some feathers to the place where his wings ought to grow would make him about as near an angel as he will ever get."

Communications.

A Challenge to Mediums!

Dsiring, in the interests of truth, to test the genuinness of the so-called "slate-writing spirit manifestations," I hereby offer $100 to any medium who will accomplish this feat in my presence subject to the following conditions:

1. The slates to be selected by myself from any stock in this town of the medium's own selection.

2. The slates to be placed in charge of a disinterested person from the time they are selected till the beginning of the "séance."

3. The sitting to commence within one hour after the slates were selected, the slates to be kept by the holder in view of both parties.

4. Each party to be entitled to four witnesses of their own choosing to attend the sitting, everyone present to strictly comply with and conform to the rules usual at these séances, the slates, however, to be kept constantly in sight.

5. The spirit message, when received, to be seen and read by everyone in the room, and also by several outsiders who happen to be in view, and who cannot hav been placed under the medium's mesmeric influence, to determin whether the sitters are under illusiv visual impressions or not. I will, therefore, accept as a genuin spirit communication any writing seen on these slates by persons not having been under mesmeric influence. If, however, this should be objected to, I will consent to hav the slates sealed up by the medium himself and again placed in charge of the disinterested person alluded to, until the sitters hav recovered their normal state and mental equipoise by absenting themselvs from the medium's presence for a few hours, and if the writing is still visible to the sitters at the end of the appointed time—the medium to break the seals and open the slates himself—I shall also regard it as a genuin spirit manifestation.

Any intelligible sentence seen on the slates will satisfy me. I will not insist on recognizing the handwriting of any departed friend or relativ, a phenomenon considered such conclusiv evidence of spirit existence. There is nothing more wonderful or mysterious in this than in any other mesmeric vision. The simple fact is that the object our mesmerized fancy evokes we see, be it the face, figure, or handwriting of a dead or living friend. Any vision can be called into view during the hypnotized condition of the subject. At the beginning of the séance the process of formation commences, the subject generally wishing to receive a message from some one to whom he or she was devotedly attached. This form being ever present, his letters read and re-read until the handwriting is indelibly impressed upon his or her memory, what wonder that, under abnormal physical and mental conditions, the organs of sight and of the imagination become so exalted that these forms, or general outlines, assume the form of a vision, becoming, under these "favorable conditions," the "stock in trade" and sole reliance of the spirit propagandists, apparently visible to the physical eye through the intensely excited sympathetic nerves or sentient motors connecting the imaginativ organs with the morbidly sensitized nerves of the visual organism, even while the subject, to all other intents and purposes, is fully awake? Whether I would make a "good subject" or not, I cannot say, but, for the edification of mediums who intend accepting my challenge, would say that I can, at any time, depict to my mental view any form or handwriting with which I am familiar, and I dare say there are few who cannot. What is there wonderful or mysterious, therefore, in beholding such visionary objects quite lucidly when the mind is specially prepared and "doctored" for it by the psychic force of a mesmerist, yclept "medium?" Spirits indeed! To think that when one's brain has been manipulated by the arts of those who hav special faculties for throwing susceptible organisms into a semi-somnambulistic state, one ascribes the visions perceived during such state to supernatural agencies! Upon what tenable grounds can these creations of an overwrought nervous organism, excited to abnormal action by the will-power or psychic force of the mesmerist, and followed by a reaction in the nature of partial physical lethargy, temporarily suspending other functions of the body while the operator is transferring his superabundant animal magnetism into the passivly submitting individuality of the subject, be attributed to spirits? What connection can the phantasmagoria, which one human being has the art and capacity to evoke in another human being, hav with extraneous influences? When we furthermore consider that these spirit-message phantoms, for instance, can be assisted in "putting in an appearance" by the scribbling sound which the medium is enabled, by his peculiar idiosyncrasies, or by a piece of slate and pencil in his pocket, to convey to the auricular organs of his victims—no; beg your pardon, I mean subjects—said conveyance being via the Sentient Motor Line leading to the nerve-centers of the subjects, and the depression consequent upon the previous exaltation which must necessarily seize the reasoning faculties under these (un) "favorable conditions," a depression, by the way, from which few subjects ever seem to recover—what reason, I repeat, is there for ascribing visions, produced during such an abnormally excited state, to spirit agency? Not a shadow of a reason. It is a bald assumption—an unwarranted jump at a conclusion absolutely devoid of a semblance even of common sense or logic to support it, and totally beyond the pale of tentativ or analogical verification.

Anyone conversant with but the rudiments of the psychological laws of our being must be aware that a steady fixation of the mental eye upon any image or outlines it desires to see more lucidly will terminate in such a high pitch of nervous excitation that under the stimulus of the hypnotic influence diffusing a subtil fluid through one's entire nervous organism by the media, its sympathetic ganglions centering in the physical structure of the visual organs will become so acutely sensitiv that the subject cannot fail to perceive through the interior collectiv nerve centers uniting in the retina the impress or reflex of the object thus evolved through the intense activity of this mental formativ process, and upon the evolution and perception of which desired or expected object the combined psychic energies and odic forces of both subject and mesmerist are concentrated.

What is there mysterious about these simple properties of our nature, and what warrant hav spirit propagandists to esoterically withhold from the world at large a knowledge of these simple psychological principles, deceptivly professing that the mental phenomena they produce are accomplished through spirit agency, when in fact they simply—know better!

Religion keeps the world in the dark; it is only through ignorance that it can sustain itself, and the propounders of Spiritualism seem to follow its policy.

But if the explanations I hav given of these "amazing" phenomena, yclept "spirit manifestations," do not satisfy our Spiritual friends—they satisfy the knowing ones, I dare say, and for that matter, they did not require these explanations to understand them—but if they should not satisfy the uninitiated I would say in further elucidation of these psychic phenomena which hav set the greatest thinkers of the world by the ears, that the mesmerees, or subjects of visual illusion, see the objects evolved during their semi-somnambulistic state, into which they are thrown through the gradually increasing exaltation of their temporarily deranged cerebrum, inducing a condition favorable to hallucinatory impressions, although this proximate somnipathic state does not necessarily render them oblivious to their surroundings, or existing to a degree that would preclude a coherent sequence in the succession of their ideas. On the contrary, the influx of odic nerve force consequent upon this exaltation is so great that while the physical functions must become correspondingly depressed on account of the unavoidable loss of vitality during said influx of nerve force into the cerebral regions, these latter acquire such an abnormal lucidity—a state approaching clairvoyance—that during this "favorable condition"—for imposition—the "impress" which the subject is so desirous of receiving, and the media so anxious to convey, is developed through the creativ process of their combined cerebral activities, and the illusionary object thus appearing upon the overwrought fancy of the temporarily deranged patient, be it that of a departed friend or of a message in his or her own handwriting, or in fact of any other object or noise perceived or transferred to the visual and auricular organism of the subject, is conveyed from the mental retina, i.e., the imagination, upon the now highly sensitized and therefore readily responding organo physical apparatus of the natural eye.

To prove the correctness of this theory concerning the nature of these slate-writing phenomena, i.e., that they are merely hallucinations, let the slates be sealed up by the medium himself, after the writing has been seen on them, and placed in charge of any disinterested person for a few hours, the sitters or subjects in the mean time absenting themselvs to restore their mental equilibrium, and if at the end of that time the alleged "message" is still visible by anyone not under mesmeric influence, I will concede it to be a "spirit manifestation."

This simple test can be made by any witnessing the phenomena, proving conclusivly that what they behold on the slates is an illusion unless produced through trickery. They simply allow themselvs to be mesmerized, but why they should ascribe the visions they behold while in this state to spirits passes my comprehension. They hav no reason except the unsupported assertion of the medium, and what warrant has he for it? As for the purport of the writing, it is explainable in the same manner as the other attendant features or peculiarities of the phenomenon, or in some cases by thought transference from the media to the subject. If then it can be shown that the various objects seen and different noises heard can be produced only in presence of a mesmerist, preferably termed medium or media, is it not proof positiv that these visions or noises are caused by the medium's own psychic powers, and not, as is fallaciously and unwarrantably supposed, by spirit influence?

I say "preferably termed media" because "media" implies spirit existence. It assumes supernatural spirit interference in the affairs of man, and what but groundless implication and cheeky assumption has any phase of Spiritism, from the "holy trinity" down to witchcraft, to support it? It is nothing but the most unwarrantable assumption therefore to call mesmerists by the mystifying name of "media."

Spiritism is supernaturalism and therefore superstitious, although its votaries scornfully reject the imputation. But that spirits must be placed in the same category with witches (these being the "mediums" of the devil), mermaids, fairies, sprites, dragons, gods, holy or unholy ghosts, etc., seems self-evident. The superstition of antiquity has simply evolved into modern Spiritualism. If it be denied that spirits are supernatural, God also cannot be supernatural though all deists regard him as a spirit. Spirits and Gods all belong to the same family therefore, and Spiritists cannot get around the imputation that spirits are supernatural and therefore the outgrowth of superstition. In other words, they are, like Gods, the creation of man's own fancy.

With witches and wizards recognized as the "media" of the devil, what a glorious witchcraft philosophy (?) might not hav been established! They evidently missed their opportunity. The leaders of Spiritualism did not.

That modern Spiritualism is supernaturalism, which is synonymous with superstition, and therefore a fallacy, can be still further demonstrated by considering the nature of psychic force and its derivation. That psychic force is the essential or producing element of all so-called spirit phenomena is universally admitted, and that it is intimately related to animal magnetism, if it is not identically the same, is also conceded. I say, "if it is not the same," but I hold that psychic force is vital or physical force, exerting and manifesting itself through the brain. It is therefore animal force or physical energy. It is produced through the chemical action not only of our brain, but also of our entire physical being. Mental or psychical force is dependent upon physical vigor, as any mesmerist or medium is aware that the intensity of his powers varies with the condition of health of his or her body, showing that there is an intimate correlation between psychic energy and physical force, the former depending upon the latter, and the physical being therefore superior to the psychical—though not in the estimation of Spiritualists. With these premises established, I ask: If it could be proved to the satisfaction of everyone that spirits did not exist, would mesmerists or media not hav precisely the same powers to produce the visions, illusions, and rappings which are attributed to spirits? These mesmeric powers or psychic forces of our physical being are derived and evolved from the lowest orders of sentient beings, and can therefore not be essentially different in their nature from those forces which animate and govern the psychic life of every animal organism from man down. The physical nature of psychic force, and its derivation from the lowest forms of sentient life, being shown, the fallacy of endowing it with immortality, or of ascribing its manifestations to spirit influence, is therefore apparent. Spirits are as innocent in causing these phenomena, as gods are innocent of causing the world (with all its imperfections). Nature is all-sufficient in producing all we behold, without either the assistance of gods, spirits, or devils.

All conscious beings embody animal magnetism of essentially the same nature as man's, and must therefore possess mesmeric powers to a certain degree, though only in an incipient form, and unrealizable by them. For this reason we are warranted in assuming that mind-transference and cerebral impressions mesmerically conveyed must pass between them, and, on account of having less intelligible means of communication than man, perhaps in a proportionately more pronounced degree. With these premises established it becomes apparent that, considering the essential similarity between the psychic forces of the lower orders and those of man, all must enjoy the same equality (proportionately) in regard to their spiritual life or influences, if they exist. In other words, the psychic phenomena of the brute creation must be as attributable to spirit agency as those of our race. But we "lords of creation" do not consider that a rattlesnake even has as much egotism (proportionately) as man; that he regards our race with the same venomous hatred that we feel for his race, and that if he could reason, he would scorn the idea of us being endowed with immortality, and his race being deprived of it. If he furthermore would resolve his psychic phenomena into the science of a spirit-philosophy he would hav the same grounds for ascribing these phenomena to rattlesnake spirits as we hav for attributing ours to human spirits, psychic force being essentially the same throughout nature, the only difference existing in the degree of development.

"Consistency, thou art a jewel!" Will our Spiritualistic friends please make a note of this?

It is indeed held by many Spiritualists that all sentient beings are endowed with immortality, this doctrin being advocated for consistency's sake, they knowing that the same principle of psychic force pervades the entire animate creation and the same attendant phenomena must therefore be experienced in a corresponding degree in every animate being possessing superior psychic power over others of its kind, and if this psychic force, unwarrantably called "soul-principle," is immortal in one it must be in all.

It is an entirely unsupported assumption therefore to attribute to spirit agency what those gifted with exceptional mesmeric powers can produce themselvs. As for the furniture-moving manifestations, I will forfeit $100 if the phenomena can be produced in my presence and that of several others, we complying with every condition. Any ponderable, inanimate object will be accepted to operate on, from a broomstick to a piano. While I hav no doubt that such movements hav often been seen, I claim they were only illusory, i.e., through mesmeric but not spirit influence, for no one with a grain of sense can believe that a piano could actually leap five or six feet into the air without breaking through the floor in its descent. And to think that furniture or other musical instruments could fly through a room with many people in it, and not injure some one, is equally absurd. Only those who were under the influence, affording the necessary "favorable conditions," saw the articles move, others did not, showing beyond all reasonable doubt that the movements were the result of hallucination. In cases where these alleged spirit manifestations were seen by all present, they were simply all mesmerized.

These very phenomena that are considered such irrefragable evidence of spirit existence, are performed by mesmerists the world over, who do not claim that they are performed through spirit agency, their modus operandi not being calculated to deceive. But the mystifying maneuvers of the so-called medium carry with them such convincing proof with the over-credulous, who do not reason beyond appearances, that they cannot understand how anyone can fail to be convinced by them. They never reflect that even if spirits did exist, it is not at all likely they would cut up such capers as they are accused of. A decent spirit would not dream of making furniture fly around the room, but would know how to behave himself. None but escaped spirit lunatics would be guilty of such doings, and how comforting to reflect that asylums are built so insecurely in spirit land, and that respectable spirits like "We, Us & Co.," for instance, hav to dodge around every corner in constant fear and apprehension of getting our spirit heads smashed. And how humiliating to think that our fathers and mothers and other relativs would make such fools of themselvs as to make the furniture fly around the rooms, or to scare people out of their wits. If anyone had but intimated to a Spiritualist that his parents could hav been guilty of such folly while in the flesh, he would hav resented it with a knock-down, and to think therefore that they would do as spirits what they would hav been ashamed of doing in the flesh is preposterous. Is such belief worthy of intellectual beings?

If furniture heaving or smashing, table-rapping, and all such tomfoolery are samples of "spirit progress" and of the way they spend their time in eternity, I want none of it, and beg to be excused. Immortality indeed must be very desirable with lunatics as companions. But it may be said in extenuation that "the poor critters must hav something to do to pass away their time." Very well, but after they hav smashed all the furniture what will they do then? Glorious prospect that, indeed!

But I am anxious to test the correctness of my theory that the phenomena alluded to are mere hallucinations produced by mesmeric force (where genuin), and therefore not attributable to spirits, in furtherance whereof I shall, on publication of acceptance of my challenge in THE TRUTH SEEKER by any medium in fair standing, forward draft for the amount stated, to its office, to be held subject to the above conditions. Let all truth-loving Spiritualists —and I believe the majority of Spiritualists desire to know the truth; if they err, it is because they reason from false premises—bring this challenge to the notice of every medium in their respectiv localities, as an ignoring of it would be prima facie evidence of the fallacy of the doctrins, and fraudulency of the claims, of Spiritualism. H. WETTSTEIN.

Marengo, Ill., May 16, 1890.

Another Truth Seeker in Search of Spirits.

In the wide and unexplored domain of metaphysical science there is room for honest "mediumship," whether we liv again or not. The telegraph operator cannot tell from whom or where the message comes. And an honest "sensitiv" or medium can no more tell from what source they receive intelligence. Possibly from minds in the body, possibly from an infinit diary kept by nature, where, like the geological records, or a self-registering phonograph, is stored up the life experience of every mortal.

A few days ago a Mrs. Knight, a sister of Mott, the hero of many exposures, visited Leavenworth. Thirsting for light and knowledge, I sought her door. I was ushered into a small room and seated at a table covered with a heavy spread which reached nearly to the floor on my side, but dropped but a few inches on the other. As an appetizing prelude to the feast about to be served, the medium suddenly assumed a prophetic manner, and informed me that I did something in 1881 that proved disastrous in some way—either moved or journeyed a long distance, or took a partner or made some change in business. I replied that her remarks did not fit my case. Then she gazed again and said it was her mistake—it was 1880. Again I assured her that none of those things happened to me in 1880, except that I moved a short distance greatly to my benefit. "Yes," said she, "that is it—you feared at one time it might prove a bad move, but it turned out all right in the end," and giving me no chance to reply, she handed me some some strips of note-paper one inch wide by five long, and directed me to write some questions for my spirit friends to answer, addressing them by name, and fold and mix the notes. Taking up my double slates with a look of disapproval, she remarked that it took much longer to magnetize double slates than a single one. I spoke about tying, but getting no response and fearful of driving the spirits away, I picked up one of the folded bits and dropped it in the middle of one of the slates which she held in waiting. Moving it to the corner of the slate, she shut and placed them under the table, against the top, and asked me to assist in holding them. This I did with both hands. The slates were jerked and shoved round, which she explained by saying they were being magnetized, but as I felt, or thought I felt, the slates slightly open, I naturally concluded I could guess the real purpose, and also why the note was moved to the corner of the slate. I was convinced that the note was then in her lap. A moment later she changed the drift of her constant talk to the beautiful sunshine out of doors, to a passing train, etc., but instead of looking out of the window, as desired, I only appeared to do so, while I watched the madam out of the corner of my eye, and saw her gaze down into her lap.

The next thing was a suggestion that my note had been sufficiently magnetized, and if I would loosen my grip she would take it from the slates and place it on the table. Accordingly she thrust her hand between the slates (just as though she did not hav the note in her hand already) and placed it on the table to my right, and told me to put my hand on it. This maneuver got my right hand from under the table, but as she soon found that my left hand was in her way she placed her left hand on my right hand and directed me to put my left hand on hers.

Now, with both of my hands disposed of, what was to hinder her from writing the message? She had the slates all to herself. Recollect that no pencil had been put between them. She said the spirits would furnish their own pencil. I will here note that her host had directed me to bring soft slates. Why soft? Inferentially because the fingernail, or a piece of horn, and many other substances will make a white mark on a soft slate, and at the same time make no noise. In about ten minutes the madam, having finished her writing, as I believe, asked me to relieve her in holding the slates. I obeyed. Then she scolded the spirits and told them to write at once if they were going to, as we were tired of waiting.

Presently a scratching commenced, a very poor imitation of writing on a slate with a pencil, and she bade me listen, as a spirit was answering my note. This ruse to make me believe that the writing was then being done while I was holding the slates and the medium not touching them, was very cute. Finally the scribbling ceased, and she reached under and drew forth the slates, opened them, and exhibited the writing with an air of triumph. The same program was gone through with in the case of each note.

The first note chanced to be one addressed to John Blank asking him if he gave his body to the medical college. The reply began: "I did." Then followed the usual stereotyped phraseology about being happy and the glorious realities of the spirit world, quite foreign to the man, and signed, "John." The question was intended for a trap and the madam caught herself in it, as I expected she would. The correct reply would hav been, "I did not."

The second note was addressed to my father asking him what year the Ossawattomie convention was held. The reply said: "I cannot answer your question now. I will hav to go back and count up." Then the customary platitudes, closing, "Your father, ———." As he was a graduate, and a historian with a wonderful memory for dates, and as his attendance upon that convention cost him his life, it is not at all likely that he would hav to "go back and count up" to giv me the year. The initial prefixed to his name resembled one letter quite as much as another. I asked her what it was. She studied some time, gave it up, and then asked me what his name was. I told her it was Alexander. "Why, of course it is an A," said she, touching it with her fingernail, as if completing the letter. However, that was not his name. She had put her foot into it again, as usual.

The third note was to my mother asking her the year of her death. The medium, evidently regretting her bad break in the previous answer, and becoming disgusted with chronological test questions, anyway, wisely concluded to "pass" on this interrogatory. Another spirit answered the note and informed me that my mother was not present, but sought to console me for the disappointment by telling me that I was very positiv—that I brought a good influence, etc. An unsolicited message was received from a Cousin James I never had, and one from a Mr. Eaton who formerly lived in this city, and whom the medium very naturally supposed I knew. He was made to address me in a familiar way, though we had never so much as heard of each other.

The writing of the alleged spirits was so scratchy and mixed up, lines sometimes running into each other, often an inch apart at one end and joined together at the other, that I could not make out half the words, but I noticed that the medium had no difficulty in translating it. The slips of paper were cut small, I suppose, so as to be easily manipulated and to compel brief questions, quickly read and answered.

A gentleman here is the possessor of a letter written and mailed to him by this medium prior to her visit to our city. He also possesses one of her spirit messages. The handwriting is the same, particularly noticeable in the capitals. In both occur the word "happy," peculiarly written, and as much alike as a pair of twins.

For over ten years there hav been standing rewards offered by doubters in various parts of the country—sums ranging from $100 to $1,000—for so much as a line of spirit writing, under conditions absolutely precluding the possibility of fraud. And it is an ominous and suggestiv fact that not one of these rewards has ever been contested for.

The exposure of Dr. Bouton, the great writing medium of the West, should hav served to put Spiritualists on their guard against fraud and humbug. But the lesson appears to hav been quickly forgotten. It is gratifying to know, however, that there are a few of that faith, like Vincent and Francis, willing to apply the pruning knife, the scalpel, or dynamite if need be, in ridding their cause of the cancerous frauds that are bringing disrepute upon it. There are too many Spiritualists who, while condemning church people for their blind credulity in swallowing fish and ghost stories, are themselvs eager to shut their eyes, open their mouths and swallow everything put in by mediumistic jugglers.

It will be recollected that Mott's friends used to draw the mantle of charity over his frauds by explaining that once in a while, when, from intoxication, exhaustion, or other causes, he failed to get spirit cooperation, the unreasonable demands of his patrons impelled him to provide bogus demonstrations. Perhaps the $60,000 fortune which he amassed at the business would throw some light on his motivs.

But after all, why should we require or expect mediums to be honest while the half of mankind get their living by dishonesty and the other half would if they could?

My purpose in penning this article is not to injure the medium referred to, but rather to recommend her as a practitioner eminent in her profession, and to characterize her entertainments as brilliant exhibitions of high art. How she can afford so rich a treat for the paltry sum of $1 is the greatest mystery of all. A ten-word message from California costs $1; but with unexampled generosity she will giv you a hundred words all the way from kingdom come for the same money. Having bought a dollar's worth of her messages and given them a thorough trial according to directions, I take great pleasure in recommending them to suffering humanity.

That I am not a believer in ghosts is no fault of mine, for Barkis is more than willin', and always has been. Most gladly would I giv $500 for a genuin message from my father and mother.

Madam Knight evidently did her level best to call up my dead relativs. And I fully acquit her of blame for their non-appearance. That some of my departed friends hav for fifteen years failed to redeem their dying promises to communicate with me is rather discouraging, but I shall never fully abandon hope in continuous existence. S. R. SHEPHERD.

Leavenworth, Kan.

THE doctors, or sages, who govern both mind and body, are generally profoundly ignorant, foolishly prejudiced, or at war with common sense. It is usually among obscure men, that thinkers are found animated with a superior instinct, who invent admirable things on which the learned afterward reason.—Voltaire.

Communications.

Christ and Antichrist.

The Christian dictionaries tell us that the word Christ means anointed, but several years ago, in reasoning upon the use of the word in theology, and its analogies, I arrived at the conclusion that the word Christ is synonymous with our English word light. I hav just found in the "History of Christianity," by Edward Gibbon, the confirmation and proof of this opinion. The word Christ means physically the light of the sun, the light of a fire, an electric light, etc.; spiritually it means light of the mind, thought, reason, wisdom, intelligence, etc. Then the real meaning of the word Christian is, a disciple of reason, a devotee of science. I am a Christian according to the real signification of the term.

The Virgin Mary, Cybele, Isis, etc., were allegories of nature or symbolical personifications of nature, and their sons, Christ, Osiris, Horus, Christna, Buddha, etc., were allegories of light, reason, and science. These stories are true in their philosophical sense, for reason and science hav been, figurativly speaking, crucified by superstition in all nations of the earth. But science will not stay down; it always comes up again—this is the symbolized resurrection. The Greek word logos used by Plato to designate the second person in the trinity, which was translated into son, word, etc., meant in Greece reason, intelligence; in Palestine it meant wisdom. Then what is Antichrist, the great enemy and antagonist of reason and science? I answer, superstition, and the Christian church is the kingdom of Antichrist. The Christian church has fulfilled the prophecies of Antichrist to the very letter, and the people who call themselvs Christians ought to be called Antichristians. In proof of this assertion I will quote from the footnote on page 400 of Gibbon's "History:"

> When the church of Rome became supreme, and the Nicene creed—the creed of Athanasius—ruled the European world; when humanity was enchained by superstition and fanaticism—those twin jailors of the mind—freedom was expelled, reason was dethroned, and the light of intellect was quenched in the Cimmerian gloom of faith. The dark centuries of Catholicism succeeded the learning and civilization developed under the freedom and toleration of ancient paganism.
>
> Superstition governed the human intellect. The holy Inquisition was established. The stake claimed the noblest and bravest of its victims, and the victory of the cross was illumined by the light of burning fagots and the groans of dying heretics. It was then that Protestantism was born, and with it returned freedom and knowledge to bless and elevate humanity.

But Antichrist had interpolated and corrupted the scriptures which fell as a legacy to the Protestant sects. From half to two-thirds of the New Testament consists of interpolations put in there by Antichrist, which interpolated passages are in conflict with the original text, which has created much confusion and division in the Protestant ranks. The interpolations of Antichrist are so intermixed with the genuin article that the Protestant Christians cannot pull up the tares without pulling up the wheat with them. After Constantine embraced the Christian religion the Roman legions placed upon their standards a monogram, which consisted of the letter P with an X or cross mark placed upon it. The P was the initial of philosophy or science, and the cross mark was a sign of erasure or cancellation. This was the origin of the Catholic cross, which Antichrist adopted as his emblem.

P. F. SHUMAKER.

Flat Creek, La., May 4, 1890.

Eminent Women.

MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT GODWIN.

This truly brave and radical thinker was born in 1759, and in advanced opinions she was so far ahead of the majority of her sex that the rank and file of them hav not yet reached her plane of thought, and will not do so for many generations yet to come.

Mary was a studious girl and an able thinker. She attended only the common schools till the age of sixteen, when Rev. Mr. Clare, an eccentric old preacher, became deeply interested in the beautiful, talented girl, and gave her access to his rare library, and helped her in her search for knowledge. At his home she became acquainted with Frances Blood, a young girl two years her senior in age and much better educated than Mary. The friendship of Clare and Frances gave a new impetus to Mary's endeavors to obtain as thorough an education as her means would allow of, and henceforth "her mind took a higher, wider intellectual range." To earn money to carry out her plans she lived as waiting maid with Mrs. Dawson, till the death of her mother in 1780 called her home.

Her younger sister Eliza married a Mr. Bishop, who treated her so cruelly she was forced to leave him, and so Mary started a day-school, assisted by Fannie Blood, as a means of livelihood for herself and her sisters, Eliza and Everina.

While teaching she became acquainted with the Rev. Richard Price, a Liberal and an enthusiastic revolutionist, and Mary's crude ideas on civil and religious subjects were ripened, and soon bore fruit.

In 1785 Frances Blood died, and she being a Protestant the authorities at Lisbon refused her burial in consecrated ground, and Mary now first openly defied the law by helping to "steal her friend a grave." She left her school in charge of her sisters, to attend the deathbed of Frances (who had married and left the school); and the sisters let the business get broken up, and yet with these two depending on her for support she still found a way to help Mr. and Mrs. Blood, the parents of Frances, who were in extreme poverty. "Eager to repay the kindness she had received from their daughter," Mary was spurred on to write a pamphlet of one hundred and sixty pages, entitled, "Thoughts on the Education of Daughters," for which she received ten guineas from her London publisher, Mr. Johnson. She gave this money to Mr. and Mrs. Blood to take them to Dublin, their old home. "Dearer than the money, however, were the words of praise and encouragement which Mr. Johnson saw fit to bestow upon her talents in giving it." For three years she now wrote almost exclusivly for Mr. Johnson—translating, compiling, and condensing. She however wrote, during this time, her first story, "a fiction." Her father became involved in financial difficulties, and she had to help to care for the younger members of his family, and to do this required rigid economy. She procured situations as governesses for the two sisters she had educated, procured a land grant for her brother Charles and a commission for James, and even provided for and took under her protection a little orphan girl. Can we wonder that she found other women tame and comparativly useless when she was doing all this out of her own earnings and through her own influence and by her own energy?

In 1790 she wrote "The Vindication of the Rights of Man," which though violent in tone and temper was warmly welcomed and cordially received by the lovers of liberty in England and on the continent. This work introduced her to fame, and to the notice of her future husband, Mr. Godwin. They met at a dinner party and were mutually displeased. His quiet temper rebelled at her occasional harshness and violence of expression, while she was annoyed at his philosophical calmness where she saw so much needing to be done, and done by enthusiastic, earnest, hot, and heavy words.

The public were condemnatory of a woman who wrote on politics, and this censure turned her attention to woman's rights. "She began to question the reasons given to account for woman's subordinate position." The result was the publication in 1792 of her "Vindication of the Rights of Woman," a "passionate defense of the true dignity, and an eloquent plea for the better education of woman, a work coming directly from her heart, and sanctioned by the deliberate reasoning of her brain." She said: "If woman be not prepared by education to become the companion of man, she will stop the progress of knowledge; for truth must be common to all, or it will be inefficacious with respect to its influence on general practice. If children are to be educated to understand the true principles of patriotism, their mother must be a patriot, and the love of mankind, from which an orderly train of virtues spring, can only be produced by considering the moral and civil interests of mankind, but the education and situation of woman at present shuts her out from such investigations."

Mary wrote her "Vindication of the Rights of Woman" in six weeks. She was severe in her contemptuous estimate of her own sex, attacking them with sarcasm and scorn for trying to be clinging vines and petted dolls, instead of true companions and wise mothers, who would hold an equal influence with man, through equal excellence of morals and intellectual attainments. She wrote scathing denunciations upon affectation and mock modesty, and dealt freely with topics which were then considered indelicate for women to write or talk about. Men sneered and ridiculed, but could not help being convinced she was right. Women seemed shocked and shamed, and yet secretly read her book; and all began to act upon its suggestions.

We are always too apt to martyrize the truth-teller, while we insensibly imbibe the truths themselvs. Seeing "the horrors of modern matrimony," and finding them verified in the brutality of the husband of her sister Eliza, and the obstinate, domineering conduct of her father, whose domestic tyranny made an abject slave of his wife, Mary was disgusted at marriage laws which gave such absolute power into the hands of the husband. She believed love should be the only bond, and so became the wife of Gilbert Imlay in all but the sanction of law. For a year or two she was in a paradise, and deemed her views on marriage well lived out and proved in her own experience. "She would hav laughed to scorn any croaker who prophesied an estrangement between herself and the father of her child—their child! Could even heaven prevail against a union cemented by so strong and true a love?" But Imlay tired of the romance, and felt a need of a change of loves, and in 1795 left her in Paris, while he made an excuse to go to England. Not dreaming of his desire to leave her, she followed him, and then he threw off all disguise and let her see that his love was dead. In her despair she twice attempted suicide, which so alarmed Imlay that he pretended a return of his affection—but sent her on some business to Sweden and Norway. She was accompanied by her little girl, Frances, and the child's nurse.

It was while thus absent she wrote her "Letters from Norway, Sweden, and Denmark," of which her husband, Godwin, says: "No other book of travel so irresistibly seizes on the heart. It speaks of her sorrows in a way that fills us with melancholy and dissolves us in tenderness, at the same time that her genius commands admiration, and we are constrained to love the writer." The greater number of these letters are addressed to Imlay, and we can but wonder of what sort of stuff the man's heart was made that he could resist those eloquent appeals to all that was best of him, or refrain from loving so true and tender a soul.

After four months' absence she returned and found Imlay had gone to America with a newer love! She now gave up to the inevitable, and turned her attention to literary pursuits, and the care and education of her little girl. She was thrown again in the society of Wm. Godwin. The interest he felt in her misfortunes, the admiration excited in him by her genius, and the radical opinions which they held in common, drew them together, and their friendship soon ripened into love. Time and trouble had softened her manners into a more womanly gentleness, and though nearly thirty-eight years of age, she retained much of her charming beauty and sweetness of expression.

Notwithstanding her experience with Imlay, she still clung to her love of liberty, and her determination to practice her principles, and so she and Godwin lived together without marriage till they wished to secure the legal rights of their child, then they were privately married (in 1797). Their happiness was unclouded and unbounded. Their child was born Aug. 30, 1797, and the September following the mother died, leaving to Mr. Godwin this child (Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin), who afterward became the wife of Shelley.

Of the personal character of the Mary of our sketch her husband speaks in the highest terms. "Never did there exist a woman," he says of her, "who might, with less fear, expose her actions, and call upon the universe to judge them. . . . Lovely in her person, she was, in the best and most engaging sense, feminin in her manners. . . . The strength of Mary's mind lay in her intuition. In a robust and unwavering judgment of this sort, there is a kind of witchcraft. When it decides justly it produces a responsiv vibration in every ingenuous mind."

Mary was a Deist, and an unbeliever in a Calvinistic hell. She could not believe "an all-wise and powerful being, as good as he is great, should create a being, foreseeing that, after fifty or sixty years of feverish existence, he would be plunged into never ending woe."

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

A Suppressed Liberal Club Critic.

I arose to speak at a meeting of the Manhattan "Liberal" Club Friday evening, May 23d, but was denied the privilege on the objection of Mrs. Leonard, who had just delivered one of her characteristic speeches, and was evidently afraid that I would criticise her remarks. I do not wish to criticise them now, except to state that they might amuse the sensual and interest such reformers as believe that a pool of filthy water may be purified by "stirring it up." The subject under consideration was "Hereditary Influences." I am a Western man, and I proposed to discuss this topic from a Western standpoint—a position not taken by any speaker of the evening. I still intend to "hav my say" on this subject, provided I can obtain the privilege through a Liberal newspaper. I deem those hereditary influences "the best" which are not transmitted. The world is now overcrowded, and it cannot sustain a much larger population than the present one under the existing social conditions which render life tolerable to the wealthy and make it miserable for the masses.

Some day Socialism will prevail. Then millions of that class that is now consigned to the grave prematurely through the wrongs of competition will liv happily and propagate their species and within two centuries life will again be at a maximum. It seems to me that it is better under these conditions to confine our attention to promoting the interests of the living than to bring new beings on the scene of life to suffer from the injustice of the world and perish, perhaps in the approaching conflict. We hav capital and oppression on one hand and slavery and ignorance on the other. This is the old story and it will probably be settled in the old way. A very important hereditary condition is the satisfactory union of the parents, and this is more dependent on conjugal love than philoprogenitivness. I define conjugal love as the pure and wholly platonic affection that may exist between one "soul" and its only mate. I consider the mutual platonic love of one man and one woman the gem of life if it be permanent, but think that love can only be permanent when the "spirits" are in perfect harmony with each other. Then they may liv for time, love for eternity, and progress forever in perfect freedom and choice of will with but one heart, one mind, one "soul" between them, because they are affinities. This sentiment exists in various degrees in individuals and therefore some love their companions with an intensity approaching insanity and a devotion exceeding idolatry and others who are just as truly mated care nothing for each other. Some do not wish to be mated, others are not mated because they cannot find their affinities, and many are mismated because they hav tried to find their affinities and mistaken their own characters or those of others. The masses are unmated because they hav no affinities. These despise platonic affection. They soon grow weary of their companions and the world in general, and it simply is a question of time when they would become tired of anyone else. Their bond of union is simply an instinct that has nothing in common with true love save a few misleading appearances and a natural aversion. I say in connection with this, Confound an animal that has four feet and yet insists on walking uprightly. for all the world like a man. My apologies to Dr. Weeks and the lecturer, who reminded me very forcibly of two Thomas cats that had chanced to meet on the same fence.

But I digress. Sometimes friendship is bond of a satisfactory union. Friendship, like love, is a platonic affection, but it is not exclusiv like the latter, and it is founded on only a partial affinity. Lastly, all cannot be suited, as there is an unfortunate difference in the male and female characters, and men who can love are as rare as women that reason. I do not know why this should be so, but I think I do know that it is simply damnable to hold those in bondage who wish to separate, or to compel any person to commit a crime or sacrifice a lifetime in expiating a single error of the judgment. Therefore I advocate the abolishment of all laws restricting divorce. The hearts that are faithful do not need them; those that are inconstant are made worse by them, and as factors in the promotion of morality they do not amount, in my judgment, to a condemnation from the deity. Now, if all persons contemplating marriage would make courtship a season of mutual investigation—a court of inquiry established by mutual consent to determin their fitness for each other, study phrenology and physiology, and remember, as a generalization, that as like causes produce like effects, a semblance of countenances implies a similar character; and remember, as a fact, that the New Yorker, as an animal, is a little lower than the wanderoo monkey, and a blamed sight lower than "the angels"—then the end desired would be more often accomplished. JULIAN MASCELLAS.

Professor Huxley to Professor Skilton on "Metagnosticism."

From the Popular Science Monthly.

I hav read the papers which accompanied your letter of the 25th of November with much attention; but, I regret to say, with the result that I can discover no good ground for the change of nomenclature which you propose. Permit me to trouble you with my reasons for that conclusion:

The term "Agnostic" was not suggested by the passage in the "Acts of the Apostles" in which Paul speaks of an inscription to the "Unknown God." It is obvious that the author of that inscription was a Theist—I may say an anxious Theist—who desired not to offend any God, not known to him, by ignoring the existence of such a deity. The person who erected the altar was, therefore, in the same position as those philosophers who, in modern times, hav brought about the apotheosis of ignorance under the name of the "Absolute" or its equivalents.

"Agnostic" came into my mind as a fit antithesis to "Gnostic—" the "Gnostics" being those ancient heretics who professed to know most about those very things of which I am quite sure I know nothing.

"Agnostic," therefore, as the name of a philosophical system is senseless; its import lies in being a confession of ignorance—a warning set up against philosophical and theological phantoms—which was never more needed than at the present time, when the ghost of the "Absolute" slain by my masters Hume and Kant and Hamilton is making its appearance in broad daylight.

Your definition of "metagnosticism" says that "it relates to beyond knowledge." That is exactly what all the "absolute" philosophers profess the "Absolute" does; and it is precisely that profession which I consider to be futil and mischievous. To my mind science is exact and organized knowledge—neither more nor less. And the knowledge which goes "beyond knowledge" is something which my cognitiv faculties do not enable me to apprehend.

The term "Evolution Philosophy" which you employ seems to hav different meanings for different people.

For me, evolution is a name for a certain process, the occurrence of which in various groups of things is as nearly demonstrated as any historical event can be. And this, I think, constitutes a fair ground for the expectation that the whole cosmic process will turn out to be one of evolution. The business of philosophy, as I understand it, is, among other things, to arrive at a scientific theory of evolution; but these other things are quite as important as evolution. Philosophy, in fact, should embrace the whole of which the theory of evolution is a part.

Three or four generations of patient workers, cautiously feeling their way by the well-known methods of true science, may bring our posterity within sight of such a philosophy. For the present, while welcoming all attempts to foreshadow it, with due gratitude to their authors, and holding fast by that which is good in them, it is very necessary that we shou'd not confound such scaffoldings with the edifice, the foundations of which are not yet complete.

I am, dear sir, Yours very faithfully,

T. H. HUXLEY.

Eastbourne, Eng., Dec. 10. 1889

Puritan Laws.

From the Salem, Mass., Register.

In the town of South Reading, now Wakefield, Mass., the following records may be found: 1649. "Three married women fined six shillings each for scolding." It is not stated who the victims of the scolding were, but as it is said they were "married women" it would not be strange if their husbands should hav come in for a pretty liberal share, and possibly they richly deserved it.

1662. This year the town ordered, by vote, "That no man, maid, nor boy, nor gall, shall sit in the south alley and east alley of ye meeting-house upon penalty of twelve pence for each offense." It was also voted "That every dog that comes to the meeting on the Lord's day, or lecture day, except it be their dogs that pays for a dog-whipper, the owners of those dogs shall pay sixpence for every time that they come to the meeting that doth not pay the dog-whipper." It does not appear what the duties of these officials were.

In 1667 it was ordered "That every dog that comes into the meeting-house in time of service shall pay sixpence every time he comes." It will be seen that the only material difference between this and the preceding vote is that in the former the owner of the dog was required to pay the price, while in the latter the guilty dog was to pay his own fine.

One Philip Ratcliffe, of Salem, Mass., was sentenced to be whipped, hav his ears cropped, to pay a fine of forty shillings, and be banished from the town for "uttering malicious and scandalous speeches against the government and the church." If this should be done in like cases at this day, it would, in some places, diminish the population and increase the revenue.

In 1666 the Essex county court, in Massachusetts, ordered that "a cage shall be erected in Salem in which to display wrong-doers." Dec. 4, 1638, "A resident of Salem was ordered to sit in the stocks on lecture day, for traveling on the Sabbath." If such a penalty should be enforced in our day, stock builders would find their business profitable.

One Mary Oliver must hav been quite a troublesome character in Salem. In 1642 she was presented for neglect of public worship. Two years later she was sentenced to be publicly whipped for "reproaching the magistrates," and two years thereafter she had a cleft stick put on her tongue for half an hour for "slandering the elders." At last she was banished from the town. How nice it must hav been to send these wayward ones to other towns—so full of neighborly kindness.

If we go back to an earlier day, we shall find that old bachelors were not regarded with much favor, as the following order may indicate: "Henceforth no single person over thirty years of age shall be suffered to liv of himself, or in any family but as the selectmen of the town shall approve of." Again, "No youth under twenty-one shall take any tobacco, until he has brought a certificate under the hand of some one who are approved for knowledge and skill in physic that it is useful for him and also that he hath received a license from the court for the same."

One of the most marvelous orders ever issued was the following: "That any who are elected to the office of governor and would not stand to the election, nor hold and execute the office for one year, should be amerced in £20 sterling." In our day if all who hav a hankering for such an office or who possess a willing spirit for the same should be so fined, the revenue therefrom would prove a valuable addition to a state's income.

Scolds were sometimes gagged and made to stand a certain time at their doors to be seen by those passing. They were also punished by ducking them in running water until they should promis not again to offend in like manner.

One Josias Plaistow, for stealing four bushels of corn from the Indians, was ordered to return eight bushels, pay a fine of £5, and ever after to be called Josias and not Mr. Plaistow, as formerly.

Edward Palmer for his extortion in taking £2 18s. 4d. for the woodwork of Boston stocks, was fined £5 and ordered to sit in the stocks one hour.

In olden times it was the custom to hav a public lecture in the middle of the week and this was called "lecture day." It was at this meeting that punishment was inflicted on persons convicted of wrong against society. We find the following cases named in the Rev. Dr. Walker's history of the first church in Hartford: March 5, 1644. "Susan Coles for her rebellious carriedge toward her mistress is to be sent to the house of correction and be keept to hard work labor and course dyet, to be brought forth the next lecture day to be publiquely corrected weekly until order be given to the contrary."

"Walter Gray, for his misdemeanor in laboring to inveagle the affections of Mr. Hoocker's mayden is to be publiquely corrected next lecture day."

Oct. 17, 1648. "The court adjudgeth Peter Bussaker for his filthy and prophane expressions (viz.: 'That he hoped to meet some of the members of the church in hell, ere long, and he did not question but he should') to be committed to prison, there to be kept in safe custody til the sermon and then to stand the time thereof in the pillory, and after the sermon to be severely whipt."

More Government Roguery.

From the Melbourne Liberator.

The following appeared in the Age on Saturday:

An important seizure of blasphemous literature was made by the customs authorities yesterday in the shape of a Christmas number of a Freethought publication. The contents of this number were exceedingly coarse and ribald, and very little consideration was required, after a glance at them, to cause them to be pronounced unfit for circulation. The parcel, which came by mail from Sydney, was, therefore, taken possession of by the customs officers and burnt.

Put into plain English, this report means that Patterson, the ex-cattle duffer, stole a parcel of Mr. Foote's Freethinkers (Christmas number) sent to Miss Wilson—that he stole them and burnt them to bribe pious voters at the next election. The Age reports as if they had seen them, and thus takes its share in the guilt of the transaction.

The Freethinker is good enough to circulate in England; why not here? Are the government officials and the Age proprietor afraid of being contaminated? Is it possible they can be worse than they are?

Had the parcel contained family Bibles, with pictures of Adam and Eve naked, Joseph flying from Mrs. Potiphar, Lot with his daughters, David admiring Bathsheba bathing, naked Isaiah tramping round Jerusalem, Gabriel telling Mary how Jesus was to be begotten, etc., etc., the pious scamps who stole the Freethinkers and the Age which justifies the theft would hav hailed such holy plates as a means of gratifying their prurient curiosity. And if the Freethinkers really had been what they represent, they would hav kept them for their use instead of burning them.

In spite of this new outrage, there are fools about who think the Freethought battle is fought and the victory won. They are too blind to understand that the government of Victoria are just waiting for an opportunity to snuff out all Freethought propagandism that is worth the name. Ay, and worse! Even in the face of the fact that government never losses an opportunity to injure us, there are traitors in our own camp who are doing all in their power to destroy the only institution in the colony that acts as a check upon priestly and political trickery. It behooves honest and real Freethinkers to band together in solid phalanx; or in a short time the government will swoop down upon us again, and this time crush us out of existence. There is one man, at any rate, who will resist and expose them to the end, and dare their thunders until he is conquered, knowing that Australia must reap the benefit of his work and fighting. JOS. SYMES.

Lectures and Meetings.

MR. RICHARD HODGSON, the secretary for the United States of the English Society for Psychical Research. will lecture on this subject (the work of the society here) for the Liberal Club, on Friday evening, May 30th. He is an entertaining talker and full of ghost stories.

FOUR of the biggest audiences ever assembled at Fourth Street Theater, greeted Mrs. Freeman Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday nights, and the greatest attention was paid to her eloquent, and sometimes cutting remarks. She is a brilliant talker, a great reasoner, and withal as fascinating a speaker as ever appeared before our people. The interest she excited will continue to grow, and it is expected she will be called here again. While many could not agree with her arguments they admired the brave little woman who dared to advocate the principles of the American Secular Union.—Neillsville, Wis., Republican and Press.

Instructiv and Interesting Works.

From the Mellette, S. D., Tribune.

We are indebted to the Truth Seeker Publishing Company, of 28 Lafayette place, New York, for a copy of a "Freethought Symposium," containing articles from leading writers in the Freethought ranks, which is decidedly interesting and instructiv. Our thanks are also due the same company for a copy of William Hart's interesting work, "The Candle from under the Bushel; or, Thirteen Hundred and Six Questions to the Clergy."

Communications.

From Mr. Harman's Original Counsel.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your issue of May 3d, is a letter from Ed. W. Chamberlain in reference to the late trial and conviction of Moses Harman, of Valley Falls, Kan., in the United States district court for Kansas, upon an indictment charging him with depositing in the mails obscene matter.

In this letter Mr. Chamberlain says in reference to Mr. Clemens and myself: "Their abandonment of Mr. Harman was due to a combination of various influences which it is not necessary to dwell upon, such as local politics, disapproval of certain of Mr. Harman's methods of management, financial and otherwise; conflict of interest between Mr. Harman and the other clients, i.e., E. C. Walker and George Harman, etc. I cannot look upon their abandonment of Mr. Harman as justifiable." In the same number of your paper you say editorially, after quoting from Fair Play and Lucifer: "A comparison of these differing statements with that made by Mr. Chamberlain shows that the blame for not being on hand should fall not upon the 'aristocratic New York lawyer' but upon the Kansas people who were at cross purposes, thus leaving Mr. Harman to conduct entirely his own defense." In view of the reflection upon me contained in the above, pardon me for asking permission through your columns, to set myself right before your readers. I speak for myself alone, but I am sure that Mr. Clemens is as free from blame in the matter as I think I am. As is well known, Mr. Clemens and I were the attorneys of Mr. Harman and his associates at the commencement of the prosecution which ended in Harman's conviction. We had previously defended Walker and Lillian Harman in the case in which they were prosecuted—and persecuted—upon the pretense that they had violated the marriage statute of this state. When Moses Harman, E. C. Walker, and Geo. Harman were indicted for depositing non-mailable, i.e., obscene matter, in the United States mail, we entered a motion to quash the indictment which was sustained. Another indictment was found, however, and another motion to quash (or demurrer) was interposed, and though the grounds of quashal were in my judgment as good in the last case as in the first the demurrer was overruled, and the case remained upon the docket for trial. Meantime the feeling against Harman and his associates which had culminated in the first indictment had greatly abated, insomuch that a petition signed by nearly every citizen of Valley Falls, Harman's home, was presented to the district attorney, asking him not to hav a second indictment returned against Harman and the others. By careful proceedings two continuances were secured, perhaps not with the entire approbation of Moses Harman, but for his best interests, as his counsel supposed and now believe would hav been the case but for the unfortunate subsequent occurrences. With the lapse of time public feeling was steadily softening, and I firmly believe that but for the great blunder which occurred a short time previous to the time of trial, Mr. Harman might hav been honorably and triumphantly acquitted. To those familiar with the history of this case I need scarcely say that I refer to the now famous O'Neil letter. The very morning on which the paper containing that letter reached me, and while sitting in my office scanning its columns, a messenger came rushing in with a note from Mr. Harman stating that he was at the United States marshal's office under arrest upon another charge, and requesting my presence there. This was the first intimation I received that he was to be arrested or, indeed, that any new cause of arrest had occurred. By a mere coincidence Mr. Clemens was in the office at the time. Hastily examining the paper we were not long in discovering the cause. In a brief note to Mr. Harman which we both signed and returned by the messenger we informed him that we could not defend him upon that charge, but advised him to make no admissions, to waive examination and giv bail for his appearance before the grand jury shortly thereafter to convene. Aside from the sympathy implied by personal presence this advice served him as well for that occasion as our presence could hav done, as we each well knew would be the case, as we knew that he would be bound over in any event and that he could giv as much bail as might be required. He was held to bail, which he promptly gave, and a little later called at my office, and being deeply engaged at the time I told him to return at a later hour of the day, as I wanted to talk with him. This he promised to do, and undoubtedly intended to do, but for some reason—lack of time, I believe—he did not get to the office that day. I was anxious to tell him just how I felt over the O'Neil letter, and failing to get an opportunity to talk with him upon the occasion in question, a day or two later I sent him a letter, the substance of which he printed in Lucifer. As it appeared in the paper there were some omissions from the original, but not sufficient to change the sense. As the original is not in existence, I here giv the letter as it appeared in Lucifer:

Both Mr. —— and myself were surprised, mortified, and disgusted beyond measure at the publication in your last Lucifer. . . . No good can come of publishing such matter; nothing but evil can result from bringing to prurient ears and corrupt minds the fact that such horrible practices are indulged in. The best way to get the naturally vile to do such things is to advertise to them the fact that such things are done. Such publications injure all reforms, and cases growing out of such publications are not the ones upon which general principle of constitutional right will ever be defended. They offend and antagonize every instinct and prejudice of decent and civilized man, and furnish the best apology imaginable for such statutes as the Comstock law. Your action in making this publication looks like tempting fate. Yours truly, ——

The blank space after "Mr." at the beginning was left by Mr. Harman in publishing. I had written there the name of Clemens. He also omitted my signature, as will be observed, feeling perhaps that it would not be consistent with my wishes that the author should be known. In this, however, he was mistaken, as I was indifferent regarding the matter. Mr. Harman seemed "nettled" at my letter, and in the same issue which contained it he fired back quite vigorously, as an examination of Lucifer of Feb. 21, 1890, will verify. He sneered, I thought, at the idea of obtaining justice at the hands of the law, saying among other things:

As to any hope of justice through an appeal to "general principle of constitutional right," we hav only to look at the history of our land for the past decade or two, to become convinced that "constitutional right" is simply a word to conjure with—nothing more. As a protection of personal and citizen right it is a howling farce, a delusion and a snare, but as a protection to robbers and wholesale murderers it is a magnificent success.

The same mail which brought me the paper containing the above brought me also a letter from Mr. Harman, as follows:

Valley Falls, Kan., Feb. 22, 1890.

David Overmyer: I take the very first available moment to write you a hasty line in answer to yours of two days ago very briefly, and will say: 1. If anything could make me regret the publication of the O'Neil letter the loss of your friendship and respect would be one of those considerations, but as yet I am not convinced that I did anything wrong or improper all things considered. Not until I received your note by the hand of Dillard did the idea occur to me that you would seriously condemn me for what I had done. But let that pass. 2. Now I ask you in all earnestness, candor, and kindness, to throw up my defense on the case in which you and Clemens are engaged. But for George and Walker I want you to do your best, provided you think you will ever get your pay for so doing. To get them released I think will be easy enough. You can show that George was a minor acting under orders, and in compliance with those orders he was working on a farm at the time of the publication of the indicted articles, and could hav no moral and should hav no legal responsibility in the matter, and for Walker you can show that his absence in Iowa and his emphatic disapproval of my course as expressed in his paper, Fair Play, should exonerate him from all charge of complicity in the matter. Then you can say to the court that by request of the senior defendant you withdraw from the conduct or management of the suit.

Now please do not infer from this that I am dissatisfied with what you hav done and want to employ another lawyer. You hav done your work ably, conscientiously, and well; at present I hav no intention of employing another lawyer.

My reasons are: 1. I think you consider yourself disgraced, in the eyes of that public whose good opinion you wish to secure, by your connection with Lucifer as legal defender. 2. I presume from what you say that there is no hope, but that I will go to prison on this last charge. Such being a foregone conclusion, I wish to save all the money I can to make Lucifer liv and to pay the debts already incurred in these suits.

I inclose a copy of first page of Lucifer from which you will see that I printed part of your letter and commented on it, but I showed the letter to no one, not even my printer. I copied what I wanted and immediately cremated the whole letter. If you care to read what I hav to say in self-defense in this and in last week's paper, also what I may hav to say in subsequent issues, I shall take it as a favor, for I really find it almost impossible to write personal letters of any considerable length. Sorrowfully (that I hav offended a good friend) I remain, Yours sincerely and truly,

M. Harman.

To this letter was appended a postscript in which Mr. Harman stated that he wanted Mr. Clemens and I "to make out your additional charges for work since last agreement," and offering to make provision for payment of same. It will be seen from the foregoing that Mr. Clemens and myself were on February 22d last completely discharged from the defense of Mr. Harman against the charge upon which he was convicted at the April term of the United States court. In response to this letter and to the strictures published in Lucifer upon my former note, I wrote to Mr. Harman a somewhat lengthy letter, the very length of which precludes its reproduction here, covering as it does some twenty-one pages of note paper. In this letter I set forth my reasons for objecting to the O'Neil letter, and also responded to Mr. Harman's proposition that we, Clemens and I, should "throw up" the case. This letter Mr. Harman sent to Mr. Chamberlain, who read it and wrote to Mr. Harman that my views were "all moonshine," but advised Mr. Harman not to publish the letter. I had given Mr. Harman liberty to publish the letter, but expressly informed him that I did not request him to publish it. I did this for the reason that, although I was perfectly willing to hav the letter made public, I did not wish to embarrass Mr. Harman by thrusting upon the public without his full and free consent views emanating from one lately his counsel and sharply antagonistic to his own, so I left the matter entirely to Mr. Harman, with the result above stated. After the letter had been sent to Chamberlain in New York and returned to Mr. Harman, I requested him to return it to me, which he did, and I now hav it before me. In that letter, touching the matter of my relations to Mr. Harman as counsel, I said:

You say in your letter that you suppose that I am ashamed to appear as your counsel, that I consider myself disgraced in the eyes of that public whose good opinion I wish to secure, etc. Not exactly that. Let me think I am right, and I am just as defiant of "that public" as you are. But I do not think you are right in this matter (O'Neil letter), and I consider you so far wrong that I cannot lend my sanction, as a man, to that which, as a lawyer, I can see no defense for. If I thought you was right, though I considered the law completely against you, I would go down to defeat with you willingly. I hav often done so. You certainly know that I am no cringer at the feet of the public. While this is true, I do not consider myself infallible, and, like the framers of the Declaration of Independence, I hav a "decent respect for the opinions of mankind." I am, perhaps, the most tolerant man in Kansas. I hav borne respect to your opinions upon some matters wherein I considered you radically wrong. I hav sympathized with your battle for the oppressed, but I hav not sympathized with your warfare against "legality," simply because I know that civilized man cannot exist without rules of conduct, which is simply another name for laws. These require application to affairs, which is simply another name for jurisprudence. This application must be made through men, selected in some way, which is simply another name for judges and public officers. All this, however, does not imply that the laws should be numerous, unnecessarily harsh or unjust, but just the reverse. The fact that law is fraught, in the very nature of things, with much evil, and that it is also inevitable that we will hav law, should teach us to cease vain efforts to inaugurate a society without law, and to start out with this for our primary postulate, Law is, law has been, law will be, and then direct our efforts toward making the laws as tolerable as possible, to settling upon intelligent, general principles the proper limits and bounds of law.

Now, Mr. Harman, while I had expected to defend you to the end in the first case, yet I am willing, in the same spirit of frankness and unimpassioned candor with which you make it, to accept of your proposition to withdraw entirely from your defense in these cases, although, of course, I will not throw up the defense of George and Walker. I believe I can get the cases dismissed as to them, and will, if I can, do so at an early day. You spoke of making out an additional bill; this I cannot do, as you owe me nothing further. Furthermore, I herewith return your note which I had, as I understood it to cover contemplated future services. You said in your paper that you was not at liberty to giv the name of the author of the letter I wrote you. Allow me to assure you that you are at perfect liberty to do so. You are also at liberty, if you like, to publish this, and yet I do not ask you to do so. Do just as you please.

Thus it will be seen that neither local politics, or the conflicting interests of Mr. Walker and George Harman, upon the one hand, and Moses Harman upon the other, or any trouble about finances, had anything to do with the discharge of Mr. Clemens and myself from further service in Mr. Harman's defense. The whole difficulty arose out of the O'Neil letter and like publications most injudiciously put forth upon the eve of trial. The O'Neil letter revived in the hearts of the people the dying animosity against Mr. Harman, whetted to razor sharpness the keen edge of the district attorney's desire to prosecute, and disgusted, horrified, and angered the court, while it sickened, mortified, and discouraged Mr. Clemens, myself, and nearly every other friend of free press and free discussion. I felt, as I afterward stated to Mr. Harman in conversation, just as I would hav felt had I pledged my honor and my life to him, to escort him through a dangerous wilderness beset with enemies upon every hand; and he had then at the most critical moment made a great outcry, to attract the attention of, and bring down upon us every enemy within hearing. I know, as every lawyer knows, that the only way to defend an accused person in a court of law is with law. Mr. Harman seemed deeply imbued with the idea that the law could not afford him justice. He looked with suspicion and contempt upon all of the methods, processes, rules, and doctrins of the law. He was willing and anxious to claim that what he did was done in good faith, and with perfect sincerity of purpose, but he apparently could not understand that good faith could be available as a legal defense. He seemed unable to comprehend how a proposition so righteous could hav any sanction in law.

In view of the atrocious decisions of courts which now stand as precedents in this class of cases his skepticism was quite pardonable. These decisions, however, are not law but simply perversions of law. The idea that a man may be imprisoned at hard labor for a long term of years suffering the penalties inflicted only upon felons, upon conviction of an alleged offense wherein it is admitted there is no evil intention, is simply infernal, and when brought rightly before the higher tribunals I hav an abiding faith that it will be utterly repudiated and condemned. Mr. Harman, however, evidently despairing of justice at the hands of the law, seemed bent upon rushing upon the enemies' spears, and by receiving them in his own body "make way for liberty." Here was the point of divergence between counsel and client. To illustrate this, here are a few more lines from my letter to Mr. Harman: "You seem to hav no faith in 'general principles of constitutional right.' You must know, however, that the invocation of these is all that a lawyer can do for one situated as you are and were. In defending men charged with public offenses we must operate through men. These hav passions, prejudices, sentiments, and if we would induce them to giv us the benefit of what we conceive to be our constitutional rights, every consideration of prudence and good sense would suggest that while we are thus engaged we shall not make ourselvs unnecessarily obnoxious to those who hav our destiny in their hands. No leader has ever done much toward delivering a people out of bondage who had not sufficient insight to discern a truth so manifest."

And yet in the face of all this, and with a knowledge of it, Mr. Chamberlain characterizes the dismissal of Mr. Clemens and myself from the case as an "abandonment" upon our part "of Mr. Harman," and says, "I cannot look upon their abandonment of Mr. Harman as justifiable."

Walker says, in Fair Play, that I said to him, "Of course, we paid no attention to this dismissal." I think I did not use those exact words; but, in any event, meant to convey the idea simply that we took no offense at the dismissal. We had no thought of abandoning Mr. Harman in the case in which we were engaged, but we did not propose to assume the responsibility of an attempt to justify such a publication as the O'Neil letter. It is understood here that Mr. Chamberlain counseled its publication; if so, he should stand ready to defend the act, but he should not censure others who, though survivors of many a hard-fought battle for liberty, yet shrink from a task so arduous. Is it not a little remarkable that the only censure comes from Mr. Chamberlain? The unfortunate victim of all of this miserable blundering utters no reproaches, nor do those near him. I do not wish to be understood as assailing Mr. Chamberlain; that he acted earnestly and sincerely I doubt not, but he should not cast unjust aspersions upon those who hav acted with equal earnestness and sincerity, and, as I firmly believe, with greater discretion. About a week before the time set for the trial, an effort at reconciliation was made, but it came to naught, for the same reasons that had induced the original differences. After his conviction Mr. Harman requested me to assist his attorney, Colonel Bradley, in presenting the motion for a new trial. I readily consented, and went to the court for that purpose, but, being informed by Judge Foster that I could hav only five minutes in which to make an argument, I, of course, made no argument. I am now engaged in an attempt to get the record in shape for an appeal to the circuit court, and will, if possible, apply to that court at its June term for a writ of error, and shall do all that lies in my power to release Mr. Harman from the heavy sentence inflicted under that cruel, inhuman, and unconstitutional statute, for, notwithstanding past disagreements as to methods, and my hostility to much that he has published, yet no one felt more keenly than I the stinging blow which he received, and no one could regret it more deeply.

DAVID OVERMYER.

Topeka, Kan., May 17, 1890.

Anthony Comstock Compels the Destruction of an Able Historical Work.

About a year ago I received a letter from a scholarly writer, of seventy years, living in California, asking me to publish a volume of two hundred or more pages, entitled, "Religion in Rocks: The Serpent and the Cross." The book had been formerly published in New York, some four thousand copies having been sold.

As the author had made some startling discoveries in California, in stone records, he desired to add to the former work an account of these discoveries. The book was divided into three parts: Part I. Serpent and Tree Worship. Part II. Phallic Worship. Part III. Sun Worship. The author had found in California stone idols, images, and relics, also other evidence that in very ancient times there was a religious cult which was identical with that of the ancient phallic worship of the East. In the new edition, the author wished to include these western discoveries. He had made deep research into oriental symbol worship, including that of phallic worship, availing himself of the previous investigations of Ferguson, Massey, E. J. Powell, G. W. Cox, Samuel Sharp, Bunsen, Stevens, Rawlinson, Samuel Johnson, Inman, Higgins, William Simpson, Sir Gardner Wilkinson, and others of less note. He also discovered that a number of symbols used in Christian worship and architecture, especially that of the cross, were used by the phallic devotees more than four thousand years ago. In dignified and chaste language, the author has called attention to these similarities and compared incidentally the two cults.

As the first edition had been sold throughout the country, and contained many of the same illustrations as were to be used in the new edition, and as I had not supposed it to be a work coming under the head of legal interdiction, I accepted the author's terms for publication. I hav spoken of the work freely to my friends, and shown signatures to any who happened to call at my office. When the courteous officers, agents of Anthony Comstock, called, I showed them the book willingly, as I had others, and was quite surprised when they informed me that it was a questionable book to publish, in the opinion of some Springfield informant.

I placed copies of the printed part on serpent and phallic worship, in their hands, also the third part in manuscript, and asked them to hav it carefully examined, and if the law officers finally decided that it should not be published, I would destroy such part as they objected to. They informed me if I did not, they should bring a suit. After a week's waiting or more, they informed me that the phallic part of the book was deemed objectionable, but that the rest of the book was not.

Rather than hav a suit, I preferred to burn all that part which they said was illegal. Lawsuits are expensiv, and I hav no property to waste that way, and in this case I should get nothing but injustice before a jury made up of men ignorant of the history of the religions of the ancient world, and full of the religious and other prejudices of this age.

The book was never suppressed in California to my knowledge. It was published in New York, and I hear the edition has been exhausted some time. We did not burn four thousand volumes; we burnt about one hundred pages, unbound, of an edition of thirteen hundred. The rest of the work was preserved.

The book is intended for ripe scholars. The style is scientific; the language and frequent use of Latin and Greek terms all indicate that the work is intended for the few who wish to make researches into the origin of the great religious cults of the world. A youth could not understand the words used, nor could a mature man of ordinary education. Those who wish to learn what the phallic part of the book taught, can find in our city library a work on phallicism, which covers nearly all the ground of the eastern cult. Works on phallic worship, under different titles, are to be found in many public libraries in this country and also in the private libraries of scholars.

Notwithstanding the opinion of the law officers, who acted according to their present limited knowledge in this department of universal research, I still am of the opinion, in which I shall hav the assent of archæologists, like Massey and Sir Gardner Wilkinson, that the phallic part of the book is no drawback to true learning or morality.

Our great scholars are discovering new evidence each decade that all religions are the product of man's evolution on this planet, and that one cult is the outgrowth of a previous one. Sun worship, serpent worship, and phallic worship were the forerunners of the religions of Greece, Rome, and Palestine; as they were the antecedents and largely the sources of the Christian cult.

However much zealots, whose ardor is more intense the more ignorant they are, may object, scientific research will find the bottom of all religious mysteries, and in years to come no religious system will long be able to conceal its human origin.

H. A. BUDINGTON.

Springfield, Mass., May 16, 1890.

Religious Worship in Our Public Schools.

When writing my recent appeals I had hoped time would be afforded to marshal our forces ere the issue had to be met. But, while we are all unprepared, the necessity for immediate action is forced upon us.

Last February I visited Lynden, Whatcom county. The weather was intensely severe, yet I secured thirteen names to the Washington Secular Union, and they elected C. M. Tobiassen, a most highly respected citizen, as their vice-president of the state society. I also organized a local Union. He writes me, under date of April 28th:

> The Lynden Secular Union is in a flourishing condition, and the members are determined to make a success of it. We hav twenty-one members, and several others will join soon. We hav had poor success in securing a hall; hav been holding our meetings in a store building. But we intend to build a hall by next fall.
>
> Mr. Brown and Mr. Delander visited the public school some time ago, and reported to the society that the teachers read the Bible every morning, and then the school repeated the Lord's prayer, after which a gospel hymn was sung. The society decided that I should speak to the directors, which I did. They wanted time to consider what they would do about it, which was granted. They informed me to-day that they would not hav the religious exercises and instructions of the public school stopped, and if I could stop it, to go ahead and do so. It has been decided by the Lynden Secular Union, that I report the facts to you, for action of the state society.

Thus the issue is forced upon us and must be met by immediate, energetic action, or all the time, means, and labor expended to secure the bill of rights in our state constitution is worse than lost, and we are delivered, bound hand and foot, into the power of the priesthood. If we are forever supine, our public schools, the bulwarks of our American independence, are doomed. The one only hope to save them is to insist on obedience to the letter and spirit of the law, and thus defeat the bigots and fanatics.

Our public schools are for the benefit of all, and their perpetuity depends on keeping them free from all religious worship, exercise, or instruction. Those who desire to instil Christianity, Mormonism, Buddhism, or any other religion in the minds of their children hav full privilege to do so in their homes, their places of public worship, and their Sunday-schools. But our public schools are sacred to the purpose of affording to all children who attend secular education, fitting them for the discharge of the duties of this life as good citizens.

Deeds, not words, must now decide. We cannot go into court without funds to pay legal fees, prepare briefs, retain able counsel, etc. The superior court might decide against us. We must be prepared for all and every emergency, expect the most bitter and powerful opposition, and be fully prepared to appeal or follow the case to the supreme court. Not alone every principle of right and justice but the law is plainly and unequivocally on our side. Yet we shall hav a severe struggle.

We need at once to raise a fund of $1,000. To take any action without being backed by moral and financial support, ample and sufficient to insure success, would only be to add humiliation to disaster, and to court defeat.

The cause at Lynden is your cause, the cause of every Liberal in the entire state, for once the supreme court decision is obtained all religious exercises or instructions in our public schools in this state end forever.

Here is indeed an especial emergency. Our hope is in the generous and immediate contributions of those devoted to right and justice. Giv as you would if it was your children who were forced to take part in religious worship at school every day. Urge all friends who love liberty and hope for the future of our country to do likewise.

The funds contributed will be reserved as the defense fund, and not one dollar of it applied or expended for any other purpose. A full account of all sums received and an itemized account of expenditures will be published in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The board of directors are anxiously awaiting your response.

C. B. REYNOLDS,
Secretary Washington Secular Union.
2,104 Sixth street, Seattle, Wash.

The Mormon Confiscation Case.

From the Sun.

We are glad to see that the three Democratic members of the Supreme Court of the United States hav had courage enough to take the unpopular side in the Mormon confiscation case, and dissent from the judgment of the majority of that tribunal announced on Monday.

This judgment sustains the authority of Congress to enact the statute known as the Edmunds anti-polygamy law.

That statute took effect on Feb. 19, 1887, without the approval of the president, not having been returned to the House of Congress with which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution.

Among other things, it provided that the acts of the territorial legislature of Utah and of the so-called General Assembly of the State of Deseret incorporating and continuing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints should be annulled and the corporation dissolved; and it directed the attorney-general of the United States to take such proceedings in the supreme court of Utah as should be proper to wind up the affairs of the corporation.

Under this statute proceedings were instituted to forfeit and escheat to the United States the property of the Mormon church. The constitutionality of the legislation was disputed by the Mormons, but they hav now lost the final battle in the court of last resort.

To us it seems that this result can only be deemed satisfactory by those who believe in the doctrin that the end justifies the means, however objectionable the latter. It is most desirable that it should cease, but it should not be brought about by disregarding the plain commands of the Constitution; and here we hav three judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, including the chief justice, declaring that certain essential provisions of the Edmunds act are in contravention of specific limitations in the fundamental law of the land.

No detailed discussion of the decision is possible without the text of the opinions. From the public abstracts, however, which are very meager, we gather that the majority of the court justify the confiscation proceedings on the ground that the property taken was used to sustain the practice of polygamy in defiance of the national laws. The dissenting judges concede the power of Congress to suppress polygamy and punish it as a crime; but they deny that this can be done in the manner provided for by the Edmunds act, which substantially adjudged the Mormon church guilty, without giving it a judicial hearing, and then proceeded to appropriate its property to government uses.

The case is one of the most important ever decided by the Supreme Court.

SEND for catalog of our publications. Sent free on application.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MAY 31, 1890.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

IN PRESS.

The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book.

One Hundred and Eighty-five Pictorial Arguments Against the Church, and Nearly the same Number of Pages of Reading Matter.

Price, $2; advance orders solicited.

Mr. Bennett's Journey Around the World.

We desire to call attention to the following letter:

"CLINTON, IA., May 20, 1890.

"THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY: Accept from me another V post-office order. The money I invested in 'The Truth Seeker Around the World' gives me more interest than ten times the same amount would do at six per cent. I hav gone through the land of Yayweh with Mr. Bennett, and it was about as good a treat as I ever had. It is wonderful what miracles can be performed at a shrine of the Virgin.

"JAMES A. GREENHILL."

That is, we are glad to think, but a merited commendation of the volumes. As Emerson said of Thoreau, Mr. Bennett "saw as with microscope, heard as with ear-trumpet; and his memory was a photographic register of all he saw and heard." The four volumes sell for $6 50 postpaid. Quite a number who subscribed for three volumes, which Mr. Bennett thought would hold all he should write, hav not taken the additional book which completes the set. This fourth volume will be mailed for $1.50.

The Literature Fund.

Since donations to this fund were last acknowledged we hav received from S. D. Moore, $5; Joseph E. Alexander, $1; James A. Greenhill, $5; Samos Parsons, second donation, $10; bringing the total of this fund to $105.85. The expenses hav been:

"Sabbath Breaking" to South Dakota	$19 50
" " " Washington (state)	13 13
TRUTH SEEKER to national legislature	14.46	47 09

"Sabbath Breaking" to North Dakota was paid for by the Liberals of Fargo, and the same book to our national legislators was paid for by the American Secular Union. We hav on hand $58.76 which we shall use as opportunity offers to distribute Freethought literature, and to do good in legislativ bodies. We hav the satisfaction of knowing that this fund helped in securing the good results for secular government in the state of Washington, and also made the paths of the Christians very thorny in other places.

We also acknowledge, with sincere thanks, the following sums contributed to help pay for pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER:

E. B. Croft	$2 00	J. C. Singer	$5.00
H. L. Wright	50	W. A. Hathaway	85
Wm. Wilcox	25	Magnus Hanson	1.75

Owing to the generous efforts of friends the pictures are assured for this year at least, and we hope, with their continued aid, to increase the circulation of the paper so that another call for special help will not be necessary. We earnestly ask every one of our subscribers to speak a good word for the paper to his Liberal friends and urge them to subscribe.

The Confiscation of the Mormon Church Property.

The Mail and Express calls the Supreme Court's decision that Congress has the constitutional right to confiscate the property of the Mormon church a Christian victory.

In this the doughty Shepard is right. It is a Christian victory, just that and nothing more. It is the triumph of one Christian sect over another Christian sect. It is accomplished by the practical union of church and state—that is, by the use of the state's power to further ends desired by a sect.

That Congress may prohibit polygamy in the territories is good law. But that because a church practices polygamy its property, donated for charitable purposes, can be seized, is mighty poor law, and is a violation of constitutional guarantees, the Supreme Court to the contrary notwithstanding. For, when polygamy is eliminated, there is nothing in Mormonism but supernaturalism of the Christian variety, and it is as much entitled to protection as any other Christian sectarianism. And in practicing polygamy the Mormon church is but more Christian than the other sects, nearer to the example set by the patriarchs and wise men of the Christian scriptures, and altogether more consistent than those who repudiate the practice of God's chosen people while teaching their theories. And it was without doubt the fact that Christians could not answer Mormons without throwing overboard their Bible that induced them to invoke the aid of the secular power. To hav a working model of their religion in the country was altogether too much for the nineteenth century Christians.

The ground upon which the court assumes to confiscate the Mormons' property is that Mormonism is "an organized rebellion against the United States." Then the court says: "The history of the government's dealings with the Mormons is one of patience on the part of the American government, and of resistance to law and pitiless atrocities on the part of the Mormons. The contention that polygamy is a part of the Mormon's religious belief is a sophistical plea. No doubt the thugs of India imagined that their belief in assassination was a religious belief, but that did not make it so. Society has a perfect right to prohibit offenses against the enlightened sentiment of mankind. Since the church persists in claiming the right to use the funds with which it has been endowed for the purpose of promoting these unlawful practices, the question arises, has the government the right to seize these funds which the Mormon leaders are misusing and devote them to worthy and charitable purposes as nearly akin as possible to those to which the funds were dedicated."

The first of these positions—that the Mormon church is an organized foe of the government—is not more true than that the Roman Catholic church is such a foe. Indeed, the latter church is a far more serious menace to the stability of our American republic than ever Mormonism could be. Its attitude toward our schools, and in politics, the encyclicals of the pope and the utterances of its journals, show that church to be a deadly enemy of popular government. That church does not believe in republics, does not believe that people should govern themselvs, but insists that all governments must be from God, and that as the church is his sole agent in this world necessarily all governments must be from the church. The other positions of the Supreme Court are merely excuses for the spoliation. Polygamy could be suppressed without the confiscation; that the latter is resorted to, is good evidence that the non-polygamic part of Christendom desires to cripple the church which is, by being consistent, such a horrible example of the effects of simon-pure Christianity.

The Efforts of the Sabbath Unionists.

The bill which the Sabbath Union fanatics are endeavoring to get through Congress—and which has passed the Senate—was first presented under the title, "A bill for the establishment of certain laws or ordinances for the District of Columbia," and contained twenty-four sections, of which the tenth reads as follows:

"That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to curse or make use of any profane language, or any indecent or obscene words, or engage in any disorderly conduct in any street, avenue, public space, square, road or highway, or inclosure, or any railroad depot or steamboat landing, within the District of Columbia, or in any place wherefrom the same be heard in any such street, avenue, alley, public square, road, highway, or inclosure, or in any such depot, railroad cars, or on board any steamboat, under a penalty of not exceeding twenty dollars for each and every such offense."

According to Webster, profane language is

"Treating sacred things with contempt, disrespect, irreverence, or undue familiarity; irreverent; hence, specifically, irreverent in language; taking the name of God in vain; blasphemous."

If the bill had passed as desired by the Sabbath Union people, the publicly irreverent and blasphemous man would hav had to pay roundly for the privilege of expressing his opinion. We would suggest to the Sabbath Unionists that there was up to a few years ago, and may be now possibly (we hav not heard that it has been repealed), a law against blasphemy in force in the District of Columbia which was—and perhaps is—much better for their purpose than this paltry twenty-dollar fine. The law reads:

"That if any person shall hereafter, within this province, wittingly, maliciously, and advisedly, by writing or speaking, blaspheme or curse God, or deny our savior, Jesus Christ, to be the son of God, or shall deny the holy trinity, the father, son, and Holy Ghost, or the godhead of any of the three persons, or the unity of the godhead, or shall utter any profane words concerning the holy trinity, or any of the persons thereof, and shall thereof be convict by verdict, shall, for the first offense, be bored through the tongue, and fined twenty pounds to be levied off his body. And for the second offense, the offender shall be stigmatized by burning in the forehead with the letter B, and fined forty pounds. And that for the third offense, the offender shall suffer death without the benefit of clergy."

There might be some difficulty in enforcing the old Maryland statute, and it seems that the senators themselvs desire to swear sometimes, and become blasphemous occasionally, for they struck out Mr. Crofts's india-rubber section against profanity. Only five of the twenty-four sections passed the senate. Mr. Blair desired to make the bill cover all the days of the week, and prohibit liquor-selling as well as profanity at any time, but desisted from offering an amendment to that effect because the bill would never hav been passed in such shape. In yielding he said, "It is well to provide for the observance of the Sabbath."

The concealed dagger in this bill, now that it is revealed, is a pretty strong indication of what the Sabbath Unionists are really after. Their whine has been "The welfare of the poor workingman," but when the opportunity offers the poor workingman is put out of sight and the Unionists aim a weapon at the blasphemers, the Infidels. Their allies, the National Reformers, are less cautious and hypocritical. These latter boldly announce their purpose as being "to hav the whole moral law as summed up in the Ten Commandments, and the whole moral Mosaic penal code, made the rule of action in Congress, in state legislatures, and in the courts of justice." They also expect by this means to "keep out of office all ungodly and wicked men"—that is, all who make no profession of Christianity—and that idol worship (which is the way they take to hit the Roman Catholics, Chinese, etc), profanity, blasphemy, Sabbath breaking, disobedience to parents, intemperance, polygamy, adultery, prostitution, gambling, etc., shall "be punished as the divine law requires." The Sabbath Unionists would be more honest, if more preposterous in their objects, if they emulated the frankness of the National Reformers. They mean to do the same things if they can.

Clerics Trouble the New Republic.

The new government of Brazil is, after all, to hav trouble with the priests. The recently published dispatch of the minister of the interior to the inspector general of education, in which religious instruction is strictly forbidden in primary and secondary schools, has stirred up the ecclesiastical hornets'-nest, and in the state of Paraua the priests hav announced their intention to place in the field a clerical ticket to be voted for at the September election. Pastoral letters hav been issued by several bishops and the clerical journals plainly intimate that the church people will struggle hard for what they arrogantly assume to be their rights in the matter of education and influence in the government.

All this, of course, was to be expected. The Roman Catholic church has so long been the state church in Brazil, supported by taxation and backed by the secular arm, that it would be too much to hope that she would giv up her position without a contest, and tradition does not tell of any case where Rome yielded a penny of her property or a jot of her power except at the muzzles of guns. She has always pursued

"The good old plan,
That they shall take who hav the power,
And they shall keep who can."

To take and keep she has used force, intrigue, bribery, fear—all the arts and means known to tyrants, liars, unscrupulous politicians, and sacerdotal despots. A republic in which a large portion of the voters are her devout and unquestioning slaves affords her a splendid opportunity to exercise her power, aud a government must be firm and wise to prevent her wielding all the power and accumulating all the property. That is the reason why we in this country hav so much to fear from Roman Catholicism.

The warning cannot be repeated too often that our government, as well as all others, can escape danger from the clerics only by allowing no direct nor indirect connection between church and state, so that the massing of its forces by the former can gain them nothing. Every man should pay for his own religion.

The Three in Bonds.

We hav received from Medium Reid the following letter:

"GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., May 19, 1890.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: One year at hard labor in the House of Correction at Detroit. So much for mediumship. What think you of it? Refused to prove by actual demonstration in the court room that I can answer sealed letters, refused proof by evidence of those whose letters I hav answered and yet sentenced as above. I leave here to-morrow to wear a convict's garb, but I leave at home a noble little wife who will try to keep a shelter over my family until I am free. She will continue the Olive Branch the best she can. I mailed you a copy of the Democrat a few days ago giving a synopsis of Judge Jackson's rulings on motion for a new trial. When the court asked 'why sentence should not be passed,' I answered him that I did not ask for mercy from any man; I wanted justice; and then told him my last act as a free man not fifteen minutes before was to answer a sealed letter that had come by mail. And now I leave home, family, everything but honor. With regards I am, Sincerely and truly,

"WALTER E. REID."

Of this case we hav often expressed our opinion. We do not know whether Mr. Reid is a fraud or not; we do not know whether he communicates with spirits or not; but we do not know that so long as priests and preachers are permitted to receive pay for their offices for the dead it is an outrage to imprison the priests of the Spiritualist faith. Every man ought to be free to get his religion where he pleases and how he pleases, and pay for it as he pleases.

And we are glad to see that justice has some defenders besides the Freethinkers. Touching Mr. Reid's case the Boston daily Globe says editorially:

"Mr. Walter E. Reid, a 'spirit postmaster,' recently convicted in Grand Rapids, Mich., of using the United States mails for purposes of fraud, came before Judge Jackson of that city last Tuesday morning, and asked for a new trial.

"Mr. Reid says that he is a clairvoyant and 'psychometric' to an extent that he is able to read a sealed letter without opening it, and to describe the condition and surroundings of the sender. He offered then and there in open court to read any letter the judge might take from his pocket, without opening it and to describe the sender.

"Judge Jackson turned upon him rudely, and said his court was no place for exhibitions of mountebanks and jugglers, whose tricks he would not believe if sworn to on a pile of Bibles, and he therefore confirmed the judgment of the trial court.

"We believe there are few judges in these parts who would not accept, on the spot, such a challenge as Mr. Reid's. Such conduct as that of Judge Jackson savors plainly of bigotry and unfairness. The Spiritualists, like all others, hav the right to a fair show in court, whatever may happen to be the judge's private opinion of their honesty."

The Banner of Light adds:

"As is well known to our readers, the case of Walter E. Reid, publisher and medium, who was recently convicted at Grand Rapids, Mich., of fraudulently using the United States mails, is of peculiar interest to Spiritualists, as the trial and conviction of the defendant rested upon his claims to furnish spirit-messages by letter from departed friends to applicants. Since his conviction Mr. Reid has appeared before Judge Jackson, of Grand Rapids, and asked for a new trial, very properly offering to hav his medial powers tested in open court by the judge himself. Which offer the judge refused to accept, and the trial asked for was not granted.

"In view of these facts, the case becomes one of interest to every fair-minded and justice-loving person, whether Spiritualist or not. To refuse the appearance of the very strongest evidence in open court upon any case, is, of all things, a most unheard-of movement on the part of the judicial bench.

"Could Mr. Reid hav met the test in public, and hav shown, then and there, that his mediumship is reliable and sound, that action would hav been the strongest possible witness in his behalf; but owing to the intolerance of the judge, no such evidence was allowed to arise."

We hope the Christian Spiritualists, and especially their mediums, will ponder well the fact that Sunday-school Superintendent John Wanamaker ordered this prosecution.

Mr. Overmyer elsewhere in this paper explains his withdrawal from the defense of Mr. Harman, and also givs the welcome news that he has again entered the fight. Mr. Overmyer's letter consumes considerable space, but it is due him that he be heard. And so far as any words of ours may hav done him injustice, we are quite willing to correct them, as we are glad to do any statement made upon wrong information.

The friends of Mr. Harman are doing all that can be done for his welfare and liberation. Besides the bill of exceptions to be argued in June, the following petition has been printed for circulation:

"To the President of the United States:

"We, the undersigned citizens of the United States and of the state of respectfully petition your excellency to grant a pardon to Moses Harman, convicted at the April term, 1890, of the United States district court for Kansas upon a charge of depositing non-mailable matter in the mails and sentenced to five years' hard labor in the penitentiary, and to pay a fine of $300; for the following reasons, to-wit:

"1. The punishment, five years' imprisonment at hard labor and $300 fine, is excessiv, being the most severe penalty ever inflicted in this country, in any case of this kind.

"2. Mr. Harman is a man of unquestionable moral character, was perfectly sincere in what he did, and made the objectionable publication in good faith, and, regardless of what our own views may be in the matter, we recognize his sincerity and integrity of purpose in doing as he did.

"3. Mr. Harman is an old man about sixty years of age; is in feeble health; has been for nearly fifty years a cripple; is weak and frail, incapable of performing or enduring hard labor, and his life is, in all probability, seriously endangered by the confinement and rigor of prison life."

This petition can be cut from this paper, pasted on a sheet of writing paper, and circulated; or regular blanks will be furnished. One of Mr. Harman's Kansas friends has guaranteed court expenses on the appeal, but for funds for the new trial, if it is obtained, and for circulating the petitions, dependence is placed upon subscriptions, which should be sent to Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

From Mr. Heywood we hav heard nothing new. We hav received, however, a double-column circular written by L. V. Pinney, formerly editor of the Winsted Press, in which Mr. Heywood's position is thus apparently authoritativly outlined:

"Mr. Heywood's position, ideas, and purposes are probably misunderstood, to his woe, by many excellent men who hav heard of him chiefly through the opposition which he as a pertinacious debater and voluminous pamphleteer has aroused. His claim is that the organs of reproduction are honorable parts of the human body, that they hav names, and shall be honorably known by their names, and that they should be talked about and thought about, not as shameful or filthy facts or disagreeable impositions of nature, but as admirable provisions in the divine economy for imparting renewed life and strength, beauty and grace to the human race. . . . He insists that he and all other men (and women) his fellow-citizens of Massachusetts and the United States, hav inherent right to discuss the subject, and to use terms which are easiest understood by all. He also insists that so far as he is concerned this discussion shall take place in the sunlight of publicity through the columns of the Word. In the present case he is the defender of man's generativ power against the attacks of self-anointed purists, he insisting that this power is good and honorable—they that it is bad and dishonorable, even too dishonorable to be mentioned in speech or print."

We are not at all in sympathy with the methods pursued by Mr. Heywood, and regret that he considers it incumbent upon him to champion vulgarity. His tilt against good taste in the use of language seems to us about as senseless as would be his visiting New York for the sole purpose of disobeying our ridiculous law against suicide, and thereby vindicating his natural right to take his own life in his own manner. But when Comstock's ecclesiastical machine attempts to grind a man to powder our sympathies are with his chosen victim. We hav not in the world an enemy so mean that we would not delight in seeing him escape the cruel clutch of the tyrannical vice society. The use of the government to punish the church's enemies is a thousand times more dangerous to liberty and morality than all the indecent expressions ever used by Mr. Heywood.

Not Now a Christian Country.

A few weeks ago the Christian Advocate pronounced this to be an "eminently Christian country." Dr. Buckley has since come to the conclusion that he erred in making that statement, for now he says:

"Is this a Christian country? Not in the sense of having formally adopted the Christian religion as the exclusiv religion of the people; not in the sense of having adopted any form of the Christian religion as that which shall be observed by the people; not in the sense of having incorporated the Christian religion into the framework of the government by formal legislativ action. No authoritativ declaration of the government has pronounced the Christian religion the only true religion. This is a Christian country in so far as the Christian religion controls the consciences and practices of the people and determins the framework of the government through the sentiments of the citizens. How far this is a Christian country depends altogether on how far the principles of Christianity hav become the principles of the people. An intelligent pagan observer, who should be told that this is a Christian country, would not form the most exalted notion of Christianity from what he might see. It is said that the Japanese government recently sent a deputation to investigate the religious establishment of England with a view to its introduction into Japan as a national religion. The commission reported adversely, chiefly on the ground that Christianity had not saved England from becoming a drunken nation. To incorporate the Christian religion with the government and make it the established religion does not make a Christian nation in the best sense. Christianity cannot be legislated into the world; it must be propagated by the 'foolishness of preaching.'"

The foolishness of preaching is a remarkably apt phrase, and in using it Paul seemed to hav been gifted with a prophetic knowledge of the modern preacher.

But we are quite content to hav Christianity propagated in the manner Dr. Buckley advocates. What we object to is the practical union of church and state which has been brought about by Christian trickery and disregard of others' rights. We do not object to Ben Harrison and John Wanamaker being Christians; we do object to their using their official positions to further the material welfare of their churches, and to their deciding state questions by the bias given to their minds by their religious predilections. What right has Harrison to commit the country to the platitudes he as a Presbyterian elder puts into the unlawful Thanksgiving proclamations, or why should Wanamaker, in providing postal facilities for the people, settle the matter as a Sunday-school teacher instead of a postmaster-general? This Jekyll and Hyde business is out of place in governmental affairs.

When the framework of this government was set up religion was ignored. That was the practice of the people who set it up; and it follows, therefore, by Dr. Buckley's logic, that it is not a Christian country. But if he desires to claim all the practices of the people now—all the murders, thefts, adulteries, drunkenness—to be Christian in character he is welcome to call it what he pleases.

Editorial Notes.

THE ministers of Grand Rapids, Mich., are proving themselvs as despicably tyrannical in their arrogant assumptions to be the people's rulers as the old Puritan clergy. They hav secured the arrest of the players in the baseball clubs which "desecrated the Sabbath" recently in that city and propose to apply to them an antediluvian statute which forbids "worldly amusements" on Sunday. The people of the city ought to tell these Paul Prys to mind their own business, and then they ought to get the law repealed. But they won't; they seem to like to be stepped on by the elect of the Lord.

THE Unitarian preacher John W. Chadwick says that Christianity has become the religion of the rich. This is true; and the espousal of the cause of wealth by Christianity in this age is in a line with its espousal of the most powerful side throughout past history. It naturally inclines to the side of power, regardless of right; and as when the dominant power was aristocracy and royalty it upheld aristocracy and royalty, so now when the dominant power is wealth, it upholds wealth. Protestantism, remarks Mr. Chadwick, is the most notorious as having rich men's churches to which the poor cannot go. Catholicism has only in America come to take any steps toward separating the rich and the poor in its buildings. "The wealth of the world to-day," says the radical divine, "is heaped up within Christian boundaries." He might hav added—just as property in slave flesh was heaped up within Christian boundaries; just as the ill-got profusion of kings was hedged in by Christian barriers, and just as all unjustly got or immoderate riches hav ever sheltered themselvs behind religious text and pretext and command.

Letters from Friends.

FAIRBURY, NEB., May 13, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 for the cartoon book when ready. I vote for the pictures. F. WELLS.

GAVA VILLAGE, N. Y., May 15, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am an old subscriber. I like the paper well, cartoons and all the rest, and John Peck in particular. SEYMOUR WHALEY.

WALKERVILLE, MONT., May 13, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $7, for which please send the picture book and others as named. Please send catalog. HORACE BROWN.

YATES CENTER, May 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, for which please send cartoon book as soon as ready for shipment.

Yours truly, M. A. WECKERLY.

NEW YORK, May 8, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to remark in language that is plain, that your reply to the Voice is immense. E. B. F., JR.

GIBSLAND, LA., April 28, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $8, for which send me one copy of the picture book as soon as published, and apply the balance on my subscription. Accept my full vote for the continuance of the pictures. WM. MANSFIELD.

FARMINGTON, UTAH, April 29, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I will hav to renew, as I do not want to lose any of the papers. And as for the pictures, I say keep on; but as far as helping them along I cannot do any more than pay my own dues, as there is no one to look for here to help along the cause, for they are all too bigoted.

Yours for truth, L. P. ANDERSON.

NORTH BENTON, O., May 8, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Send me the book of pictorial arguments against the church. By all means keep the cartoons moving. They are formidable weapons against the church. In a conversation with a Presbyterian clergyman he admitted there was not a day that he had no doubts about the truth of the book called the Bible. CHESTER BEDELL.

PENN YAN, N. Y., May 12, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Send the ANNUALS for 1889 and 1890. And I propose to order that picture book of you if nothing happens to prevent. Pray for me, please, that I may not be unfortunate. Pray like the devil, too, for I am awfully wicked, thinking the church a grand humbug. I hav made effort now and then to gain other subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, but hav succeeded only in being unsuccessful. I am sorry. C. ELMENDORF.

CENTRALIA, ILL., May 15, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I must not neglect sending the subscription for the noble old TRUTH SEEKER. I hav been a subscriber for a long time, I believe about a quarter of a century, and I hav become so much attached to it I cannot do without it. I am getting somewhat old and may drop off, and then I will hav to do without it, unless you can send it through on the air line. I can say one thing, I can see that it has done a good deal of good. It has about knocked the sails out of the old Confession of Faith. I hope everything will get all right and we can be honest. J. CUNNINGHAM.

WALLA WALLA, WASH., May 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I believe it is taught by all Christian denominations, without exception, that God is omnipotent and omnipresent. There is no place that he is not. He fills immensity. He is in every existing thing. Now, sir, what I want to know is, taking this to be a fact, from the Christian standpoint, What do the Christian portion of the United States mean by wanting an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to place therein their God? It would seem to me that if God is not in the Constitution, they are false preachers and teachers. I would like some of them to explain away the fog. V. D. LAMBERT.

OXFORD, N. S., May 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Our friend Mr. Wm. Gray left here about July last, and we hav not since heard anything about him. And as he left word with the postmaster to keep his papers until his return, the friends here are very anxious about him, and would like to know whether he is living or not. If you could aid us in finding out, we would be very glad. We are not so particular about knowing just where he is, as to know whether he is alive or not.

As regards the agitation in favor of the continuance of the pictures, I am in favor; and if they are published in book form there are at least three or four copies wanted here.

Yours truly, E. H. SCHURMAN.

FLORA, ILL., May 12, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I write a few lines to inform you of the death of my father, Pennock Baily, a lifelong truth seeker and investigator, who died March 20, 1890, at the home of his son, Dr. Joseph S. Baily, in Vernon, Ind., of la grippe, in his eighty-seventh year. He was anxious and willing to go, saying he had outlived his usefulness and it was best he should go. He was a kind father, a good neighbor, and respected by all. He had so lived that he was calmly and patiently awaiting the summons of death, saying a short time before he became unconscious, "I hav no regrets or fears; I am ready and waiting for death." Throughout all of his sufferings he exhibited a patience and fortitude seldom equaled, and finally sank to rest as peacefully as if sleeping. He was a great admirer of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and liked to hav it read to him until the last.

A DAUGHTER.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS., May 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I first saw the advertisment of your valuable paper in the Twentieth Century, and I ordered it of our newsdealer, so I get it every week. For sound logic, truth, and information, I do not hesitate to pronounce it the best paper that is published on this green earth. It is doing more to make the world better than all of the other reform papers put together. Men can never be free as long as they are bent down with the load of superstition that they are carrying to-day, and you are doing a noble work in relieving their brains of the terrible load that to-day presses them down into slavery. When I hav finished reading your paper I always see that it is passed along to a dozen others. I shall always be ready to aid you or the cause you represent. I vote for the cartoons. ANDREW R. PAUL.

GOODLAND, IND., May 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: A few weeks ago I was showing some back numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER to a Seventh Day Advent preacher. He travels over several states. I was surprised to find how near our ideas on a great many subjects agreed. He was particularly impressed with the front-page picture representing Uncle Sam with his coat off laying down the law to the fanatical bigots who are trying to unite church and state. He asked for this picture, and I cut it out and gave it to him. He is using it in his illustrated sermons. Just think of THE TRUTH SEEKER being used as an argument by a Christian minister. Surely "the world do move."

I promised you a subscriber, for the pictures, and will get him yet. In order to help me so to do, please mail sample copies to the persons whose names are inclosed.

Yours truly, C. L. JACOBS.

SKIDMORE, MO., May 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 3d is a short article by C. H. Greene, Rochester, Mich., headed, "Woman Suffrage in Kansas," wherein the writer attempts to criticise a writer of the New York Herald. I believe that Liberals above all others should not use assertions of their ignorance as actual facts. C. H. Greene doubts if there is half the number of cities chartered that the Herald stated held elections lately. The number quoted from the Herald by C. H. Greene was fifty-seven, while there are over one hundred cities that are chartered and hav a population of over one thousand, and there are fifty-seven cities that hav a population of over two thousand. Kansans will certainly smile when they see C. H. Greene attempt to locate their metropolis in the state of Missouri. Kansas City, Kan., is a nice little city of over thirty-six thousand inhabitants, and Friend Greene will hardly be able to transport it bodily from Kansas to Missouri just by the scratch of a pen.

Respectfully, W. J. SKIDMORE.

BLOOMDALE, O., May 15, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: To me it has long been apparent that the "tree of knowledge" is no other than the sciences or an acquaintance with them, or the public school and other institutions of scientific knowledge; and I discern the hand of the priesthood in the writing of that verse in the Bible which says, "You shall not eat of the tree of knowledge." The priesthood, like all other vocations, hav found it necessary to practice deception and keep the multitudes in ignorance that they might be the more easily gulled and become more tractable. The vendors of merchandise, and tradesmen of all varieties, the farmers, the doctors, lawyers, etc., respectivly find it to their interest to keep the people from "knowing as much as one of us" and the priests did not want the human race to know as much as one of "us the priesthood." Any other definition of the tree would seem to me to be void of meaning. If any of your correspondents can giv a better definition, let him produce it, for I am willing to learn and hear all sides. Yours, C. C. GERMANN.

AN OPEN LETTER.

38 CLOVER STREET, DAYTON, O., May 26, 1890.

MRS. N. A. PICKENS, ENSENADA, LOWER CALIFORNIA, MEXICO, My Dear Sister: I hope my experience will banish from your mind all foolish ideas on the subject of Spiritualism. I hav sat on a chair sound asleep and dreamed, and seen and spoken to my poor father and mother, brothers and sisters. Yes, and in my dreams at night I could almost swear (I mean affirm) I saw them, though long gone to that home "from whose bourne no traveler returns." I am seventy-five, and nearly blind. I spent all my younger days traveling all over Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. I speak nine languages. I hav plowed the ocean many a time; I hav been on many a battle-field and seen thousands fall. Disease and the balls never touched me, perhaps because I hav been a Freethinker, Agnostic, or confirmed Infidel, as you please. And I candidly and honestly acknowledge to you, I never in the whole course of my life saw or heard an object but what I could account for in some way. My poor father before he died said, "Fred, remember these three words: Ne quid nimus," and I stopped at the right time. This is why I can fall into a gentle, quiet sleep in two minutes. I hav several children. I never warped their minds. I left them free to judge for themselvs, and they are all Freethinkers.

The ignorant Bible says, "The wind bloweth where it listeth; we hear the sound thereof but we do not know whence it cometh and whither it goeth." Had that Christian said, Man cometh and goeth and we know nothing more, he would hav told the truth. And if he had the dear TRUTH SEEKER, the Bible never would hav been in the Sunday-schools for children to learn vice and immorality from.

Fraternally yours, FREDERICK ROBERTSON, M.D.

CONCORD, N. C., May 14, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am in trouble. The Christian county of Cabarries owes me money for work I hav done for it. The county commissioners employed me to do the work. They do not deny that I hav done the work, but require me to hold up my hand and "appeal to God as the witness of truth and the avenger of falsehood," etc., and affix it to my account. This I refuse to do, and, because I will not belie my convictions, they refuse to pay me. I deny a personal God, who goes eavesdropping in the kitchen and in the parlor, and in every brothel. I am too poor—made so by the late Christian war—to lose my money. What must I do? Must I go up and go through a mock religious form, and thereby acknowledge a God I do not believe in, and giv my enemies, the Christians, a cudgel to pound my unbelieving head? Then they will say, "You acknowledge God when dollars and cents are at stake." I wrote to Col. R. G. Ingersoll on the same subject, but he has failed to answer. Please answer and you will greatly oblige a disbeliever in a personal God and divine inspiration of the Bible.

Yours truly, J. W. MEHAFFEY.

[Living in North Carolina, Mr. Mehaffey is in a hard place, as the laws of that state are severely Christian. He will hav to do as he thinks best.—ED. T. S.]

PATCH GROVE, WIS., May 2, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I wish Heston a long life, and the pictures continued. I know they do a good work, for my young folks would hardly look at the paper were it not for them. I am very much disappointed with Col. R. G. Ingersoll for making that tobacco speech. Of course anyone has a right to set up any fetich and worship it, and he can set up tobacco for his God if he chooses, but in my estimation it is a much more harmful one than Aaron's golden calf, and fully as silly, and nearly as expensiv and harmful as the Christ God; and what good does it do? Just think of the half-clad children who go hungry while their fathers spend the money for tobacco, which does an injury instead of a good. He has spoken well of other topics, including that one of love of wife and child, which a man should hav, but now his eulogy on tobacco is an opposit turn which I do not like and which disappoints me. For Ingersoll to use his gift of eloquence to justify such a filthy, disgraceful habit is shamefully wrong. I hav never seen anything in THE TRUTH SEEKER that grieved me as that tobacco speech coming from Ingersoll, the "Infidel god," for it does seem to me that anyone who knows enough to be an Infidel ought to advocate the highest morality and personal purity.

M. Y. B. HUMPHREY.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., March 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Tyler, Texas, a live, go-ahead town, recently undertook to come into notice and stir up things generally. It agreed that the most effectiv way to produce the stir would be by importing that verbose apparatus known as Samuel Jones, Esq. It has proved a grand success in many particulars. When the curtain of Sam Jones's tabernacle was raised and Sam announced himself ready for business, the people in town, the people out of town, large people, small people, fat people, lean people, crazy people, sane people, by the thousands, like Hamelin's rats, left their hovels and turned out to gaze on Tyler's great bubbling fountain of theological nonsense. The school officials, evidently endeavoring to add glory to the occasion, marched the public school children from the secular school-house to the very doors of Sammy's religious tabernacle, where they were given the alternativ of going home or being bored by a Christian sermon of His Wonderful Windyness, Sam Jones. The state superintendent has informed the officials that they did wrong in doing so, and the good Tylerites hav written long letters of explanation amounting to this: They did not know they were violating the school law. What bosh! Suppose it had been demanded to march Tyler's public school children from the school-house to an Infidel lecture, would the school officials hav been ignorant of the fact that it is a violation of the school law? Not a bit of it. This little affair has at least demonstrated this much—that the public schools of Texas will not be lent to add to the glory of Samuel Jones, Esq., or any other theological windbag, as long as Superintendent Cooper holds his own. OTTO PRAEGER.

NEOLA, IA., March 28, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Jamieson was here and lectured to us on the evening of the 14th, 15th, and 16th. Subject on the 14th was, "Bellamy's Dream, or Looking Backward," which was excellent, and was given to a good house full of well-pleased listeners. On the 15th, "Are there any Followers of Jesus Christ on Earth at the Present Time." Everybody was well pleased, but the attendance was not large at the last two lectures. Yours as ever, D. W. WHITNEY.

OLYMPIA, WASH., March 15, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The cause of Liberalism is still alive and doing some good work in this little, quiet, and conservativ city of Olympia, where the churches, both Catholic and Protestant, are well represented. The cause of Secularism has received a new impetus, and the workers fresh encouragement to stand firm in the cause of truth and right, by the noble and praiseworthy efforts of Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, of Kansas City, Mo., the well known lady orator and platform lecturer, whose services were recently secured by a few Liberal workers here. To her three lectures she drew large and appreciativ audiences from the first, with increasing numbers. On the last night of the course the large city hall was filled beyond its seating capacity. A large number of the members of the Washington legislature were in attendance. This good lady and noble worker in the cause of human rights has only to be known to be loved and cherished as a friend to Humanity, and honored and respected as a noble worker in their cause.

From a co worker and an ex-preacher, R. RAWSON.

PRESTO, MINN., May 13, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The clipping herewith sent you was found in the "Notes and Queries" department of the St. Paul and Minneapolis weekly Pioneer Press of May 8, 1890. It may be "old" to you and TRUTH SEEKER readers in general, but it is news to me. Will you, or some of your readers, giv such information as is at hand concerning the Jesuits' connection with this conspiracy? D. C. JENKINS.

Q. I do not know as you care to be troubled with following up anything quite as unique as the inclosed, but if not too much trouble can you inform me if the statement which is marked is true, or is the statement "St. Paul Press" some paper other than the Pioneer Press? The following is taken from a British paper of March 19, 1890: "Ninety miles northwest of St. Paul, Minn., is a little village of St. Joseph, settled by Roman Catholics, and with a college for the education of priests. On April 14, 1865, at 6 o'clock in the afternoon, two men drove up to the village hotel; one was the Rev. F. A. Conwell, chaplain of the first Minnesota regiment, the other was Horace P. Bennett, a resident of St. Cloud, about ten miles eastward. While Mr. Bennett was attending to the horses in the barn, the landlord, J. H. Linneman, who had charge of the friary and was a purveyor for the priests, told Chaplain Conwell that President Lincoln and Secretary Seward were assassinated. And when Mr. Bennett returned from the barn to the tavern, the landlord repeated the statement to both his guests. This was not later than 6:30 P M., and the assassination of Lincoln did not occur until about 10 P M. Allowing for the difference in time between St. Joseph and Washington, the news of the assassination had apparently reached St. Joseph at least two hours before it occurred! Early the next morning the two men went to St. Cloud, arriving there about 8 o'clock. There Mr. Conwell told the hotelkeeper, Haworth, what he had heard about the assassination of Lincoln and Seward. He told it to several other men. None of them had heard such news. The nearest railroad station from St. Joseph was forty miles, and the nearest telegraph eighty miles. The next day, April 16th, was Sunday, and Chaplain Conwell started for church, where he was to preach. On his way a copy of a telegram was handed him announcing the assassination of Lincoln and Seward. On Monday, April 17th, Mr. Conwell addressed the St. Paul Press the following paragraph: 'At 6:30 P.M., Friday last, April 14th, I was told, as an item of news, eight miles west of this place (St. Cloud) that Lincoln and Seward had been assassinated.' This was published, but the fact being discredited by the editor, another communication was sent by Mr. Conwell, which was printed as follows: 'The integrity of history requires that the above coincidence be established. And if anyone calls it in question, then proofs more ample than reared their sanguinary shadows to comfort the traitor can now be given.' Was this merely 'a strange coincidence?' Emphatically no! The priests of St. Joseph knew that Abraham Lincoln and other heads of the national government were to be assassinated on Friday, April 14, 1865." A. The long article from which the above is merely the introduction goes on to giv some remarkable facts to demonstrate that Lincoln's assassination was the culmination of a conspiracy in which the Jesuits were the leading spirits. The occurrences as stated in the paragraph above quoted are entirely correct, and they appeared in the St. Paul Daily Press of April 27, 1865, as there reported. At that time it was assumed that as J. H. Linneman was a rank copperhead, he was familiar with the secret copperhead orders of the "Knights of the Golden Circle," "Sons of Liberty," and that the assassination of President Lincoln having been decided upon by the copperhead conspirators, the statement made by Linneman was more in the nature of a guess or coincidence than of any actual knowledge that the assassination would take place at the particular time it really occurred.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA., May 17, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The prospect for the glorious cause of Freethought is very encouraging. Life and death is no longer a closed question, but an open one to those who are willing to investigate and think for themselvs. Skepticism is growing. The truth is yet to be discovered. The conflict is between science and religion. The former is the impartial investigator; it is the very truth itself. All admit that life is a mystery. In a talk with some church-members, they admitted the mystery of life and death, but said there must be a God, as things could not create themselvs. They always look up at the skies and the mightiness of the universe and declare those are God's works, overlooking the overwhelming testimony against this absurd, unproved claim that has been and is to-day the great curse of humanity. Christianity is a failure because it is not true. Not one of its claims or promises is fulfilled. When we look to religion for light and satisfaction to our honest questions, we look in vain. That disposed of, what is the course to take in life? We, as Freethinkers, must take the one and only course that Rationalism obliges us to take, either Agnosticism or out and out Atheism. If I was to believe in any future life, I would prefer Spiritualism to Christianity. But the idea of nature's evolution of the spirit to a spirit life is a myth and cannot be proved to be a fact. I cannot believe that such a mighty fact as that of another life for us can be hidden from us. Positivism is the best thing for rational thinkers. Whoever is a Positivist will never be humbugged or liv in a fool's paradise. Christianity's whole teaching is absurd and unjust, and it is imposing on the world claims that it is impossible to prove. Not to believe at all is best. It is a terrible conflict, this mighty controversy between Materialism and myth, reason versus ignorance and bigotry. The mighty inexorable facts and forces of nature are known. The source of life it is impossible to find out. Ever a mystery it must remain. Many Freethinkers believe that nature has provided in her evolutions a spirit life, and Spiritualism is strongly defended by its believers. The idea is beautiful. It is consoling to think we will all meet by nature's provision in a world without God or devil, heaven or hell, all on perfect equality—glorious indeed. But the trouble is that Spiritualism is like the churches—you can know nothing of God's will or any other life unless the priest, preacher, or medium reveals it. These are man-made ideas all around. If there exists a God he would not act partially, but reveal to every living person the truth. We would then be Positivists in the eternal truth. No God can exist without being known. A despairing world is constantly asking his help in misfortune and disasters—millions of prayers but never an answer, the birds of the air happy but man unhappy. Why should we say, Thank God for life, when that God has placed us with the lower orders of life in a world grand and beautiful but full of pitfalls, delusions, danger, unjust conditions, and death, leaving us to our fate? This is the old superstitious teaching; it will do for the negroes and savages, but not for intelligent, civilized men and women. We will, as wisdom teaches, worship the stern, inexorable facts of nature. The universe is God, all in all. Knowledge, experience, is our savior. Giving up any expectation of living after death in our new life of mental liberty, we must act accordingly, knowing that we never can find out any more than we now know about heaven or any future life, and that is nothing. We resolve to liv and die without hope and without fear, for nature's decree is that death is the consequence of living; that we struggle in vain against fate; that we liv only to perish. THOMAS J. CONNERS.

DAYTON, O., May 12, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of May 10th is a letter from Mr. H. Wettstein, of Illinois, in reply to some questions I asked in a former issue, purely for information. I had hoped that some one would reply that was able to lay aside all dogmatic theories and answer in that fair and candid spirit that should govern all argument. I desire to state here that I am and hav been for a goodly number of years a pronounced Agnostic. I hav never been a member of any religious—not even a synagog—organization, hav no sympathy with vicarious atonement, and believe only that which is susceptible of demonstration. But those questions forced themselvs upon me, and not being able to dissect them to my entire satisfaction, I applied for what I then believed and now believe to be the best medium for information, viz., THE TRUTH SEEKER. I emphatically deny having had any idea of "cornering" disbelievers, but if that should result, Mr. Wettstein and I can tender mutual congratulations. However, for disbelievers to ignore or attempt to answer such questions with irony or ridicule, shows their inability to deal logically with the subject, or that they are as dogmatic in their belief (faith) as any follower of the miracle-monger.

Mr. Wettstein then goes on to propound some questions of an infinit nature for a finite being to answer.

1. Can a finite being giv birth to an infinit one? I can only answer, I don't know. If I may presume upon the case, however, I should say that if the infinit got there, the finite would hav to tumble.

2. Are souls or spirits substance? Yes, probably, if there is any such thing as soul or spirit.

3. If so, from what source is this substance derived? I would suggest, nature; but theoretically, philosophically, or practically I know not.

4. As to their occupying space, I would argue both ways according as they are or are not. Perhaps some Spiritualist could answer.

5. Can two or more spirits occupy the same space simultaneously? If they are substance, according to the law of space, no. If they are nothing, I am half inclined to believe they might.

To No. 6, I would reply that when I am able to turn water into wine; curse a fig-tree to death; walk on water; heal the leper; raise hell with a lot of hogs, and the dead from the grave, by faith the size of a mustard-seed, I will answer this question.

But argument does not annihilate the fact that this element of sympathy in nature, coupled with mind, produces the highest ethical conditions among men, and the highest we know of. Hence man is certainly favored by nature to a higher degree than the rest of creation. Hence man is the chief object of creativ power to the present time, so far as we can logically determin. Hence, if creativ power is immutable, it is reasonable to assume that the highest achievements of nature will be imperishable. Else evolution is a lie. I wish it understood that I speak of nature in and around us as we see and partially understand it. If Mr. Wettstein will take up experimental chemistry, he will find after a reduction to the elements of any subject, there has been no loss and there is just as much room for the disintegrated mass as there was for the original. The law of space is that no two bodies of the same density can occupy the same space at the same time, be they material or otherwise. If Mr. Wettstein would consider how heat and light pass through or permeate what we know as solid substance, he might be able to realize how the spirit of man (if he has one) could occupy the material body and not expand it by more than an infinitesimal amount. Certainly the law holds good as well in the one as in the other. The sap going up through the pores of the tree certainly expands the fiber; the sap going up into Mr. Wettstein's head doubtless expands the skull—and there appears to be room for both in the universe. In conclusion, I will affirm that if man has a spirit there is room in his carcass for it, of whatever substance it may be, but I positivly deny having ever seen even the ghost of one. J. S. BRADLEY.

STEUBENVILLE, O., May 17, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Although I hav been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER for some years, my business keeps me away from home a good part of the time, so that I do not get to read it regularly, and I was surprised to see an attack on myself, in company with Mr. Winter, of Cincinnati, and Mr. Swan, of Chicago, neither of whose letters I had seen. In the issue of May 10th, "Mugwump" seems very indignant at something he discovered in those letters, so much so that he is afraid to hav you send THE TRUTH SEEKER to his friends for fear they should see something in them that would hurt their feelings. He says I reviled our naturalized citizens, and want all foreigners debarred from justice. Now, I hav no recollection of mentioning our naturalized citizens. I said something to the following effect. I believe that, in consideration of the evident intention of the Catholic church to colonize this country with the scum of the countries they rule, to get a majority of voters they can rule here, it would be wise to repeal the naturalization laws entirely, as it would be unjust to exempt Catholics alone on account of their religion, although the judgment given by the United States court declaring the constitutionality of the law disfranchising the Mormons on the same account would justify it, and I see no other way to check the power of the pope in this country than to repeal the naturalization laws altogether. "Mugwump" mentions a good many foreigners that hav done good in their day, all of which I acknowledge, but will the deeds of these good men of the past check the power of the pope, if we continue to naturalize the swarms of ignorant men now being dumped on our shores to increase the power of the Catholic church? He says where we hav plenty of foreigners in large towns there we hav liberty, and mentions New York and Chicago as examples. I would ask, is there any city in the world worse governed than New York, already governed by the Irish Catholics and robbed of millions by them? As for Chicago, I blush to mention its name after the brutal murder of the so-called Anarchists, chiefly brought on and managed by foreign Catholic policemen. He acknowledges the infamous history of Chicago does not exhibit enlightened justice, and that the Anarchists were hanged for what was not proved, and asked if I raised my voice against their murder. If he has read THE TRUTH SEEKER as closely as he seems to hav done, he might hav seen, I think, the first letter from a correspondent condemning the outrage, signed with my name. He says I advocate an injustice against foreigners in refusing to naturalize them. I cannot see that they can demand the right of suffrage in this country as a right. It is a privilege granted by the people, and as soon as the people see that it is being used to serve the interest of a political church by men who swear loyalty to the government with a reservation giving a higher allegiance to the pope of Rome, they will withdraw the privilege. And who will hav a right to complain? "Mugwump" is unfortunate in his examples of good government where foreigners rule. He says New York and Chicago hav ninety-one and eighty-seven per cent foreigners and their children, and I presume Milwaukee has about the same proportion. Here is one city giving millions of dollars to the Catholic church; another voting against teaching the English language in the schools, and another hanging people for insisting on free speech, and raising thousands of dollars to defend men who murdered one of their gang for disclosing their dishonesty. This is the outcome of giving the suffrage to men who are governed by priests. The priests demand the privilege of keeping parochial schools so they can raise the children of these foreigners to be as much aliens as they are themselvs, and they are bound to destroy our public schools, and will do it if we continue to giv the suffrage to their tools. The condition of the countries where they hav control is proof enough of what they would reduce the people of this country to if they had the power they are struggling for. We should hav one-half the people, as in Ireland and Canada, ready to cut the other's throat at a moment's notice.

"Mugwump" says these foreigners do not fill the ranks of the gangs of Jesse James, Redmond, or Rube Burrows, or other bands of midnight assassins—with the Clan-na-Gael before his eyes. But I say they do fill our penitentiaries and workhouses by a vast majority.

"Mugwump" calls me a Yankee. He is mistaken. I am a naturalized citizen of these states, and thankful for the privilege. But when I see the country of my adoption gradually being drawn into the popish trap by the aid of these foreign importations, I would gladly giv up the privilege if it was necessary to save the country from what I consider the greatest calamity that could befall it, a majority of Catholics. For this is not like some foreign countries that hav a king or an emperor, who is jealous of the power of the church and does all in his power to check it; a majority here means irresponsible power.

In conclusion I must say to "Mugwump" that ever since I came to this country in 1837, then twenty-two years of age, I hav used my voice and pen in opposition toward great evils. For twenty-five years I did all I could with what little influence I had in opposition to slavery, and was mobbed for it by Irish Catholics. The evils of the saloons I hav always opposed—which saloons, by the way, are mostly kept by foreigners, a majority of them Catholic no doubt. I must also say that from the enmity and evident hatred of "Mugwump" to Masons and Odd Fellows I suspect he is a Catholic in disguise, and I do not wonder he was ashamed to giv either his address or his name in his correspondence with THE TRUTH SEEKER. JOHN DOWNES.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

[A BEAUTIFUL POEM.]

Planting With a Hoe.

They called to me one summertime,
Such long, long years ago,
That we should help them plant the corn
And cover with a hoe.
I loitered with a creeping pace—
I did not like the task,
When flitting up and flitting down
Was all that I could ask.
To dropping corn I would not go;
I hated planting with a hoe.

Soon all the girls and boys were gone—
They started with a shout;
I had no share of work nor play
('Twas sad to be left out),
And wandering slowly past the rye
That pleasant, sunny morn,
All earth was glad and I would try
My hand at planting corn;
And birds sang sweet, while to and fro
We drifted down the furrowed row.

Ere noon the sky seemed all ablaze;
A censer was the sun;
We plied our fans of hickory leaves
And wished the corn were done.
The squirrels mocked us from the trees
That threw their shadows cool,
We sighed for bluebells in the lane,
We even talked of school;
To work at home we'd gladly go,
But how we hated every hoe.

Now all along these checkered years
Of life both sweet and sad,
Our hearts return to morning days
While we were young and glad;
When every sea held but for us
Green isles, and fruits, and ships;
Ere time had tried his tricks upon
Our shining hair and lips:
But fate still beckons down the row
And we must follow with our hoe.

MARY BAIRD FINCH.

Frenchtown, Neb., May 5, 293.

Corner Gospel.

We were going to say gossip at first, and then we thought we would not hav anything of that sort in our Corner, so we said gospel. It is a better word, isn't it?

Gospel is from the Anglo-Saxon godspell, from gôd, which means good, and spell, meaning story, history, good tidings. In the Greek and Latin it means about the same—a message of gladness, or good news. So we hav just as much right to hav a little gospel in our Corner as anywhere else.

What is the nature of our gospel, of course you will ask at once. Well, in the first place, it is that we are all trying the best we can to learn the right, and when we know it to practice it. What for? That's easily answered. For happiness, to be sure.

Now, it is a great thing to be happy, and a sad thing to be unhappy.

What is it to be happy? There are lots of definitions of that word, and perhaps that which one would consider happiness another would reject altogether and choose something very different as a means of joy. So it varies according to condition, temperament, civilization, enlightenment, and so on. We may safely say, however, that happiness consists in a pleasant frame of the mind produced by certain circumstances. For instance, you perform a good act, some little trifle, maybe, that did or did not put you out any, but was of some importance to another, to mother, father, sister, brother, or friend, and pleased that person very much. You are happy in knowing you hav rendered a service that made some one else happy. Thus does happiness act and react.

A woman passing along the street noticed two little plainly dressed girls wistfully gazing into a window where were displayed various kinds of confectionery. Oh, it looked so clean and good! But the children had no money to buy any. "Which kind would you like?" inquired the lady.

"That pretty pink that looks like strawberries," said the child.

The lady stepped inside, purchased a quantity of the pink candy, and made the faces of the two little ones radiant by putting it in their small hands.

"Mamma, you look tired. Let me sweep the floor. You sit down and rest." And the boy took the broom from her hands.

Don't you think a great flood of happiness swept into that tired mother's life at that act of her thoughtful son?

We know well enough it is not right to be peevish, cross, fretful, or sulky.

We are sure it is right to do all the good we can and as little harm as possible.

If we seek the right and follow it—if we liv truly and do the very best we can on all occasions, making happiness and joy for others and thus securing it for ourselvs, improving our minds and learning something noble and beneficial every day—we are making the most of ourselvs as human beings.

This is Corner gospel. S. H. W.

A Secular Union Picnic.

I will hav to write again and tell about the Rogers Secular Union picnic, held at the Silver Springs, near Rogers, consisting of the families of J. W. Frey, H. M. McGaughey, A. Bucklin, R. Thomas, Mr. Frey, from Bontonville; J. V. Mulks, Mr. Castor, J. W. Young, Mr. Hogue, and G. N Bixler. Silver Springs is situated in a beautiful valley, four miles southeast of Rogers, and is such a pleasant and suitable place for a picnic. One thing that makes it seem so nice is a small lake.

At 12 o'clock we partook of a splendid dinner, and spent the remainder of the day until 3 o'clock in the boat riding, and think everyone enjoyed themselvs very nicely, unless it be Mr. Hogue, who lost his balance while boat-riding, and fell overboard and received quite a wetting. We then went to the Frisco Springs, which are situated on the side of a mountain, with very pretty landscape surrounding them.

We then ate our suppers and "fell in line" for home. Just think of ten wagons all in a line. I expect people thought it was a funeral, but rather a jolly crowd. We had to get out several times and help to push up the hills. You may know that we were enjoying ourselvs. Several of the pious creed say that those Infidels are the only people who would go to a picnic on "the Lord's day." But, if it had been on any other day, we could not hav gone, for we were all laborers. I work in the Republican printing office, and can't get away. The bells are ringing and echoing for the church, saying—Come one, come all, for there is yet room in the contribution box for one more penny! Help the preacher all you can!

I am making my letter too long, so will close. EMMA BIXLER.

Rogers, Ark., May 18, 1890.

Origin of Language.

The subject of the origin of language, more than any other perhaps, has been fertil of speculation and attended with less satisfactory results than most other topics. The Jews positivly insist that the Hebrew tongue is the primitiv language and was the one spoken by Adam and Eve. The Arabs, however, dispute the point of antiquity with the Hebrews. Of all the languages, except the Hebrew, the Syriac has had the greatest number of advocates, especially among eastern authors. Many maintain that the language spoken by Adam is lost and that the Hebrew, Chaldee, and Arabic are only dialects of the original tongue. Goropius published a work in 1580 to prove that Dutch was the language of paradise. Andre Kemp maintained that God spoke to Adam in Swedish, Adam answered in Danish, and Eve spoke in French (very like satire), while the Persians believe three languages to hav been spoken in paradise—Arabic, the most persuasiv, by the serpent; Persian, the most poetic, by Adam and Eve, and Turkish, the most threatening, by the angel Gabriel. Erno claims Basque as the language spoken by Adam, and others would make the Polynesian the primitiv language of mankind.

Darwin says, "With respect to the origin of articulate language, after having read on the one side the highly interesting works of Wedgwood, Farrar, and Professor Schleicher, and the celebrated lectures of Professor Max Müller on the other side, I cannot doubt that language owes its origin to the imitation and modification, aided by signs and gestures, of various natural sounds, the voices of other animals, and man's own instinctiv cries."

Boys, Remember This.

Sharp-eyed men of business take note of a boy's general appearance in making up their estimate of what he is worth. A straightforward, manly bearing will help any lad to get his way in the world, while the haphazard sort of a way usually suggests to the observer a corresponding character. Manliness is not a garment you can put on and off like your Sunday coat. It must hav its foundation in the heart, or it will be a flimsy sham that will deceive nobody.

"Can't" and "Try."

Can't do it sticks in the mud; but Try soon drags the wagon out of the rut. The fox said "Try," and he got away from the hounds when they almost snapped at him. The bees said "Try," and turned flowers into honey. The squirrel said "Try," and he went to the top of the beech-tree. The snowdrop said "Try," and bloomed in the cold snows of winter. The sun said "Try," and spring soon threw Jack Frost out of the saddle. The young lark said "Try," and he found that his new wings took him over hedges and ditches and up where his father was singing. The old ox said "Try," and plowed the field from end to end. No hill too steep for Try to climb, no clay too stiff for Try to plow, no field too wet for Try to drain, no hole too big for Try to mend.

The Ungrammatical Policeman.

A man was lying stretched out on one of the benches in the court-house park the other night. It was nearly midnight, the leaves rattled dismally in the autumn wind, the park was long ago deserted, and the bench was anything but a pleasant resting-place, yet the man lay there until a policeman rudely shook his shoulder and said:

"You can't lay here."

"I'm not laying here, sir," replied the man.

"But you are; what'er you givin' me?"

"But I'm not."

"Oh, come off. Get up or I'll call the wagon. You can't lay here, I say."

"But I say I'm not laying here."

"Well, what are you doing then, you blame fool?"

"I'm lying here, sir; not laying; I'm no hen."

"Well, lying then," said the bluecoat in intense disgust; "you can't lie here, then."

"But I differ with you there. I say I can lie here."

"And I say you can't."

"But I can."

"Well, I say you can't," and the officer gave a strong tug at his coat-collar which sent his hat rolling off on to the grass, notwithstanding the explicit orders to keep off.

"My friend," said the weary one, as he arose and prepared to accompany the officer, "you could never follow your calling in Boston. You say I cannot lie on that bench when I hav already proved to you my eminent ability in that direction. Had you remarked to me, 'You may not——'"

But the copper was pulling the box bv this time, and told his ward to "drop his chin."

Correspondence.

BRACKETT, TEX., May 12, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for nearly two years. I hav three brothers and one sister. Just as soon as papa brings the THE TRUTH SEEKER home the first thing I read is the letters in the Children's Corner. I will close for this time, hoping to see this letter in print, as it is my first one. I remain your true friend,

ANNIE GUNDELACH.

ZALESKI, O., May 13, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav read the prize stories in the Corner and think they are well written.

Two pairs of wrens hav built in our yard—one in the horse stable, the other in a little box near the house. The eggs in one of the nests hav hatched. I went around to see the little birds and the old wrens screamed terribly at me. There is a great number of English sparrows around here, and they build wherever they can get a chance.

Some of these birds are building in the garret of our neighbor's house. They go in through a hole in the weatherboarding. We are having fine weather here, but it is cloudy to-day. The trees in the woods are getting green and the late apples are in blossom. I hope Sadie Thorpe will take charge of the collections to be raised for Mr. Cook and Mr. Casey, as our editor suggested

Your little friend, CLÉLIE JAMES.

ROGERS, ARK., May 18, 1890.

MISS WIXON: I want to write and tell of our little city of Rogers. It is situated on the Ozark mountains. We hav nice springs. We are nearly surrounded by them. There are a good many mountain streams running through here. This country is noted for its springs and fruit. It is a regular fruit country. You can raise good garden crops too. Now I will tell about the Secular Union. We had a nice program. It consists of speaking, singing, reading, and addresses. We not only hav the beautiful scenery and very healthful climate, but the town is near a historic ground. It is the Pea Ridge battlefield. There will be a grand reunion. The blues and the grays meet together and enjoy themselvs.

Well, I will close. Hoping to see this in print, I remain,

Your Freethinking friend,

CARRIE BIXLER.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 558 West Madison st., Room 1, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau st., New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.
Emory P. Robinson, Sydney.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

GIRARD'S WILL
AND
Girard College Theology.
AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT,

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist, 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 548pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in the Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.

tf

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Free thinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to. 224pp., boards. $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

REETHOUGHT

IS IT

DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?

A SYMPOSIUM

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAM
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,		THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:

Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?

PRICE 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 333pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Charles Watts's Works.

The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of Mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.

A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.

Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.

The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.

Saints and Sinners—Which? 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Nature and the Supernatural; or, Belief and Knowledge. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3. Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.

NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.

Christianity: Defectiv and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,

OR, THE

Conflict between Reason and Superstition.

BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FESTIVAL OF ASHTAROTH.

A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews.

By A. C. MIDDLETON.

Price, ... 10 cents.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.—[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ANTICHRIST.

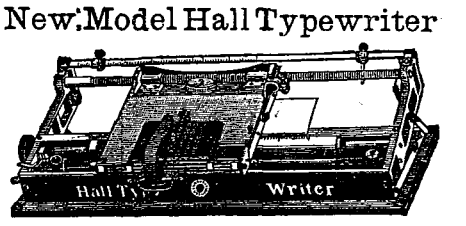
PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

AN ADDRESS

By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE



New York State Bar Association, at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1890.

The only Complete and Authorized Edition.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

New Model Hall Typewriter

The Best Standard Typewriter in the World.
Cheap, Portable, No Ink Ribbon, Interchangeable Type in all Languages, Easiest to learn and rapid as any. Agents wanted everywhere.
WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED. Address

National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. P. O. box 5159.
Send for catalog and specimens of work.

18t10

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3,

By JOHN WILIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies. For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, ... $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Every Liberal Should Read

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.

INTRODUCTION.

Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution; Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.

Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

IRON-CLAD AND MANNA SERIES

IRON-CLAD SERIES.

1 Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
2 Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake.. 5
4 Influence of Christianity on Civilization. Underwood..... 25
7 Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Mueller... 10
8 Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison..... 15
9 Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 10
10 Epidemic Delusions. Marvin..... 10
11 Philosophy of Spiritualism. Marvin..... 50
12 Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural, and Portrait.. 25
13 Essay on Miracles. David Hume..... 10
14 Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
15 Were Adam and Eve our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
16 Why do Men Starve? Chas. Bradlaugh.. 5
17 Logic of Life Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. George J. Holyoake. 10
18 A Plea for Atheism. Chas. Bradlaugh.... 10
19 Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake.. 5
20 Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake..... 5
21 Defence of Secular Principles. C. Watts.. 5
22 Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts..... 5
23 The Christian Deity. Charles Watts..... 5
24 Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts.. 5
25 Freethought and Mod. Progress. Watts. 5
26 Christianity: Its Nature, and Influence on Civilization. Chas. Watts..... 5
28 Thoughts on Atheism. Austin Holyoake. 5
29 Is there a Moral Governor of the Universe? Austin Holyoake..... 5
30 Philosophy of Secularism. Chas. Watts... 5
31 Has Man a Soul? Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
38 Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
39 Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
40 Poverty: Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H.. 10
42 Science and Bible Antagonistic. Watts... 5
43 Christian Scheme of Redemption. Watts. 5
44 Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10
47 Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5

MANNA SERIES.

1 Original Manna for "God's chosen."..... 5
3 New Life of David. Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
4 Why I was Excommunicated. Barnard... 20
5 200 Questions Without Answers..... 5
6 Dialogue between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin..... 10
7 Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian..... 10
8 Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake..... 5
9 New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
10 A Few Words about the Devil..... 5
11 New Life of Jacob..... 5
12 Daniel, the Dreamer. Austin Holyoake... 10
13 Specimen of the Bible: Esther. Holyoake 10
14 Acts of the Apostles: A Farce. A. H.... 10
15 Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. H. 10
16 Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
17 Who Was Jesus Christ? C. Bradlaugh... 5
18 What Did Jesus Teach? C. Bradlaugh.... 5
19 New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5
20 New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh... 5
21 A Secular Prayer. Holyoake. Per doz... 10

On orders for Iron Clad and Manna we will send $1.10 worth for $1; $2.50 worth for $2; $5 worth for $3, and $10 worth for $5.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

BY JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productive of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 Cents.

BIBLE—WHENCE AND WHAT?

By R. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price, $1.

Socialism and Utilitarianism.

By JOHN STUART MILL.

Price, $1.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion.

By BENJAMIN OFFEN,

Formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York.

Price, $1.

APOCRYPHAL NEW TESTAMENT.

The Gospels, Epistles, etc., attributed to Jesus Christ and his Apostles, and not included in the New Testament.

Price, - - - - - - $1.

ASTRO-THEOLOGICAL LECTURES.

By REV. ROB'T TAYLOR.

Price, - - - - $1.50.

THE SABBATH.

By M. FARRINGTON.

A Thorough Examination and Refutation of the Claims of the Sabbatarians.

Price, 10 cents.

RELIGION OF COMMON SENSE.

By PROF. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany.

Price, 25 cents.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

A Historical and Critical Review. With Replies to an Objector.

By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By FRANCES WRIGHT.

Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author.

Price, 75 cents.

AN EYE-OPENER.

"Citateur, Par Pigault."
Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels.

By ZEPA.

Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World

By G. TOULMAN.

Price, - - - - - 20 cents.

ASTRONOMY AND WORSHIP OF THE ANCIENTS.

By GILBERT VALE.

Price, . . . 20 cents.

Autobiography of Robert Cooper.

Price, 15 cents.

BHAGAVAD-GITA.

A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna.

Translated by J. C. THOMPSON.

Price, $2.

BIBLE IN INDIA.

Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation.

By LOUIS JACOLLIOT.

Price, - - - - - - $2.

BIBLE IN THE BALANCE.

A Text-Book for Investigators.

By REV. J. G. FISH.

Price, ... $1.50.

BIBLE INQUIRER.

148 Suriking Self-Contradictions of the Bible, and 152 Marvelous Occurrences.

By A. JACOBSON.

Price, - - - 25 cents.

BIBLE MYTHS.

Their Parallels in Religions of Heathen Nations of Antiquity; Origin and Meaning. Copious Notes and Authorities. "Cyclopedia of Reference." Many Illustrations.

8vo, 600pp., . . . price, $2.50.

BIOGRAPHY OF SATAN.

Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains.

By KERSEY GRAVES.

Price, 35 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE

French Revolution

ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.
By W. S. BELL.
Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.
By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Paper, - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM

AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Cloth, . . . 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

By VOLTAIRE.

Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.
Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.

By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.
15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF

Supernatural Religion.

Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?
By E. E. GUILD.
Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.

Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.
By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.
Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.

BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.
By MOSES HULL.
Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism,

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.
Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.
By A CAPITALIST.
Paper, 493pp., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.

By A. C. LYALL.
Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.

POPULATION QUESTION.

By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.
25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.

How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.
By M. G. H.
Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.

With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.
BY FREDERIC HARRISON.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:

The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.
By George T. Bondies.
With
Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.
By W. T. Purviance.
25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Six Lectures.

Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.

Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court

FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.
By SECULARIST.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.

Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.
By D. M. BENNETT.
(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")
333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MYTHS AND MYTH-MAKERS.

Old Tales and Superstitions Interpreted by Comparative Mythology.

By JOHN FISKE, M.A., LL.B., of Harvard College.

Price, $2.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

Claimed to be Dictated by the Spirit of P. B. Randolph, aided by Swedenborg, through Mrs. F. H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. [Spir.]

Steel Engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

THE KORAN.

A New English Edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the Life of Mohammed, or the History of that Doctrine which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia.

SALE'S edition. Price, $1.50.

HUME'S ESSAYS.

Essays and Treatises. Autobiography and Dialogues on Natural Religion.

By DAVID HUME. Price, $1.50.

SUPERSTITION IN ALL AGES.

By JEAN MESLIER (born 1678),
A Catholic Priest who Renounced Christianity.
Portrait.

Price, pap., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Man's Nature and Development.

By HENRY G. ATKINSON, F.G.S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU.

Price, - - - - $1.50.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-Book.

Thirteen Lectures on the Bible.

By ROB'T COOPER. Price, $1.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs.

By MORRIS EINSTEIN. Price, $1.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE.

With Explanatory Observations on his Writings.

By GILBERT VALE. Price, $1.

A BUSINESS MAN'S SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS VIEWS.

From a Poor Man's Standpoint. Price, $1.

KNEELAND'S NATIONAL HYMNS

Price, cloth, 35 cents.

LETTERS TO EUGENIA.

A Preservative Against Religious Prejudices.

By BARON D'HOLBACH.

Price, - - - - - - $1.

CAREER OF RELIGIOUS IDEAS.

Ultimating in the Religion of Science.

By HUDSON TUTTLE. [Spir.]

Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

LIFE OF PAINE.

By J. E. REMSBURG.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of Its Elements.

By A. S. DE PELLEGRINI.

Price, - - - - - 15 cents.

JEHOVAH UNVEILED.

Character of the Jewish Jehovah Delineated.

Price, 35 cents.

MORAL PHYSIOLOGY.

A Treatise on the Population Question.

By R. D. OWEN.

Price, - - - - - 35 cents.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENNETT.
Price, - - - 10 cents.

IF, THEN, AND WHEN.

Church Doctrines.

By W. S. BARLOW. [Spir.] Price, 10 cents.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.

BY HURLBUT and WAKEMAN.
Price, 10 cents.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.

Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.
Price, 10 cents.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.

By C. B. REYNOLDS.
Price, 5 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. F. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Due Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps. 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Biblo-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell..... 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Capphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 5
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wan Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
20 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson..... 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
13 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism,

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ASTHMA—DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE CURED never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial BOTTLE DR. TAFT BROS., ROCHESTER, N.Y. FREE

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. ROSSITER RAYMOND.
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth. By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SPECIAL SALE
OF
WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2 50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4 50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.50; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels, $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart-shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can hav their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 5th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,
Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union
Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

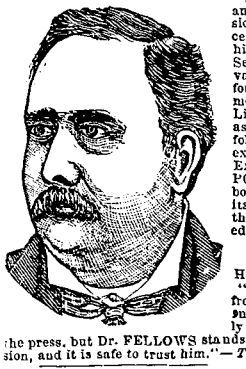
The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club
Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Milwaukee, Wis., Liberal Club
Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 216 Grand ave., (Fraternity Hall). Lecture followed by debates. The public cordially invited.



Brotherhood of Moralists, No. 903, Prairie City, Ia.,
Meets every Sunday in the Liberal reading-room hall at 2:30 P.M. All Liberals are cordially invited. F. V. DRAPER, Cor. Sec.

San Francisco, Cal., Freethought Society
Meets every Sunday evening at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Seats free.

Des Moines Secular Union
Holds regular meetings at Good Templar Hall, Flynn Block, S.E corner 7th and Locust streets. Lectures followed by discussion. Friends from abroad heartily welcome.
FRANKLIN STEINER, Pres.

Portsmouth, O., Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7 P.M. in Grand Army Hall. Lectures, discussions, readings, poems, music and songs. A cordial invitation is extended to all; especially to friends from abroad. Correspondence solicited. J. L. TRENTHART, President. WILL S. ANDRES, Secretary.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indescretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N.J.

Inquiries are frequently received asking what we know about Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, N. J., First, we know that he is a reliable gentleman of rare professional skill, who has earned success by good work. Second that he fulfills all has agreements to the letter. Third, that he has performed cures of hopeless cases that in the olden time his skill would have been called miraculous. Fourth and last, we know him to be an honest man and a stanch Liberal.—The Better Way.

News of the Week.

FOR some time light has been seen glimmering through cracks in the church at New Canaan, Conn., and a spirit story was started. The other night police entered and found in the belfry two partly undressed women and the sexton, the three drunk. They were arrested.

AT Reading, Pa., Rev. Martin Frich has been deposed from the ministry for theft.

AFTER the proposed increase of the German army the peace forces will still be 3 000 men short of those of France.

ON the night of the 23d a gang of tramps set fire to the village of Coolidge, N. M., and all the houses but two burnt down.

COUNT HERBERT BISMARCK complains that "the English seem to think they hav a moral right to all uncivilized countries."

VON MOLTKE says that the next European war will be terrible, and that perhaps the continuance of social order and civilization will be at stake.

AT a late storm in Wayne county, O., hailstones fell to the depth of eight inches, some as large as hens' eggs, and killed hundreds of sheep.

EX-SENATOR JONES, whose eccentric conduct has long drawn the attention of the country, has become thoroughly insane and been sent to an asylum.

IN the latest battle between the French and the Dahomians the latter, numbering 1,500, were all killed. The French had 15 killed and 72 wounded.

AT Shamokin, Pa., fire is burning in galleries connecting with a mine filled with gas, and 500 families whose houses stand above hav fled.

AT Caspar, Wyo., Lee May recently took his paramour, Mrs. Polk, into the country and cut off her nose. A dozen cowboys are on his trail and will kill him if they catch him.

MANY persons are run over in New York streets lately. Last Saturday a sixteen-year-old school-girl was killed by a mail wagon and a five-year-old child was killed by a street-car.

AT Jamestown, N. Y., two Christian Science healers hav been charged by a coroner's jury with contributing to the death of Mrs. Barrows. The coroner will lay the case before the grand jury.

AT Cleveland on the 25th Rev. P. Werber was assaulted by a Jewish audience for speaking against Hebrew doctrin, especially for saying that the Jewish idea of a messiah is ridiculous. A squad of policemen were sent to restore peace.

ON the morning of the 24th a policeman found at the foot of the monument erected to the killed officers on the spot of the Haymarket riot, a quantity of dynamite sufficient to hav destroyed much property and life about. Rain had wet the fuse and prevented explosion. The statements of the police are contradictory, and many think the affair a police plot.

AT Chattanooga on the night of the 24th Henry Hurd, colored, allowed a preacher to escort his wife home and then secreting himself saw the couple do what caused him to spring forth and cut the divine so that he will die. At the same hour Nat Mosely, colored, caught the Rev. James Sloane with his wife and beat him perhaps fatally with a stone.

IN Boston a law that was passed fifteen years ago but not heeded has now been enforced. It forbids the sale of liquor except with food to a man sitting at a table. There has been a purchase of 15,000 tables and 50,000 chairs. When there is a rush of custom men succeed one another by a "Next" as in a barber-shop, while some sit on the floor cross-legged.

ON the 19th President Benham of the Y. M. C. A. of Meriden, Conn., had two boys arrested for pitching pennies on Sunday. They had merely tossed a nickel to see which should black their shoes. They were convicted under Section 1,569 of the Blue laws, and fined $1 and costs, amounting to $5 each. Benham took his witness fees, which helped increase the costs.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

28 Lafayette Place, N.Y.

DAVID MAKETH A FOOL OF HIMSELF.

And he changed his behavior before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands, and scrabbled on the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard.—1 Sam. xxi, 13.

Gems of Thought.

IN her weakness, the church sheltered herself under the absolute power of the Roman emperors; in her strength she laid claim to it herself under the name of spiritual power. We must not here confine ourselvs to a few particular facts. The church has often, no doubt, set up and defended the rights of the people against the bad government of their rulers; often, indeed, has she approved and excited insurrection; often too has she maintained the rights and interests of the people in the presence of their sovereigns. But when the question of political securities came into debate between power and liberty; when any step was taken to establish a system of permanent institutions, which might effectually protect liberty from the invasions of power in general, the church always ranged herself on the side of despotism.—Guizot's History of Civilization.

IT is well worthy of remark that the triumph of toleration and the triumph of civil liberty should both hav been definitivly effected in England at the same time, and should both hav found their chief champion in the same man. Both were achieved by laymen in direct opposition to the church and in the moment of her extreme depression.—Lecky's History of Rationalism.

AT length appeared, afar off from the centers of thought, on the borders of Poland, a plain, simple minded scholar, who first fairly uttered to the world the truth, now so commonplace, then so astounding, that the sun and planets do not revolve about the earth, but that the earth and planets revolve about the sun, and that man was Nicholas Kopernik. Kopernik had been a professor at Rome, but, as this truth grew within him, he seemed to feel that at Rome he was no longer safe. To publish this thought was dangerous indeed, and for more than thirty years it lay slumbering in the minds of Kopernik and the friends to whom he had privately intrusted it. At last he prepares his great work on the "Revolution of the Heavenly Bodies," and dedicates it to the pope himself. He next seeks a place of publication. He dares not send it to Rome, for there are the rulers of the older church ready to seize it. He dares not send it to Wittenberg, for there are the leaders of Protestantism no less hostil. It is therefore intrusted to Osiander, of Nuremberg. But, at the last moment Osiander's courage fails him. He dares not launch the new thought boldly. He writes a groveling preface; endeavors to excuse Kopernik for his novel idea. He inserts the apologetic lie that Kopernik propounds the doctrin of the movement of the earth, not as a fact, but as a hypothesis;" he declares that it is lawful for an astronomer to indulge his imagination, and that this is what Kopernik has done. . . . In all modern history, interference with science in the supposed interest of religion, no matter how conscientious such interference may hav been, has resulted in the direst evils both to religion and to science—and invariably.—Professor White's Warfare of Science.

THE marvelous is the reason of the multitude: the wise contradict in silence, which the multitude prevent them from breaking.—Voltaire.

THE supposition that the terrors of hell-fire are essential or even conduciv to good morals is contradicted by the facts of history. In the Dark Ages there was not a man or a woman, from Scotland to Naples, who doubted that sinners were sent to hell. The religion which they had was the same as ours, with this exception, that everyone believed in it. The state of Europe in that pious epoch need not be described. Society is not maintained by the conjectures of theology, but by those moral sentiments, those gregarious virtues, which elevated men above the animals, which are now instinctiv in our natures, and to which intellectual culture is propitious. For, as we become more and more enlightened, we perceive more and more clearly that it is with the whole human population as it was with the primeval clan: the welfare of every individual is dependent on the welfare of the community, and the welfare of the community depends on the welfare of every individual.—Winwood Reade.

LET us persuade men to be just, beneficent, moderate, sociable; not because such conduct is demanded by the gods, but because it is pleasure to men.—D'Holbach.

THE Truth Seeker Annual
—AND—
Freethinkers' Almanac,
1890.

(E. M. 290.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

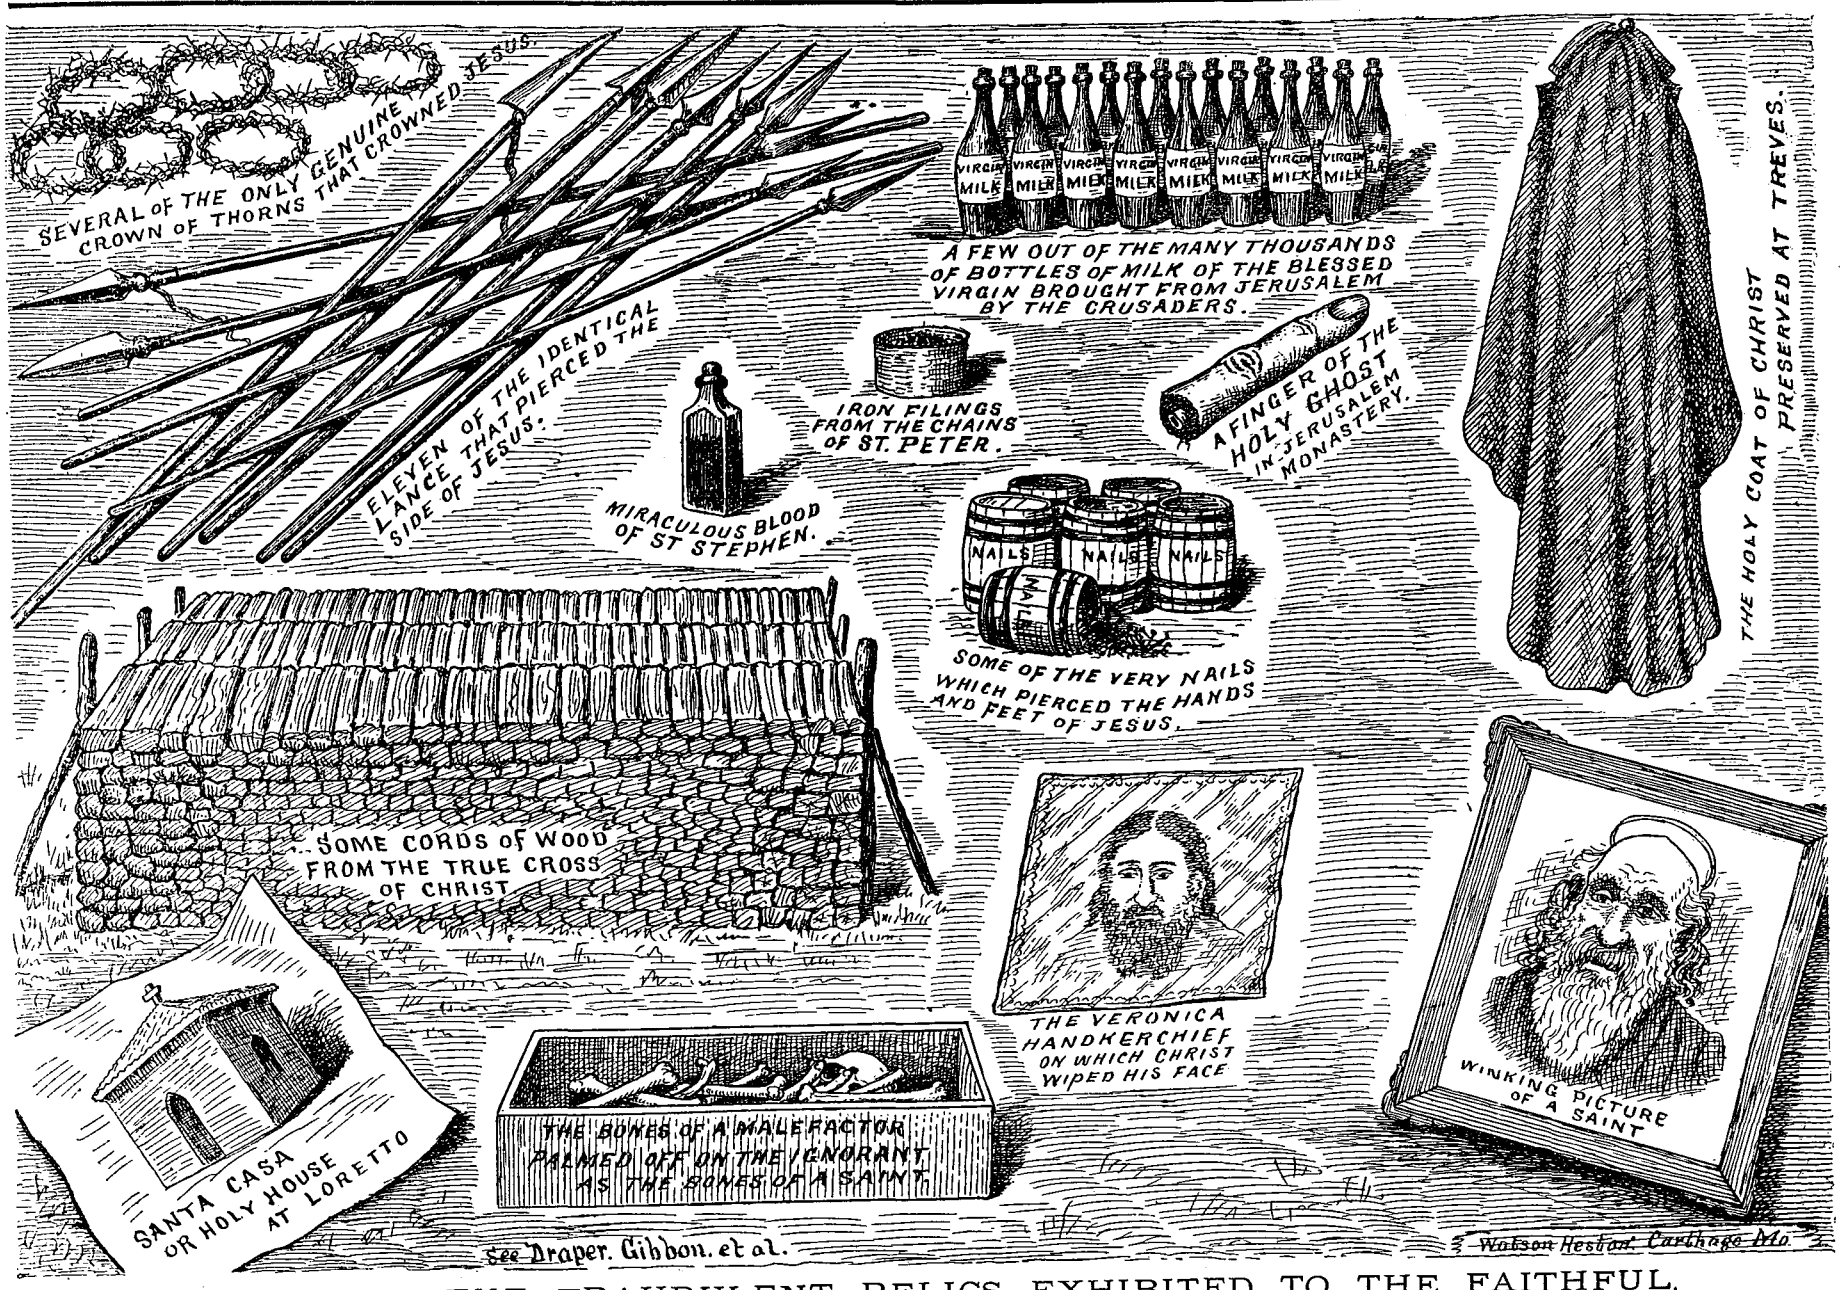
CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Calendar for 1890,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1889,	17
Faded Flowers. Poem by J. E. Remsburg,	24
The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue. T. B. Wakeman,	26
Mostly Fools. W. Stewart Ross (Saladin),	36
Record of the Spanish Inquisition,	44
Dates of the Fabrication of Some Roman Catholic Dogmas,	44
The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a Moral. Helen H. Gardener,	45
The Middle Ages. Illustrated,	69
The Priest,	70
The Supernatural World,	71
The Reformation,	73
Future Terrors,	77
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated,	79
Freethought Journals in the United States,	96
In Search of a Spirit. E. M. Macdonald,	97
Why I Left the Church. H. O. Pentecost,	109

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.



PRICE, 25 CENTS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 17. No. 23. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. { New York, Saturday, June 7, 1890. } 28 LAFAYETTE PL. } $3.00 per year.

A FEW OF THE FRAUDULENT RELICS EXHIBITED TO THE FAITHFUL.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Presbyterian Assembly at Usherville, N. C., has decided that Sunday newspapers encourage evil, as "they flood the land with pernicious literature." Church-members were asked not to countenance them in any way.

LOTTERY tickets seem to be very plentiful in Louisiana just now. The Southwestern Christian Advocate tells of a brother who got things so mixed up that he presented a lottery ticket for admission to a love-feast. Professed Christians are coming to be among the strongest supporters of the lottery, says a local paper.

THE announcement that the Quakers are not dying out is made in a letter from "A Quaker" to Murray's Magazine. During the first half of this century their decline in numbers was very rapid; but for a good many years past the accessions by "convincement" hav been every year so greatly in excess of the secessions that notwithstanding a very low marriage rate and very low birth rate and some emigration, there is yearly a steady though slight increase in Great Britain. In the United States the Quakers, we are told by the same authority, are increasing almost rapidly, especially in the South and West, mainly through accessions from other religious bodies.

THE Sun to Heber Newton: "The Rev. Heber Newton, D.D., preached another sermon on Sunday on the alleged misgovernment of this town. 'The middle classes in New York are being driven out of the city,' said Dr. Newton; and, after that, it is not necessary to consider his sermon much further. In this country there are no classes, let us tell this ill-informed divine. There are no upper classes, no middle classes, and no lower classes. There is no aristocracy, no plutocracy, and no vulgar mob; but only democracy and republican equality, and the natural differences of talent and character. Dr. Newton should reform his own political ideas before he attempts to reform those of others."

THE mischief of Sunday laws is again illustrated by a case out in Indiana. Mr. C. W. Cook keeps a hotel at New Haven. Some time ago he allowed the agent of the Toledo Automatic Cigar Company to put up on the outside of his house one of those little machines into which one drops a nickel and gets a cigar. On Sunday, April 20th, somebody dropped a nickel into the thing, got a cigar, and smoked it. Mr. Cook knew nothing about it, had nothing to do with the machine himself, nor has he any of the profits of it at all, but simply allowed the owner of it to place it there, yet he was prosecuted for Sunday desecration. A change of venue was secured, and the case was tried in Fort Wayne. After deliberating all night the jury brought in a verdict of guilty, with a fine of $1 and costs, and the costs amounted to over $50.

AT a convention of German Catholic societies in Milwaukee Priest Buehler said the Catholic faith in this country must be taught by church schools and no interference with the schools should be allowed. H. J. Spannhorst, of St. Louis, said the Bennett law presented a political question that Catholics could not ignore, because it directly affects the welfare of their institutions. Bishop Flash referred to the Bennett law in his address and upheld the right of the church to go into politics when its interests were attacked. Bishop Katzer said the law practically denied the right of the child to obey its parents by putting its claims before those of the parents. "The friends of the law," he said, "tell us that the child has rights which the state must see are accorded it. But the parents hav more interest in the child than the state. The matter of teaching English, they tell us, is what we are fighting," he exclaimed. "But this is not so. English is now taught in our schools. But if the state has a right to tell us we must teach English, it will soon be telling us what we shall eat and what shall go on the table for the family dinner. This Bennett law was conceived in the minds of Freethinkers and those opposed to the Catholic church and her schools." He was told recently, he said, by a Mason that the Bennett law was first suggested by the Masons. The man said: "I could prove it to you, if I did not put so high a value on my head, that the Bennett law was first agitated in the Grand Lodge of Masons of the state of Wisconsin."

SOME time ago a midwife of Warsaw, Skublinskaya by name, was brought to justice, with several of her coadjutors, for the crime of killing illegitimate children. The woman and her helpers called themselvs "the Society of Angels," and engaged in the atrocious work of "dispatching the little ones to heaven," of course for a certain consideration paid them by the unfortunate mothers or their friends. This fact aroused a discussion in all the Russian papers on the fate of illegitimate children in that country. The mortality of such waifs was found to be over eighty per cent, even among those in the government asylums in St. Petersburg and Moscow. Those asylums keep the children only for a short time, and send them to villages to be raised in the families of peasants. There they die in large numbers. But the number of such children as are "dispatched" directly by professional murderers like Skublinskaya can hardly be estimated. Only about three weeks ago a similar "Society of Angels" was discovered in Vilna. The fate of the unfortunate infants has raised the question as to the causes for the prevalence of such a crime. The papers hint, as broadly as the strictness of the censor of the press allows, that the cruel laws with reference to waifs are at the bottom of the whole trouble. An illegitimate child in Russia, if it ever grows up, has no standing before the law. No matter what his abilities or virtues, if by chance or by natural endowment he happens to be possessed of any, there is no hope and no prospect for him to do any good in the world or for himself. The law will not recognize him as a member of society, and he is tossed about and buffeted until he finds his way into some gang of criminals passing their lives in a mine in the Ural mountains. In view of these facts it is no wonder that sinful mothers regard it as a benefit for their children to be "dispa ched to heaven" before they grow up to liv in ignominy and suffering on earth, and that "angels" like Skublinskaya should be found who hav no scruples to help sinful mothers rid themselvs of their children.

Communications.

An Apology for the "Ex-Reverends."

A writer in the April number of the Freethinker's Magazine makes some caustic remarks concerning that class of persons who, having once been "ministers of the gospel," hav, after due examination, demitted that office, and taken their places among those who battle against the church and its religion. He says, and it will not be denied, that not all these gentlemen left behind them, when they came, the conceited and dictatorial habit they contracted when they were functionaries in the church, and which is so offensiv to those scholarly men who hav been engaged for many years in studying the controversy now going on, and understand it perfectly. Allow me, therefore, to mention a few extenuating circumstances in the case of the "ex-reverends," with the view of showing that no class of men are so exposed as the clergy, by their education and calling, to form the very character that is condemned.

As soon as a "smart" young man, and emotional in his nature, "gets converted" at a revival, and evinces a gift of speaking, either to God in prayer or to his fellow-men in the way of exhortation, he is sent off to a theological seminary to be trained for a minister. The theory is that the whole world is dead in trespasses and sins, and that human beings are plunging by millions, like the cataract of Niagara, into the lake of fire and brimstone; and that the entire race will meet the eternal fate unless they are snatched, like brands from the burning, by a class of men exclusivly and officially appointed for the purpose. He does not go to the seminary to study either religion or theology as branches of the subject of anthropology. He goes simply to learn the tools of his trade, and the lingo of his profession, with the sole view of becoming a successful saver of souls. He therefore hurries through his studies, learning only enough theology to know the difference between his own and other rival sects. He takes entirely for granted the truth of the proposition that the Bible is an inspired book, and that the Christian religion, which he is told is taught in it, is true beyond all doubt. No professor ever tells him that this religion is only one of a number of others in the world, all claiming to be of divine origin; that hundreds of learned men, in colleges and universities, whose lives hav been devoted to history and criticism, refuse to accept it, or any other religion, as supernatural, and giv reasons for so doing which all theological students should carefully examin. The Christian religion, like every other, is either true or false. If true, the hotter the crucible of investigation is, the sooner and more surely it proves itself to be so; if false, the sooner the investigator finds it out, and the better for him. There are scores of books now in circulation, the reading of any one of which, if a student had found it by chance in the library of his seminary, would hav let in a flood of light upon his mind, as is the case when a pair of sightless eyes are couched by a surgeon for cataract. But no such book was to be found. He only got a profile view of religion and theology as it was drawn by his sect, and had no idea of how the other side of the subject looked. He pursued his studies blindfolded, and entered the pulpit blindfolded, feeling that his vocation required him to devote his powers to the exclusiv business of saving lost souls, and to build up the interests of his sect, as the only one out of one hundred and sixty others in this country which is the gate of heaven. This explains the fact that among the scores of thousands of the clergy in this country there are only a few men who could be induced to debate the evidences of Christianity with an Agnostic. The clergyman is conscious that he does not understand the subject. How should he? He never studied it. He is a mere smatterer. His pulpit is not a forum; for that term implies a discussion, in which both sides are heard. It is a chair of authority, and when he speaks it is ex cathedra.

There is, however, one subject on which the young candidate for "holy orders" is carefully instructed, and on which his mind is in a state of receptivity. He is told by his professors and taught by the Bible, and his creed, that, on being ordained, and set apart as a minister of the gospel, he rightfully takes a position higher than that occupied by any other man on earth. The New Testament teaches that Jesus Christ came into the world as an embassador from the mighty sovereign of the universe, to treat with the rebellious children of men, and persuade them to be reconciled to God. After his death, and ascension to heaven, the ministers of the gospel take up the work which he began, but did not finish, and hence are called, by the apostle Paul (in 2 Cor. v, 20), "embassadors in the stead of Christ," whose function in the scheme of redemption is precisely the same as that of himself. The minister is invested with "the power of the keys," and his warrant of authority runs in these words: "Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven" (Matt. xvi, 19). "Whatsoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained." The moment a man receives this commission, signed, sealed, delivered, and recorded by the divine authority of the church, he takes rank above the rest of his fellowmen, and becomes a "divine." The Catholic believer calls him father; that is, he sustains, spiritually, the same relation to the priest that the child sustains naturally to the father who begot him. The Dutch Christians of New York and New Jersey call him "Domine," which is the vocativ of dominus, and means O Lord! implying either the sentiment of worship or the feeling of dependence. The Jew calls him rabbi, which means master; and the rest of the sects call him "reverend," which means a functionary so exalted in office that he is to be feared and revered. Indeed, he may be exceedingly imperfect in his moral character. He may be illiterate, with neither manners nor brains, but such deficiencies do not invalidate his official acts; for these he performs, not as a man, but as an embassador, in the stead of Christ, on the principle of the legal maxim: Qui facit per alium, facit per se. At his own discretion, as is evident from the express language of his commission, he unlocks and throws open the gates of paradise to whomsoever he pleases; and he thrusts into the penitentiary of hell, and locks the door upon, whomsoever he condemns to that eternal fate. Presidents, judges, senators, governors, scholars, scientists, all recognize his authority; and all assemble, if the church be prelatical, in his presence on Sunday, to listen to his reproofs and instructions, to confess to him their sins, and to receive absolution for the same. He announces that the Lord is in his holy temple called the church, and requires the whole congregation to kneel down, and then puts into their lips the humiliating confession, and makes them repeat it, over and over again, that they are all "miserable sinners, and offenders, destitute of all spiritual health." Then the minister plenipotentiary, called the priest—he alone standing, all the rest kneeling—pronounces the absolution; that is, he absolves the guilty sinners from their liability to punishment in hell fire, not for good and all, but only up to the present time. But so utterly abortiv is all this solemn procedure to reform a single one of these miserable sinners, that, by the time the next Sunday comes—in the short space of seven days!—every mother's son and daughter of them all, has backslidden, and become miserable sinners over again, and must go through the same performance of confession and absolution the next Sunday. If, on leaving the church, a man of known blameless life were twitted with his acknowledgment that he could not walk straight a single week, and were asked to enumerate only ten or twelve out of the numberless sins he had just confessed to having committed since he was last absolved, how flat he would feel and look when his conscience told him that he had been slandering his own character, playing the hypocrit before God, and acting as a child before men.

This power of the keys to open and to shut, to forgiv and retain sins, when fully believed by the people, is omnipotent and absolutely divine, as was illustrated a few years ago at the Joliet penitentiary, when a Catholic prisoner rose in revolt against the authorities of the prison, and became so unmanageable that they had to send for his priest. As soon as he saw this divine functionary, with the keys of heaven and hell hanging at his girdle, he wilted down at his presence, and became obedient as a child. The secret of his submission was, a conviction on his part that, if he did not do as he was bidden by the priest, the priest had the power, and would exercise it, to send him to hell if he was killed in the struggle with his jailor; not for his disobedience to the state to which he had forfeited his liberty by his crimes, but for his disobedience to the priest.

The Protestant Reformation did not impair the rights of its own clergy to be the embassadors of Jesus Christ. John Knox, of Scotland, though neither a papist, nor a prelatist, but a Presbyterian, claimed "the power of the keys," and so did the Westminster assembly of divines in their Confession of Faith. In the exercise of this power Knox scolded and threatened the queen of Scots, who was a Catholic, as if she had been no more than a servant-girl. His successors in office did the same thing with Charles I. and II., both of whom they compelled to sign the National Covenants over and over again. Those kings were preached at personally from the pulpit on the Sabbath, and submitted to their regular castigation like whipped spaniels. Precisely the same arbitrary and dictatorial spirit is exhibited by the men of the same creed to-day, in their endeavors to force their dogmas and religious observances by law upon the American people.

The advantage of the Episcopalian over all other Protestant sinners, is that they know beforehand the confession which will be extorted from them, when the little embassador gets them down on their knees in church on Sunday, and will not let them up till they make it and repeat it, nolens volens. In other sects which use no formal, printed prayers, the sinners are worse treated, for they say their prayers by proxy, although totally ignorant of what the embassador is going to say in particular. And how the minister, as mouth-piece for the rest, piles on the agony of confession and repentance, is known only to those who hav been brought up to it. The people acknowledge they hav broken every precept of the decalog, not only once, but in times and ways without number; that they are morally and religiously a mass of wounds, bruises, and putrefying sores, and ought, in the righteous judgment of God, to hav been burning in hell long ago. It is well that these terrible crimes which they charge against themselvs are of the nature of a general, wholesale indictment, without specifications such as are made and sworn to before a grand jury in a court of justice. For if, in the interval of worship, when the divine steps down from the pulpit and becomes human, the preacher would charge personally and specifically that this elder stole his neighbor's horse, that yonder deacon had committed forgery, etc., that reverend gentleman's back would need an emollient poultice on Monday night before he went to bed, for no man who had the least self-respect would allow himself to be so vilified with impunity.

To the "ungodly" these awful confessions of guilt seem to be made in a Pickwickian sense, and are only the part which the people play in the theatrical performance which goes on in the church every Sunday. But to those who sincerely believe the Bible, and hav been brought up religiously, it is anything else but ridiculous. Men who earn their money by their labor and self-denial, giv it away liberally only for that which they deem real and valuable, not for trifles; and the Christians of this country hav permanently invested more than a thousand millions of dollars in churches, and contribute yearly additional millions, to keep up the weekly work of confessing, and receiving absolution for, sins they never committed, and listening to reproofs they never deserved; for it is the characteristic of superstition that, although its forms are so childish and degrading, it sticks to a man like the shirt of Nessus. The next century will laugh at the ridiculous mummeries we practice in this, just as we laugh at the cruel mummeries our ancestors practiced, in putting innocent women to death as witches.

Now, is it any wonder that a mortal man, who naturally loves power and position in society, and whose receptiv mind as a clergyman has been stuffed full of this doctrin of his divine embassadorship and official superiority to all other men, when this claim is acquiesced in by people of all ranks, including the most intelligent, as well as the most ignorant, and when the Bible so clearly and unquestionably teaches the same, is it any wonder, I say, that it should hav generated in the character of the clergyman a proud, conceited, arrogant, dogmatic, presuming, and demanding spirit? Who of all the children of men in every age hav occupied so high a position as the priesthood? They hav put their foot upon the necks of unresisting kings. They hav laid kingdoms under interdict and forbidden the burial of the dead till their demands were complied with. They hold the keys which unlock the gates of heaven and of hell in their hands, and can loose or bind, remit sins or retain them, from the monarch on his throne down to the beggar on his dunghill! The cleric is a god incarnate; for who can forgiv sins but God alone?

If the disease called the "big head" is latent in the constitution of a man could you place him in environments so well calculated to develop these features of character and that supercilious spirit which hav made a maxim of the phrase: "Once a priest, always a priest?" How could a man help being so puffed up with spiritual pride, well nigh to bursting, as when so really a dignified personage as a chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States will in the presence of a thousand onlookers kneel down before this little deputy embassador of Jesus Christ, confess his multitudinous sins over and over again, and remain in that humiliating posture until he receives absolution.

It may be said, and in some instances it is no doubt true, that the ex-reverend is apt to be bitter in his denunciations of the church as a whole, and may thus disturb the equanimity of those amiable heretics who hav never experienced such a radical change as an orthodox minister has to undergo in breaking out of his house of bondage, and getting into a better country of intellectual liberty and truth. But my apology for him is this: A man has but one life to liv in this world, and if he squanders it, by having been made a fool of by the church, and then, after a terrific struggle, he gets his eyes open, but too late to see and repair the damage done to his material interests, he naturally feels very vindictiv toward the organization that has deceived him. When he entered the theological seminary he had all the confidence in his teachers that a little child has in its mother. He was mere clay in the hands of the potter. His professors ought not to hav imposed upon that confidence, but should hav given him a chance for his life by urging him not to commit himself to the service of the church until he has carefully examined the claims set up for its many creeds. I knew of a young man more than fifty years ago who, after a revival of religion, left a law office and went to a theological seminary to prepare himself for the pulpit, and who, on reading Dr. Brewer's lecture on "Cause and Effect," as it were, by mere accident, had his logical mind started on a train of thought that ended in his becoming what is now called an Agnostic. He left the seminary and saved his life by returning to his profession, in which he had a long and successful career. But his case has been held up ever since as a fearful example of the danger of doubt, and the great importance of a theological student cultivating a childlike faith.

When the spirit of truth breathes upon an honest man who has been misled into the false position of a clergyman and opens his eyes wide enough even strongly to suspect that he is on the wrong track, he wheels to the right about face and follows the light which leads him eventually into the ranks of the opposition. He does not begin to swing round the circle of the creeds, changing from one to another, as the inconstant moon passes through her phases. The moment he is convinced that he has been deceived he takes his time and makes a thorough examination, beginning not at the top of the subject, but at the bottom, which is the Bible, and upon which the antagonistic creeds of all our one hundred and sixty sects rest. And having ascertained that this book neither is, nor claims to be, a supernatural revelation, but is the production of many human minds, all fallible, he takes his stand; always, however, keeping the docket of his mind open for any new evidence that may forthcome in the case. Tergiversation or a disposition to box the compass of the creeds is a sign either that a man does not know how to examin a subject, or that he wishes to lay aside the old coat for the sake of securing a new and more comfortable one. But when, once for all, such a man forms a judgment, and finds that the church is no place for him, and he wishes to make amends for the evil he has done in the days of his blindness, by coöperating henceforth with his enlighteners, he ought to set a double guard upon himself, lest, in his conferences with his new brethren, he betray the old clerical taint, and thus bring reproach upon his high character as a Freethinker. A. B. Bradford.

Enon Valley, Pa., April 20, 1890.

First Problems.

Whether force is a product of matter, or matter a product of force; or whether either is but a modification of a single all-pervading principle, we hav no means of knowing with certainty. We may amuse ourselvs and exercise our ingenuity with speculations on the subject, but absolute knowledge here, we must humbly confess, is far beyond our reach. Relying upon the testimony of our senses, we feel assured of our own existence and that of the universe; but as to our origin, and that of life generally in the distant, misty past, we hav scarcely ground for even conjecture. In regard to these perplexing inquiries we are, and from necessity must ever be, Agnostics.

Accustomed ourselvs to devising and planning, and seeing others daily shaping and constructing, various articles of handicraft, we, in the absence of better knowledge, quite naturally conclude that the whole universe and everything it contains were in like manner designed and made by some mighty outside power. If we investigate a little and make a diligent use of our eyes, we cannot help discovering that matter, under proper conditions, is capable of undergoing many curious changes and assuming many wonderful forms, and that it is not the inert, passiv, dead thing that theologians are anxious to make us believe, in order that they may make room for the introduction of their great super-ruling power, their God, their Jehovah, without a general acknowledgment of whose existence these pious gentry's supply of bread and butter would be cut alarmingly short.

When we see a laborer at work digging potatoes, any attempt to persuade us that the spectacle is but an illusion and that some hidden, mighty power is really doing the work, would strike us as being simply absurd. But when we behold matter constantly at work bringing forth before our eyes an endless variety of marvelous results, we blindly ignore the reality and stupidly look to the skies for the cause and explanation. Consider the attraction and polarity of the magnet, the crystallization of certain salts, the heat and increased density caused by the mixing of water and sulphuric acid, the smoke and flame generated by pouring nitric acid on powdered charcoal or spirits of turpentine, and the explosiv force developed from dynamite by concussion. Think, too, of the marvelous likes and dislikes shown by the atoms of different kinds of matter for one another in cases of double electiv affinity, and of the radical changes of color and quality resulting from a union of the same elements in different proportions. Here is an alkali and here an acid, both in liquid form; the former converts vegetable blues to green, the latter turns them red. Mix the two liquids and behold the commotion, the effervescence. Flour, calomel, and arsenic hav all much the same appearance; and the same may be said of morphine, quinine, and strychnine; yet how different their effects on the animal economy. Now, with these few facts before us and a thousand others that could be easily adduced, does it become us, for the sake of bolstering up a miserable theological system, to affirm that matter is passiv, inert, and incapable of self-action?

See the roots of the grapevine grope their way to a neighboring bone underground and twine themselvs around it for nourishment; and then glance at the tendrils of a bean vine reaching out, from the course of their direct growth, to seize hold of some near bush or twig for support. Does there not appear to be something like instinct in these movements? Here is a common egg; examin it and you find an outside shell and its contents. A chemist can analyze these and giv you all their constituent elements and their exact proportions. The egg is nothing but a lifeless mass of matter; yet place it under a hen and the process of evolution begins. In a day or two a mere speck of blood appears, which gradually enlarges; and then presently there is evolved the first visible sign of life, a pulsatory motion. Little by little the contents undergo a change and assume the outlines of a perfect organism, having all the complicated corporeal machinery necessary for the existence of a new living creature. Now, at what point in the mysterious process of incubation were sensation and consciousness brought into play? Were these, with life, added, injected as it were, by some mysterious external power? Or were they, like the fragrance of a rose and the color and flavor of an orange, the mere natural outcome of growth, of evolution? In other words, is matter capable of producing such phenomena of itself, or do phenomena owe their existence to a power exterior and superior to matter? We actually see matter doing these things, while we never catch the slightest trace of the exterior, superior power.

The resources and potencies of matter seem to be amply sufficient to giv all the results, evolve all the phenomena, that so strike and puzzle our minds. Why one organism should grow and develop sensation, consciousness, and mind, is not more marvelous than why another should grow and develop color, flavor, and fragrance. The common assertion that the atoms of matter, in all such instances, act passivly and in obedience to a law impressed upon them by a higher power, fails to explain the mystery; for, if they are capable of receiving such an impression, capable of acting in obedience to a law, then are they capable also of acting and doing things on their own account and of themselvs. There is really no necessity for any higher power; for its presence, so far from explaining anything, would only augment the mystery and perplexity of existence. If the wonders of the universe seem to necessitate the hypothesis of a creator, the still greater wonders of such a creator, by a parity of reasoning, would require a second creator of the first, a third for the second, ad infinitum.

But, objects the Theist, if you discard the theory of a creator, how can we account for the presence of life in the world, particularly life in large creatures, such as the elephant, whale, etc.? If, as you allege, nature is all sufficient, why do we not now hav ocular proof of her powers in starting into existence new forms as she did in the beginning?

These questions hav weight and are well put. How are they to be answered? The truth is, they cannot be answered except in a mere speculativ way. It is just here that we are all obliged to be Agnostics. However, a little theorizing on the subject may be admissible.

All the works of nature are influenced and modified by conditions—that is, by the free play of cause and effect. Every phenomenon depends upon the existence of some condition, making that phenomenon a necessity. The existence of the atmosphere is a condition, making the descent of rain and the ascent of smoke possible. Heat, moisture, and soil are conditions making possible the germination of seeds, the growth of plants, and consequently the existence of animal life. A few years ago news came that, during an eruption of a volcano on one of the East India islands, there was thrown out with the lava an immense mass of ice. If this was a fact, in that crater, then a mighty chemical laboratory, were generated the gases, the conditions, similar to those used in our modern ice factories. On the ground on which a brush heap has been burnt, the growth is always different from that surrounding the burnt space, because the heat of the fire and the deposit of ashes work a change in the conditions of the soil on that spot. There is, in the life of every woman, a limited period, coupled with certain conditions, during which child-bearing with her is possible. Now, not unlikely, the life of a world is somewhat similar to that of a woman, being subject like her to varying conditions which render it prolific in one stage of its existence and barren during the remainder of its time. Geology discloses to us the fossil remains of gigantic monsters of various kinds that lived during the early ages of the world. Physical conditions at that time favored their production and existence. As the world advanced in age these conditions gradually underwent a change, a change fatal to these huge creatures, and consequently they became extinct. With facts such as the foregoing before us, and with thousands of others that might be added, what great violence is done to probability when we conclude that life in all its forms originated during the prolific period of the world's age when all favoring conditions were present?

Nearly everybody is at a loss to understand how the stupendous universe, which is infinit and never had a beginning, could exist without having had a "Great First Cause." Now, as in limitless space there can be no first mile or league, and as in eternity there can be no first year or century, so in the endless chain of causation there can be no first cause, not even a "Great First Cause." The truth is, when we attempt to introduce a "Great First Cause," we only shift the difficulty without removing it; we vainly seek to explain one mystery by resorting to another infinitly greater. Besides, a personal God such as priestcraft presses upon the masses for their acceptance and worship, cannot exist, for one evident reason—the endless evils afflicting the world. If this God, as is alleged, is all-wise and all-powerful, and if, at the same time, he cherishes a father's love for all his helpless children, how comes it to pass that none are happy, and that all are liable to accidents and misfortunes, and sorely afflicted with want, misery, and ailments of every kind? The clergy craftily draw a curtain over the dark side of the picture of human life, while they industriously point out and praise the bright side, which, by the way, is also very much the smaller. Oh! how they delight to expatiate upon the beneficence of their imaginary God, whose providence includes not only singing birds, fragrant flowers, and gaudy rainbows, but also thistles, thorns, insect pests, venomous reptils, mad dogs, wild beasts, heat, cold, drouths, floods, famins, tornadoes, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, tidal waves, shipwrecks, lightning, conflagrations, deadly contagions, epilepsy, consumption, rheumatism, leprosy, cancer, blindness, deafness, idiocy, insanity, bodily deformities, wars, murders, robberies, the Bible, the parson, the devil, and an endless hell. All these and many other like blessings are vouchsafed for man's enjoyment and happiness; and yet, despite these clear, convincing proofs of our adorable heavenly father's love and tender mercy, "the fool sayeth in his heart there is no God!"

Brookhaven, Miss. S. F. Smurr.

Freethought in Sweden.

Writes Capt. Otto Thomson in Fritänkaren No. 9:

When the paper was ready for the press there arrived from Langholmen the painful news that Victor E. Lennstrand is critically sick.

A Swedish prison is in itself in many respects sufficiently trying to break down the health of a man possessing a constitution far stronger than Victor E. Lennstrand. In January, when his first term of imprisonment expired, his friends prevailed upon him to ask for a respit. His imprisonment was the outcome of two separate judgments; would not justice then require that he serve it out in two separate terms? As he truly says, six months' imprisonment is a far harder punishment than twice three months. But no, it was not in the interest of "the powers that be" to make the imprisonment easier for him to bear, rather the opposit. He was advised to ask for mercy. But Lennstrand himself would hear nothing about this. He desired justice, not mercy.

Later he hoped that the opinion of Göta Hofrätt would make itself manifest, so that the talk about "general offense" would cease, inasmuch as no one that had suffered under "general offense" could be found. But when the supreme court in another decision, ignoring Göta Hofrätt's binding and self-evident judgment, sentenced him to three months' additional imprisonment, then he received a severe blow. His dearest hope, soon again to enjoy liberty, was thus frustrated. Other annoyances, but of smaller importance, increased his melancholy.

Shall adversity really hav succeeded in setting a brake to the activity of this man, "whose courage was like the roaring mountain stream?" We will unto the very last hope that such is not the case. But remember, you members of the supreme court, you "guardians of justice," and all you other supporters of throne and altar, that even if you should really succeed in closing the mouth of Lennstrand, then from all his adherents all over the country shall come a cry of pain, a cry sufficiently powerful to arouse not alone the sense of justice, but also much else which now slumbers. In place of Lennstrand shall thousands of mouths speak. And even if you also should succeed in silencing them, there is one whose mouth you cannot stop, and this one is Truth.

This article of Captain Thomson deserves some explanation. From letters received from Sweden it appears that the sickness Lennstrand suffers under is an attack of that most fearful of all diseases, prison-consumption, brought about by the miserable sanitary conditions of Langholmen prison. We will, in one of the first numbers of The Truth Seeker, giv our friends a faithful description of the treatment accorded Lennstrand, a treatment which, if kept up only a short time, will, we fear, add another martyr to our cause. Another sentence pronounced and Victor E. Lennstrand will leave Langholmen prison either as a mental wreck or as a corpse. Let a shower of sympathetic letters rain down in our friend's prison cell. Remember that his sufferings are for the cause we all cherish. Lennstrand must be preserved.

Captain Thomson speaks as though the persecutions are due to courts and clergy. He is right to some extent. But let it be remembered that these officials are but tools in the hand of that individual who at present occupies the Swedish throne, this modern Philip II., King Oscar. It has been in his power to show justice, for no judgment in matters pertaining to "blasphemy" is valid unless the king's signature is affixed. Hence it is the king we ought to censure more than anyone else. The attitude of Captain Thomson is, however, plain enough to anyone acquainted with the conditions of monarchical Europe. G. N.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President, . 305 2d ave., Asbury Park, N. J.
E. B. FOOTE, Jr., Vice-President, 120 Lexington ave., New York city.
T. B. WAKEMAN, Vice-President, 93 Nassau street, New York city.
J. E. REMSBURG, Vice-President, ... Oak Mills, Kan.
JULIET H. SEVERANCE, Vice-President, . . . Milwaukee, Wis.
IDA C. CRADDOCK, Secretary, 930 North 17th st., Philadelphia, Pa.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Ida C. Craddock, Broad and Columbia ave., Philadelphia, Pa.
TREASURER, F. C. Mende, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Notice.

Mr. F. C. Mende, treasurer of the society, will be traveling this summer, and does not wish letters and remittances addressed to him or to his order, but to the order of Ida C. Craddock, secretary, at the new office, Broad and Columbia avenue, over the bank. The undersigned may be addressed at No. 305 Second avenue, Asbury Park, N. J., until September 25th, after this date. Please make a note of this.

R. B. WESTBROOK,
President American Secular Union.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 2, 1890.

Our "Church Taxation" Pamphlet.

Our pamphlet on "Church Taxation" has—to use a favorit expression—"just boomed." The first edition of a thousand was exhausted long before our own members at the x y z end of the alphabet were supplied. Strangers—Liberals and il-Liberals—hav written for a copy; and having read, hav written for more. Blue Presbyterians hav nearly tumbled over themselvs to praise it to us—even if they do as quickly bob up to their old prim attitude at the mention of secularizing the public schools. However, we are preparing a neat little tract for these last, which we hope to issue in midsummer, if—if—our friends will please help us out financially.

For, with it all, the receipts for these pamphlets hav not been as enormous as they should hav been. Our little scheme for raising money by charging a nominal sum for them has not been a success. Some 850 of the thousand hav been given away free—for we hav not gone into the publishing business yet. And, as we should probably giv away a still larger proportion of the forthcoming second edition, we hav concluded to say so, and to print on the cover, "For free distribution." We trust that our friends will, therefore, see the need of furnishing the wherewithal to help along the "free distribution" of this very effectiv pamphlet.

Through the generosity of a few of our members, we hav now in the treasury just about enough to cover last month's deficit, to pay this month's running expenses, and the bill for printing the forthcoming second thousand of "Church Taxation." It is doubtful if we shall hav enough left over to pay even for the envelopes and postage necessary to send out this edition.

This second edition has been enlarged by the following addendum by Dr. Westbrook, which explains itself:

After the circulation of an edition of one thousand copies of this pamphlet, an article in favor of the exemption of church property from taxation has appeared in the Magazine of Christian Literature, and has been copied in Current Comment and Legal Miscellany, a law magazine published in Philadelphia. The article was written by Rev. Henry C. Vedder, one of the editors of the Baptist Examiner.

It is to be regretted that he could not discuss this subject without calling those who differ with him "fanatics and visionaries," and that he should so freely use the words "enthusiasts," "nonsensical," and "absurd," and accuse all who would tax church property in common with other property with "oppressing religion."

1. Mr. Vedder urges that no government taxes all property, and illustrates it by the fact that there are certain articles on the free list in our tariff schedules; and he thence concludes that churches should be free from tax. This is such a perfect non sequitur that it needs only to be stated to be refuted. A few articles—because we cannot produce them or for other reasons—are admitted duty free; and therefore church property—bona fide real estate—should not be taxed! The two things hav nothing in common, as there is a great difference between tea, which we must import, and real estate, of which the churches generally get the choice corner lots.

2. The writer says no unproductiv property should be taxed; that it would be "overburdensome;" and he contends that church property is "essentially unproductiv." He at the same time admits that, in the province of Quebec, from $100,000,000 to $120,000,000 of church property is entirely free from taxation, and that the estimated income is $10,000,000.

But is church property unproductiv? How about Plymouth church, which, in Mr. Beecher's time, rented its pews for about $50,000 per annum? How about many other churches, the pews of which rent annually for from $5,000 to $50,000? Then, too, the pews in many churches are sold and the title passes with the estate of the holder and is estimated as so much money. Besides, the churches tax these pews themselvs. The great majority of churches, from a business standpoint, are merely mutual clubhouses, kept up for the delectation of rich men and their families. It is common to speak of "how many millions" such and such churches "represent." These churches would not be "overburdened" by paying just taxes. Ministers are "hired," and those who can "draw" best get the most salary. But suppose, for the sake of argument, that churches are essentially unproductiv in an economic sense. What then? Houses occupied by their owners produce no income of money. Vacant lots are unproductiv. Should these be exempt from taxation? Then look at the millions of acres of "unseated lands" producing not a dime of income. Should these lands be exempt from taxation? But it is said that they pay to hold, because they increase in value. And does not church property increase in value also? But there are cheap houses of worship, like the Friends' meeting-houses and the mission churches. Well, then, the taxes would be low and could be paid as other expenses are paid.

In some parts of the United States an attempt has been made to compromise this matter of unjust exemption by taxing all churches estimated above a certain value. Of course this puts a premium upon fraudulent assessments. In the state of Washington, no churches are taxed unless they are worth at least $5,000; and the result, as we are informed, is that no churches are estimated at more than $4,000. A similar dishonesty in the assessment of churches prevails in California.

Few, if any, church buildings are exclusivly devoted to religious worship. Pews are owned and rented, and are as really individual property as are dwelling-houses which are rented. Concerts are advertised, and a money admission is demanded and received. Oyster suppers and strawberry festivals are held, and refreshments generally are sold. Bazars are conducted, and quasi-gambling is often practiced at church fairs.

Any church which rents a pew or takes a collection is not strictly a public charity; and it should be required to pay the ordinary tax. Exemption from taxation is a kind of "deadheadism," of which honorable men should be ashamed. It is of the same incongruous character as is the custom of full-grown ministers traveling on the half-fare tickets of young children, and expecting a discount on everything they purchase, because they are ministers. Such things hav a very stultifying influence upon all concerned. The church is rich, and becoming more and more extravagant; and it ought to pay its way in the matter of taxes.

3. But Mr. Vedder urges that building a church increases the value of adjoining lots, and that, therefore, the church should pay no taxes. Sometimes the price of property advances, near the location of a church, but not always. The building of a church sometimes depreciates adjoining property. The ringing of bells, the collection of undesirable people, the holding of meetings every night in the week, make the adjoining lots undesirable. But the erection of a fine private dwelling always increases the price of adjoining lots. Shall we exempt from taxation all who make improvements and thus increase values? The building of a factory, or the opening of a mine, always advances the price of property for miles around. Shall their enterprising owners be exempt from taxation in consequence?

4. But the most plausible argument made by Mr. Vedder is, that churches promote morality, and that therefore they should be exempt from taxation.

The general influence of the churches, in the main, is good. Some persons, it is true, very much doubt whether certain theological dogmas taught both in Catholic and Protestant churches tend to a true morality. But it is not necessary to discuss this question here and now. It cannot be denied, however, that a large majority of the most atrocious defalcations of the day are committed by church-members, or by those who attend church. The morality of church-members, evidently, is not higher than that of the world in general. Church-membership givs no credit in bank; and many persons who never attend church are known as models of integrity and uprightness. But it does not follow that, because the influence of the church is in favor of morality, it should not share in bearing the expense of maintaining good government. A pure morality should favor honest taxation. It should not shirk its share of the public burden, on the ground that it labors to promote public morality. Many other corporations do the same, and do not ask to be paid for it. Why should not the public press claim exemption from taxation, on the ground that it advocates morality, and that its influence tends to elevate the people?

Dr. Wayland was right in the opinion that the church has no claim on the state for the incidental moral influence which it may exert. The reputed head of Christianity is said to hav found in the fish's mouth money with which to pay tax unto Cæsar, and has thus given the church an example not to shirk the duty it owes to the civil government.

In the state of Maryland, at the present time, the Jesuits and ultra-orthodox Protestants are working hard to secure a constitutional amendment in favor of church exemption. This will lift the matter out of the reach of ordinary legislation, and will be a serious blow to the cause for which we are working—total separation of church and state. Ten thousand copies of "Church Taxation" ought to be distributed throughout Maryland as soon as possible. It would open the eyes of many now indifferent or opposed to church taxation; and the circulation of this little pamphlet might entirely change the result of the battle, and score a victory for us.

A New York friend writes that a copy ought to get into the hands of every member of Congress and of the state legislatures. But, dear friends, these things all cost money; and how can we do the work of the American Secular Union without funds?

Liberals, you hav long been anxious to strike an effectiv blow at the union of church and state; and right here is your chance. Here is a society—the American Secular Union—organized and ready for effectiv work. It has already made a favorable impression on just the class of allies that we need—the Liberal Conservativs. It will shortly lay before the world a book which will show how morality can be taught in the public schools without religious dogma. It has now before the public a tract on "Church Taxation" which is acceptable even to many of extreme orthodoxy, and which wins converts and causes discussion wherever it goes. It is also preparing a tract on "The Bible in the Public Schools," which, we hav reason to believe, will produce an equally telling effect on conservativs. And yet the very people for whom the American Secular Union is working, are starving it out, by withholding supplies!

American Secular Unionists, here is an opportunity for practical work in behalf of our cause. We need money for the "Church Taxation" pamphlets; and we need it quickly. Who will help?

IDA C. CRADDOCK,
Corr. Sec. American Secular Union.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 29, 1890.

The Woman's Liberal Union and the American Secular Union.

R. B WESTBROOK, ESQ.: In answer to your public charge against the Woman's National Liberal Union convention held at Washington, D. C., February 24th and 25th, let me say: While it may not hav been in all respects conducted according to the rules of parliamentary practice, could you not generously allow some latitude for the inexperience of women in such matters, who hav not hitherto had the benefit of either political or ecclesiastical training of such a kind as to make them skilled in the management of large bodies of people?

Was it not wise to avoid the danger of failure in the very object for which the convention was called, by allowing a general discussion of the resolutions and other matters, through the tactics of ostensible friends, but in fact covert enemies? For you are well aware that the "wolf in sheep's clothing" is everywhere to be found, and especially might be suspected in a gathering of women whose pronounced purpose was the enfranchisment of their class from theological and political oppression.

While the action of individuals in that meeting may not hav been satisfactory to all, those are personal matters and hardly fair subjects for newspaper criticism, and hav very limited connection with either the principles or aims in view.

The Secular Union, which has been established for a long time, undoubtedly has done much to enlighten the public, yet with all the length of time it has existed, it cannot claim to hav attracted the attention of people to any such marked degree as has the one so recently formed through the untiring efforts of the able and honest Matilda Joslyn Gage.

Let me ask you, is it not more creditable to any person, of either high or low degree, to hav himself, through his efforts, built even a hut, which might afford comfort to some living thing, than to hav destroyed the grandest work ever constructed by man or woman?

The fundamental principles which were promulgated at the meeting will liv when of every person who was present it will be said, as of the knights of whom Coleridge sung:

> Their swords are rust; their bones are dust;
> Their souls are with the saints, we trust.

While the society there organized may not exist to accomplish all they hoped and desired, the efforts of any person to destroy the effect will place him in very much the same position as was Mrs. Partington when she undertook to sweep the tide back with a broom.

As it has been your pleasure to severely criticise the president and officers of the Woman's National Liberal Union in their manner of conducting that convention, it is my pleasure to cite you the following letter, which will convince you that from others than yourself we hav received praise and encouragement of no small importance. That you will eventually bring your little band into our union, onto a platform so broad that there is no room for a Jesuit to stand and play into the hands of the church, is my prayer, with Truth for authority, not authority for truth.

Webster, S. D., May 13th. MARIETTA M. BONES.

OBJECTS OF THE WOMAN'S LIBERAL UNION.

1. To assert woman's natural rights of self-government, to show cause of delay in the recognition of her demands, and to promote fearlessness in the denunciation of such cause.

2 To preserve the secular nature of our government and the principles of civil and religious liberty now incorporated in the federal Constitution, and to arouse public thought to the imminent danger of a union of church and state through a proposed amendment to the Constitution, the object of which is to recognize the Christian religion as the foundation of our government and the true basis of our laws.

3. To show that the real foundation of the church is the doctrin of woman's inferiority by reason of her original sin—a doctrin which we denounce as false in science and its foundation a theological myth.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That it is essential to the life of the republic that the purely civil character of the government be maintained and that church and state be forever kept separate; that the legal foundation of our government is not any creed of Christendom, nor any authority of the church, nor a divine revelation, but it is simply the consent of the governed; that the state has not grown out of the church, but should outgrow the need of any church and be henceforth and forever independent of the church.

Resolved, That the efforts now made by the Christian party to bring religion into politics in order to place a religious amendment in the Constitution of the United States must be resisted, because the success of such efforts would make the church the arbiter of the legislativ functions of the government and place dangerous irresponsible power in the hands of the priesthood.

Resolved, That according to the principles of the government of the United States of America, the church and state are and must be forever kept separate. The state should govern its civil affairs, giv its protection to every form of religious belief and secure freedom from molestation to every sect in the exercise of its religious sentiments, and therefore any amendment to the Constitution proposed by the so called Christian party in politics is destructiv of existing civil liberty and should be energetically opposed.

Resolved, That the real endeavor of the Christian party in politics is to establish a papacy in place of the present secular form of government of the United States; that a papacy does not alone mean a pope's one-man power in the church, nor a claim of papal infallibility; nor an immoral pretense of power to bind or loose sins, nor the celebration of mass, nor use of holy water, nor the making of marriage a sacrament, nor the doctrin of extreme unction, nor consecrated ground for burial, nor the claim of any number of sacraments, nor the establishment of parochial schools to teach children what they cannot understand, nor a celibate priesthood, nor any form of theological doctrin regarding heaven, hell, or purgatory; but that a papacy is any church asserting divine authority for its teachings and therefore claiming the right to exercise civil power—whether that church call itself Roman, Greek, Anglican, or Protestant.

Resolved, That the centralization of power, whether in the church or in the state, is dangerous to civil liberty and to individual rights, and therefore all attempts toward such centralization, either in church or state, must be constantly and firmly opposed.

Resolved, That as our nation is composed of people holding various and conflicting religious views, Roman Catholics d sagreeing with Protestant forms, both disagreeing with Jewish rites, and the Agnostic holding to no defined system, therefore it is wrong and unjust to impose religious instruction of any kind upon the pupils of our common schools, and in simple justice to all people we denounce and oppose every kind of religious instruction in our public schools.

Resolved, That the great principle of the Protestant Reformation, namely, the right of individual conscience and judgment, heretofore claimed and exercised by man alone, should also be claimed and exercised by woman, who in her interpretation of the scriptures should be guided by her own reason and not by the authority of any church or creed.

Resolved, That as the first duty of every individual is self-development, the lessons of self-sacrifice and obedience taught woman by the Christian church hav been fatal not only to her own vital interests but through her to the vital interests of the race.

Resolved, That every church is the enemy of liberty and progress, and the chief means of enslaving woman's conscience and reason, and therefore as the first and most necessary step toward her emancipation we should free her from the bondage of the church.

Resolved, That the Christian church, of whatever name, is based on the theory that woman was created secondary and inferior to man and brought sin into the world, thus necessitating the sacrifice of a savior. That Christianity is false and its foundation a myth which every discovery in science shows to be as baseless as its former belief that the earth was flat.

Resolved, That morality is not theology, but has a basis independent of "Thou shalt," and "Thou shalt not;" that right is right and wrong is wrong, not because any being in the universe so declares, but in the nature of things, the origin of right being in truth and not in authority.

Resolved, That we seek the truth, come whence it may and lead where it will; with the Greek Plato we deem nothing so beautiful as truth; with Hindoo Mahrajah we believe no religion can excel the truth; and with the American Lucretia Mott we accept "truth for authority and not authority for truth."

COLONEL INGERSOLL AND THE WOMAN'S LIBERAL UNION.

NEW YORK, April 25, 1890.

MRS MARIETTA M. BONES, Webster, S. D., My Dear Madam: Accept my thanks for your letter of the 25th of March, indorsing the resolutions passed by the Woman's National Liberal Union, at Washington, D. C. I agree most heartily with the first resolution—that it is essential to the life of the republic that the purely civil character of the government be maintained. I also agree with the second resolution. I am perfectly satisfied that if they ever succeed in getting God into the Constitution, there will be no room left for the folks. So the fourth resolution meets with my approval. I am hardly sure that I am for all of the fifth. I do want to see power centralized to that extent, in the general government, that it can protect all the citizens of the republic, and protect them in whatever state they may happen to be. The sixth is undoubtedly right. No one should be paid for guessing in the public schools. Teachers should be called teachers, because they teach what they know, and what some other person can learn. The seventh is a self-evident proposition. The eighth is absolutely true. The church has taught to women only the slave virtues. Women hav always been crawling on the floor of the sanctuary, eating the dust of the temple, and it gave me the greatest pleasure to know that a few women, at least, had outgrown the priest slavery. I hav said a great many times, and I say again, that the parasite of woman is the priest. So the ninth resolution contains a good, wholesome truth. Every church is the enemy of liberty—always has been and always will be as long as it is orthodox. Woman has been the slave of the church, and not only the slave of the church but the supporter of the church—the caryatides beneath the altar are women. So the tenth resolution is historically true. Nothing can be more absurd than the fall of man through the temptation of woman; nothing more idiotic than the doctrin of the atonement, and nothing more absurd or immoral than the idea that an innocent man can suffer for the guilty and in that way make the guilty innocent. The eleventh resolution is all right, and is exactly to the point. Nothing is right or wrong by reason of a declaration. A thing is right or wrong according to its consequences, as these consequences exist in the nature of things. Right and wrong do not depend upon authority. We ascertain them by experience—but they exist independently of all authority—in the nature of things. Your last resolution is good, but I like the word "happiness" better. I seek happiness, come whence it may. I deem nothing so beautiful as happiness. No religion can excel happiness. But the last quotation, from Lucretia Mott, "Truth for authority, not authority for truth," is splendid. All I can say, my dear madam, is that I wish you and your Liberal Union the greatest possible success. We never shall hav a great generation of men until there has been a generation of great women. When babes sit in the lap of philosophy there will be hope for the world.

I am, with great respect,

Yours sincerely, R. G. INGERSOLL.

Text-Books in Our Public Schools.

The state board of education will receive proposals on June 3d for the furnishing of such text-books as may be hereafter enumerated for the use of the common schools of the state for a period of five years from and after the 1st day of September, 1890.—Newspaper announcement.

The following letter tells its own story:

WASHINGTON SECULAR UNION, 2104 SIXTH STREET,
SEATTLE, WASH., May 24, 1890.

TO THE HONORABLE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON, Gentlemen: The Washington Secular Union having been organized, and through its efforts a fund provided to enforce and protect all individuals in the "absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment," as guaranteed by Art. 1, Sec. 11, of the constitution of this state; and further to see that "no one shall be disturbed in person or property on account of religion," and that "no public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercise, or instruction," in violation of the provisions of said section; the Washington Secular Union, believing that your honorable board has the public school system of the state and its success uppermost in your hearts while about to receive bids for and determin what text-books shall be used in the public schools of this young state for the next five years; and believing that your responsibilities as a board, under your oath of office, as well as your consciences as men and individual duties as citizens of the state, will cause you to protect and guard, as well as bow in humble obedience to, the rights referred to and guaranteed by the constitution, desires to call your especial attention to the fact that many of the text-books now in common use in the schools contain quotations from the Bible, known as King James's version, and Bible stories and other matters of religious sentiment, belief, and instruction.

You will observe that in our constitution the exclusion is not of sectarian instruction, etc., but of any religious worship, exercise, or instruction, and that under our constitution there is not even room for the contention made in the case on the relation of Weiss, et al, vs. School District No. 8, in the city of Edgerton, Wis., decided by the supreme court of Wisconsin, March 18, 1890, and reported in Vol. 44 of the Northwestern Reporter, at page 967, to which your attention is respectfully called.

If any school-book offered or proposed to be used in any public school of our state contains any religious instruction or sentiment we respectfully request your honorable board to reject any and every such book.

Absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment is guaranteed to every individual, and this necessarily includes every individual scholar at our public schools, and this can only be effected by the use of text-books entirely free from any religious belief or sentiment.

And we earnestly solicit that in the discharge of your duties as the state board of education you will remove all excuse for the hierarchy of Rome, or any other power or person, to make just attacks upon the public schools and school system of the state, on account of the practices in and conduct of the public schools in violation of the most sacred rights guaranteed by the constitution.

We desire to call your attention to the fact that in many of our public schools the teachers, in direct violation alike of the letter and the spirit of the constitution, open school with religious worship, exercise, and instruction, as happens to suit the humor, faith, or caprice of the teacher, or local school board, in profound ignorance of, or utterly ignoring, the fact that Washington is now a state, with a bill of rights and a constitution.

At Linden, Whatcom county, the public school exercises are opened by one of the teachers reading a chapter from the King James's version of the Bible; the Lord's prayer is recited by the entire school; after which a gospel hymn is sung.

Reading the Bible is religious instruction. Reciting or repeating the Lord's prayer, or any other prayer, is religious worship. Singing gospel hymns is religious exercise. Why should such unlawful proceedings be tolerated, when even the most fanatical and bigoted religionist, equally with the Liberal, is interested in the strict enforcement of the bill of rights? For if it is right and just to hav the Protestant Bible read, the Lord's prayer repeated, and gospel hymns sung at the opening of public schools, when or where Protestants are in a majority, then it is equally right and just to hav the Roman Catholic Bible read, prayers to the Virgin Mary repeated, and hymns or parts of high mass sung, when and wherever Roman Catholics are in a majority.

The officers and members of the Washington Secular Union are each and all most stanch and devoted friends of our public schools, regarding them as the bulwarks of American independence, and the only sure reliance for the perpetuation of our republic.

We should deeply deplore being compelled in the defense of the sacred rights, so wisely and justly guaranteed by our constitution, of absolute freedom of religious sentiment to every individual, to appeal to the courts, because we desire to avoid the religious strife, hate, and bickering such litigation would engender.

We therefore ask the action of your honorable board, believing you hav the right, power, and duty to avert such litigation, or appeal to the courts, by officially notifying all public school officers of the state of their duty, and your determination to enforce obedience to the Constitution, affording absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment and belief to every individual.

To insure which we ask you to positivly prohibit the use of any book containing any religious exercise or instruction, or that indorses or inculcates religious belief or sentiment, in any public school in the state.

Respectfully yours, etc.,

R. WINSOR, President,
C. B. REYNOLDS, Secretary.

A Catholic Opinion of The Truth Seeker.

ALBANY, N. Y.

FRIEND P.: I must be candid. If you wish to preserve my intimacy, or even friendship, you must discontinue sending to me any more TRUTH SEEKERS. An article therein May 17, 1890, headed "Questions of the Day," by one Louis N. Crill, Jr., has put me out of my growing ill temper. You ought before this to know that I am a Roman Catholic, and therefore cannot change.

What could be more irreligious, and I might add wicked, than the writer, whoever he be, to speak so unfeelingly of the few cautionary and affectionate remarks of our holy father of the Vatican in Rome to the Catholics in the United States; also our holy father's cautionary remarks on the danger of unguarded thinking, the same leading to doubt, damnation, and hopeless Agnosticism?

This Mr. Crill seems to take pleasure in raking to the surface the roasting in Rome of Bruno and several other religious disturbers. Why cannot these be forgotten? At any rate send no more TRUTH SEEKERS. What, hav you forgotten the divine mission of our holy father at Rome? Why, Friend P., the publishers of your seditious paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, ought to be thankful that they are permitted to print such a heretical paper. Yours, P. W.

Mr. Editor, I must admit I made a great mistake; for I really thought I had watched this infant thinker from his babyhood so closely that he could be trusted to do his own thinking; but am mortified to observe that he is still under the ban of the holy father at Rome. A SUBSCRIBER.

COMPARATIVLY speaking, be not anxious to avoid poverty. In this way the wealth of the universe may be securely invested. What a pity if we do not liv this short time according to the laws of the long time—the eternal laws! Let us see that we stand erect here, and do not lie along by our whole length in the dirt. Let our meanness be our footstool, not our cushion. In the midst of this labyrinth let us liv a thread of life. We must act with so rapid and resistless a purpose in one direction that our vices necessarily trail behind. The nucleus of a comet is almost a star.—Thoreau.

MEN cannot conceive of a state of things so fair that it cannot be realized. Can any man honestly consult his experience and say that it is so? Hav we any facts to appeal to when we say that our dreams are premature? Did you ever hear of a man who had striven all his life faithfully and singly toward an object and in no measure obtained it? If a man constantly aspires, is he not elevated? Did ever a man try heroism, magnanimity, truth, sincerity, and find that there was no advantage in them? That it was a vain endeavor? Of course, we do not expect our paradise will be a garden.—Thoreau.

AT the Liberal Club, next Friday evening, Mr. T. B. Wakeman will speak of "The New Temperance Moves in Science and Sociology," and a collection will be solicited for the benefit of Mr. Harman's defense fund.

Communications.

Know Your Rights, and Dare Maintain Them.

One day last week, in the land office in this city of Seattle, a rabid fanatic, Ex-Judge Green, questioned and badgered a witness for nearly an hour in regard to his religious opinions, denouncing him for disbelief in God and in future rewards and punishments, endeavoring to bring the witness into contempt and derision on account of his Infidelity. The ex-judge caught a Tartar. The controversy was interspersed with roars of derisiv laughter at the ex-judge, who finally subsided, most ignominiously defeated in the theological discussion by the Infidel farmer. Not alone Green, but the counsel on the other side, the lawyers in attendance, the witnesses and spectators, all appear to hav been oblivious of the rights and privileges guaranteed witnesses by the constitution of the state. Liberals of Washington would do well to cut out the following extracts from the constitution of the state, adopted at Olympia Aug. 22, 1889, and paste in their hats or on their bedroom looking-glass. Send a dollar postal note to the Truth Seeker Company for a few extra copies of this number, mark the extracts from the constitution, and send the papers to the clergyman and school board of your town. It would be a great help to them.

Art. 1, Sec. 6. The mode of administering an oath, or affirmation, shall be such as may be most consistent with and binding upon the conscience of the person to whom such oath or affirmation may be administered.

Sec. 11. Absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment, belief, and worship shall be guaranteed to every individual, and no one shall be disturbed in person or property on account of religion, but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state. No public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercise, or instruction, or the support of any religious establishment.

No religious qualification shall be required for any public office or employment, nor shall any person be incompetent as a witness or a juror in consequence of his opinion on matters of religion, nor be questioned in any court of justice touching his religious belief to affect the weight of his testimony.

Sec. 29. The provisions of this constitution are mandatory, unless by express words they are declared to be otherwise.

No person in the state of Washington can legally be required to take any form of oath, or any special form of affirmation other than such as shall be most consistent and binding upon their conscience. "I affirm I will speak the truth," etc., or "I affirm the contents of this affidavit," etc., is all the law demands. No person when making such affirmation need raise the hand, bow the knee, sit, stand, or assume any particular position other than such as best suits their own pleasure and convenience.

No judge, lawyer, juror, or any other person has any right, in any court of justice in this state, to question a witness or juror in regard to his or her opinion on matters of religion. Such questions are an unwarranted impertinence and the only proper response to any such question would be, "Mind your own business!"

Any law enforcing Sunday observance, or the religious observance of any feast, fast, or holy day, would be unconstitutional.

Absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment, belief, and worship shall be guaranteed to every individual.

No one shall be disturbed in person or property on account of religion.

Hence no person pursuing any legitimate occupation or lawful pleasure or pastime on Sunday can be disturbed because of anyone else's religious sentiments. What is lawful on any one day of the week is equally lawful on every other day of the week.

The constitution positivly defines the only acts which can render a person liable to be disturbed in person or property, to wit, acts of licentiousness, or practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state. The constitution does not read—inconsistent with the peace and safety of the church.

No public money or property can be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship.

Chaplains in our legislature, state prisons, workhouses, insane asylums, or state militia may not be paid from the public funds. If such persons exercise their calling it must be charged to Jesus, and he or his followers must pay, and not the state.

No public money or property can be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercise, or instruction. Bible reading is religious instruction. Repeating the Lord's prayer, or prayer to any God, is religious worship. Singing gospel hymns is religious exercise. Our public schools are sustained, the teachers paid, from public money. Therefore any such religious worship, exercise, or instruction is positivly prohibited by the constitution.

Exemption from taxation is actual appropriation of public money. What is it but to giv or appropriate the amount of taxes due to the parties owning the property exempt? If some society was indebted to the Truth Seeker Company $100, and the company should release or excuse the society from paying it, would not the company hav given or appropriated $100 of its funds to that society? If the society had paid its honest debts, and then the company had donated to the society $100, would it not amount to exactly the same thing? The society is $100 better off, and the company $100 out, by the operation. The Hughes revenue bill is now law. Thanks to the indomitable energy and self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of our treasurer, Geo. M. Boman, and the efforts of the Washington Secular Union, that bill was amended so that it now decrees that all church property, private schools, and hospitals shall be taxed at full valuation. And this is in strict accord with the constitution, and every principle of right and justice. All schools other than public schools are run for gain, for the aggrandizement and benefit of the parties who control them. Even if no charge is made for tuition, they are only doing propaganda work, building up and strengthening their denominations at the least possible cost. Hospitals, and other so-called charitable institutions of the churches, are established and kept up not for the good of the public at large, but to glorify, gratify, and benefit the particular sect that owns them. We rejoice at all good accomplished. We honor and gladly giv full credit to the benevolence that prompts many Christians to giv generously to sustain charitable institutions. So long as they sustain them with their own money they hav an unquestionable right to manage and conduct them to suit themselvs—to admit or exclude whom they please. But when they fail in the business, when they hav to obtain public money taken from the pockets of the people, when the public sustain by taxation charitable institutions, they should also hav voice in the management, and the benefits of the institution be afforded to all taxpayers alike without discrimination or preference.

Methodists, Presbyterians, and Episcopalians are echoing the cry of the Catholics, "Away with all godless schools!" They are in full sympathy with, and determin like the Catholics—if they cannot rule they will ruin.

When our public schools conform to the law, and refrain from all religious exercise and instruction, and all parochial and other sectarian schools are taxed at full valuation the same as other money-making institutions, these latter will soon cease to flourish to the injury of our public schools and loss of practical education to the rising generation.

But eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. The church folks at Lynden persistently violate the law, and arrogantly defy us to secure its enforcement. They are seeking to establish a precedent that will be used to justify religious worship in every school in the state.

Had all the Liberals of the state had duly presented and impressed upon them the advantages, the necessity, the duty, to promptly enroll themselvs as members of the state organization, the dues would hav provided sufficient funds. But as it is, the directors are, under the pressing emergency, compelled to appeal for financial help. Money is wanted now, at once, without delay.

Thanks to the experience and wondrous skill of Dr. H. Doane, the power of electricity judiciously applied, and his medicated baths, the old machinery is once more in repair, and although considerably reduced in bulk, I am able to work. The doctor suggests it would greatly help me to recuperate to lay aside all work and worry, and go fishing. I would, but I lack faith that I should find gold or silver pieces in the mouths of the fish I might catch to carry on this war for right and justice. Shall appeals to the Liberals of the state prove equally futil?

The board of directors of the Washington Secular Union are not asking for funds for the benefit of any individual, any society, any sect, locality, or faction, but to secure to every citizen of the state equal rights and privileges; to compel obedience to the law; to preserve our public schools from destruction; to release from the chains of superstition and the dominion of priestcraft all the children of the state.

Once we obtain a decision of the supreme court all religious exercises and instruction in any public school in Washington end for ever.

The most devout Christians are as much interested as Liberals in the enforcement of the wise provisions of the constitution, prohibiting any religious exercise or instruction in our public schools, for if it is Protestant Bible, Lord's prayer, and gospel hymn, this year, it may be Catholic Bible and high mass next year. Why has not the one as much right in our public schools as the other?

The law of the state is all on the side of right, but the arrogant assumption, the lawbreaking proclivities, of priests and parsons render necessary an appeal to the courts to enforce their obedience to its just requirements. No other remedy will avail.

Let those who desire the work done send in their contributions, giv evidence just how much they really desire the greatest good to the greatest number, and prove their Liberalism is a solid, genuin reality, not veneered Christianity, beginning and ending in frothy declamation "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."

The affair cries haste, and speed must answer.

Genuin Liberal, you who love freedom, right, and justice, if you hav not already done so, please now, to-day, by next mail, send your contribution to G. M. Boman, treasurer Washington Secular Union.

C. B. Reynolds,
Secretary Washington Secular Union.

Seattle, Wash.

A Presbyterian Sabbath Excursion.

What will Sabbatarians say to the following printed postal card issued by Presbyterians at the national capital?

You are cordially invited to attend the services, to be conducted by the pastor, incident to the laying of the corner-stone of our mission chapel at Charlton Heights (Branchville), on Sabbath afternoon, May 18th, at 4 o'clock. Train leaves the Baltimore and Ohio depot 3:25 P.M., returning leaves Charlton station at 6 o'clock. Tickets at reduced rates may be obtained at room 14, 1,003 F street, N.W., till 4 o'clock Saturday. We will expect you.

Sincerely yours, F. L. Middleton.

Some Masonic Correspondence.

CHARGE AND SPECIFICATIONS

Against John R. Bolton, member of Aztec Lodge No. 3, set for trial in and on the 24th day of November, 1887. I, Frank W. Smith, J. W., do hereby accuse Brother John R. Bolton as follows:

CHARGE:

Non-payment of dues. Specification first: Brother John R. Bolton has been a member of this lodge for the past thirteen years, during which time he has paid dues to the amount of $2 75, has been remitted; he is now in arrears $12. Specification second: Brother Bolton has openly repudiated the holy Bible, which has always been given to Masons as the rule to their guide and faith, an act inconsistent and contrary to the principles of Masonry, and ask that a trial may be had upon the above charge and specifications, according to the law in such cases made and provided; and in doing so, I declare that I am impelled only by a sincere desire to do justice, and that the honor of Masonry be preserved.

In witness whereof, I hav hereunto set my hand, this 31st day of August, 1887.

Frank W. Smith, J. W.

REPLY.

Lincoln, N. M., Nov. 8, 1887.

To the W. M. and Brethren Aztec Lodge, No. 3, A. F. and A. M., Las Cruces, N. M.: I received your communication dated 27th ult., embodying charges and specifications against me, as a member of the lodge above named, and as I will not be able to answer personally, I can only submit the following defense.

As regards the first charge, "Non-payment of dues," I hav only to say, that I did not consider myself justified in paying any taxes, for the support of an institution the doctrins for the government of which I could not believe.

As regards the second charge, "Not believing in the doctrins laid down in the Holy Bible," I will say that I offered no opinion on that book until I had read it all through; and, after having done so, I found it to be a book of lies, contradictions, obscenity, murders, blasphemies, and impossibilities; a book without sense or meaning; a book of the composition of which a ten-year-old school-boy would be ashamed; a book which caused the Thirty Years' war in Europe, and the Inquisition in Spain, and a book that has been the cause of more wars, bloodshed, and crime in the world for the past sixteen hundred years, than all other causes put together.

Can any man of common sense and reason, and with ordinary intelligence, read the following named chapters and verses in the Bible, and say that he believes such vile stuff to be the word of God? Gen. xix, 30–38; xxx, 1–24; Deut. xxiii, 1; 2 Kings xv, 16; Job xl, 16, 17; Ezek. xliv, 25.

I hav no other fault to find with the Masonic order. I consider it a good institution, and if I resided near the lodge, where I could attend the regular meetings, I hav no doubt but that I could soon cause the brethren to dispense with that cursed book called the holy (damned) Bible.

Fraternally, Jno. R. Bolton.

Lincoln, N. M., Jan. 17, 1888.

Secretary Aztec Lodge, No. 3, A. F. and A. M., Las Cruces, N. M., Dear Sir and Brother: On the 8th of November last, I forwarded to you my "defense" to the charges preferred against me by the lodge, to which I hav, as yet, received no reply. Will you therefore kindly inform me of the decision of the lodge in the matter and oblige, Yours fraternally, Jno. R. Bolton.

Hall of Aztec Lodge, No. 3, A. F. and A. M.
Las Cruces N. M., March 1, 1888.

Jno. R. Bolton, Esq., Lincoln, N. M., Dear Sir: I am instructed by the W. M. to inform you that, at a regular communication of this lodge, held Feb. 22, 1888, a trial was held on charges preferred against you, and being found guilty of un-Masonic conduct you were expelled from the order.

Very respectfully, CHAS. METCALFE, Sec.

The foregoing are all true copies of the originals in my possession. JNO. R. BOLTON.

Mr. Heywood in Court.

From the Boston Papers of May 23d.

There was a very extraordinary scene in the municipal court this morning when Mrs. Angela Fiducia Tilton Heywood, the wife of E. H. Heywood, stood upon the witness-stand and told how she had brought her children up and what she thought should be done in all families.

Mr. Heywood, who liv̆s in Princeton, this state, was in court charged by Agent Chase, of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, with publishing obscene articles in one of his publications. In the court this morning he was accompanied by George W. Searle, his counsel, Mrs. Heywood, Mrs. Heywood's venerable mother, and two small children. The society was represented by Mr. Chase and B. P. Johnson as counsel.

The room was nearly filled when the case opened, and a number of women made energetic efforts to get in. But Judge Curtis had intimated to the court officers that women were not wanted, and when one did get in at one of the doors Officer Hudson promptly escorted her out of the other. There were a great many lawyers present, and a number of favored municipal court habitues found their way to seats.

The publications complained of, which are certainly not such as people of refinement would read or hav others read, to say the very best of them, were shown and put in evidence. Mr. Heywood claimed that his paper is a reform paper, and that he believes in telling the truth absolutely in all things. He called several witnesses as to the genuinness of his reform projects, and then his wife was asked to take the stand.

To describe Mrs. Heywood is to picture a motherly woman of fifty years, who is so well preserved and fresh-looking as to appear not more than forty. There are few, if any, lines about her regular and intelligent features, and her voice is low and sweet, and so curiously modulated as to seem affected. But there is no affectation discernible about her manner, or in the mental effort clearly shown in giving her testimony. And her testimony was probably as remarkable as any ever heard in a Massachusetts court of justice. She was not reticent; on the contrary, she was eager to express her views, and it was so evident that they were sincerely and truly her views that a silence fell upon the assemblage as they listened. But men whose ears are daily attuned to police court stories, and whose eyes are bold and searching, lowered their heads and sunk their eyes before the incongruity of the speaker—gentle, motherly, and earnest—and the ideas she advanced, which, to conventional minds, were shocking in the extreme.

And the scene was all the more impressiv because the witness was a woman of intelligence. and had opinions she knew how to express most effectivly.

It would be quite impossible to describe the subjects Mrs. Heywood testified on, but they included the education of children as early as possible in lines of knowledge generally withheld from them. In this education the methods of procedure, as advocated by the witness, included some acts which were startling in their description. The pictures which are named in the writings complained of, the witness considered absolutely necessary for the proper education of children. Mr. Heywood, who conducted the examination of his wife, would ask her frequently during her testimony whether these acts as related, and the instructions, were not done and given solely for the proper and necessary instruction of children, and the solemnity of the mother could not well be excelled, as she would reply:

"Most assuredly. Nothing but that, and that specifically."

Mrs. Heywood said she was the mother of four children, the eldest of whom was twenty-three and the youngest four years of age. The sweet-voiced witness paused a moment, after describing her methods, and then said:

"I hav thought I hav reared four elegant children worthy of establishing a race. I hav never withheld any information from my children. I hav taught them not only the truth but the moral obligation of it. I consider that my teaching of my children has been my sacred duty."

And then her voice trembled and her eyes filled with tears as she continued:

"It grieves me to the core to see you men fly at each other so."

Heywood's examination of Agent Chase, whom he called as a witness for the defense, was exceedingly amusing, and unless checked by the judge he would hav covered the whole question of morals as discussed since the world began. Heywood was a picture of an old-time "reformer," and talked about Garrison and other Abolitionists. He wore the collar and tie, frock coat and low-cut vest of 1861, and his hair and the cut of his beard made his head look something like that of Columbus.

Mr. Chase was very earnest and careful in his replies, and answered some very searching questions without showing any spirit of unfairness. Mr. Heywood led the witness over the usual series of questions about the Bible and his belief in it, and Mr. Chase rather got the best of him on that line. Here are some of the questions he asked:

"You regard the Bible as the word of God?"

"I do."

"Are there not many passages in the Bible that are improper?"

"I read every passage in the Bible to my mother before I was twelve years old."

"Is it possible for children to be brought into the world without parents?"

"Not in any other way that I know of at the present time." Then referring to some of the printed passages complained of, Mr. Heywood asked:

"Do you object to those words as printed?"

"In a newspaper, yes."

"Any published arraignment of such a crime?"

"I mean in a newspaper for public circulation."

"Then you consider it obscene to print physiological facts for the common people, and not when printed in large and expensiv books?"

"I should not consider a medical book as obscene, but a book hawked around the streets I should."

"Did you ever know this publication to be hawked around the streets?"

"No, sir."

"Are you a paid agent of the society you represent?"

"I am paid for my services."

"Hav I ever harmed you?"

"Not that I am aware of."

"Hav I ever harmed any person to your knowledge?"

"I never knew of anyone."

"Hav you ever heard of an immoral word or deed on my part, or on the part of my family?"

"Never."

"Hav you ever heard of anyone that I hav injured or corrupted?"

"No, sir."

After recess the court reassembled, and Mr. Heywood began an argument in defense of his publication and his doctrins.

He quoted other books containing similar passages, beginning with the Bible. He recounted his previous trial, imprisonment, and pardon, quoted extracts voicing favorable opinions from Senator Hoar and General Butler, and said that in his opinion the present social conditions, particularly in regard to the marriage relation, should be reformed, and this was his way of attempting to aid that reform. The Word, he said, was after the style of William Lloyd Garrison's Liberator, with a department open to opponents.

After telling what he thought of Agent Chase, and his persecution of him, Mr. Heywood said that he hoped Mr. Chase would liv long enough to despise himself for his present work; he made an eloquent plea for free speech. "If this whole question of the personality of the individual is not to be recognized," said Mr. Heywood, "what is to be the result? The Word is a reform paper, which favors obedience to truth. Much matter is admitted to its columns that its editors do not approve, but they insist that both sides shall be heard. The relations of children to parents is regarded as the most important part of the movement, and there are thousands of cases where the child has fallen because of the lack of just this kind of knowledge."

The defendant closed with a strong plea for justice.

At the conclusion of Mr. Heywood's one and a half hour's address, Mr. Searle, his counsel, presented a brief argument for the defense.

In his argument for the prosecution, Attorney Johnson began by stating that Anthony Comstock had nothing to do with this case, and that no attempt had been made to try it in the newspapers, as alleged.

He summed up the evidence bearing upon the specific articles (in the Word) mentioned in the complaint.

"The question is," he said, "is this man guilty of using language that is prohibited by the statutes? The wording of section 18, chapter 207, would seem to explicitly say that he was guilty.

"There is some language so bad and vulgar that the legislature thought it unfit to put into the statutes, and it is this kind of language that we claim this defendant is guilty of using.

"Now, what is obscenity?

"In a case like this it is for the court or jury to decide, and there are many cases to be cited where this question has been very clearly settled. It doesn't follow that a picture which can lawfully appear in a published medical work can be copied into photographs and sold upon the streets. The whole burden of Mr. Heywood's eloquent argument is the admission that he was breaking a law for what he thought was a wholesome and laudable purpose, but there is no possible legal excuse for doing such a thing. There is nothing to justify Mr. Heywood in using language that is too vulgar to be put into the statutes or the decisions of our courts. His whole attitude shows that he glories in thus continually defying the laws of the land."

At the conclusion of Mr. Johnson's argument Judge Curtis took the papers and continued the case until May 31st.

A One-sided Game.

A Man with a Shotgun said to a Bird: "It is all nonsense, you know, about shooting being a cruel sport. I put my skill against your cunning—that is all there is of it. It is a fair game." "True," said the Bird, "but I don't wish to play." "Why not?" inquired the Man with a Shotgun. "The game," the Bird replied, "is fair, as you say; the chances about even; but consider the stake. I am in it for you, but what is there in it for me?" Not being prepared with an answer to the question, the Man with a Shotgun sagaciously removed the propounder. There is a moral in this somewhere when you come to think of it.—Investigator.

No doubt there is a moral in the above. The situation is that of the church going a-gunning for Liberal editors, and the gun is "constructiv obscenity," which, like a shotgun, can be made to cover a wide mark, and is pretty sure to maim the victim however reckless the aim or besotted the gunner.

E. B. FOOTE, JR.

The Sunday Opera.

Time: Sunday afternoon. Place: A Gotham drawing-room.

"Were you at church this morning?"

"Yes; I went to St. Ambrose's to hear the new soprano. I was disappointed in her voice. It has not strength enough to fill that church."

"Do they hav a quartet choir there?"

"No, they are all women and all blondes. They sit up in front of the congregation and look right pretty."

"Oh, I like the music at St. Athanasius's. They hav four organs, you know, all connected by electricity, and a brass band, besides the loveliest bass. He used to sing leading parts in the McShout Opera Company."

"You go to the Church of the Crucifixion, don't you?"

"No; I never go there any more because I don't like the tenor. He does flat so horribly. Last time I was there he sang 'Comfort ye my people' fit to make you squirm."

"Oh, they don't spend enough on their music to hav it really fine. St. Athanasius givs the organist just twice the salary."

"Well, I like boys' voices every time."

"Oh, I don't. You see it often happens that what a crowd of boys can sing the congregation can sing. Now I can't bear to hear a lot of untrained voices joining in."

"You may well say that! I'm glad you didn't hear a woman in the pew with me at the Church of Celestial Peace singing, 'I my cross hav taken.'"

"You thought it was you who had to bear the cross."

"Yes, indeed, I did."

"But boys can sing very difficult music if they are properly trained. At St. Catherine's they gave parts of the music of the 'Messiah' quite as well as it was given by the Oratorio Society."

"There is a little Jew treble there who took the soprano parts. He has a lovely voice just like a woman's."

"A good many of the best church singers are Jews, I believe."

"Yes, they hav such a genius for music, you know."

"It must seem queer to them to sing our music—the words I mean."

"Oh, I don't suppose they care for the words. I'm sure nobody can hear them one-half the time. They are paid to sing the music, and they sing it beautifully."—E. M. Hardinge in Home Journal.

Voltaire's Rendering of Mandeville's "Fable of the Bees."

Once the bees, in worldly things,
Had a happy government;
And their laborers and their kings
Made them wealthy and content;
But some greedy drones at last
Found their way into the hive;
These, in idleness to thrive,
Told the bees they ought to fast.
Sermons were their only labors;
Work they preached unto their neighbors.
In their language they would say,
"You shall surely go to heaven,
When to us you've freely given
Wax and honey all away."
Foolishly the bees believed,
Till by famin undeceived;
When their misery was complete,
All the strange delusion vanished!
Now the drones are killed or banished,
And the bees again may eat.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 7, 1890.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

IN PRESS.

The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book,

One Hundred and Eighty-five Pictorial Arguments Against the Church, and Nearly the same Number of Pages of Reading Matter.

Price, $2; advance orders solicited.

To Advertisers.

We call the attention of our subscribers who hav meritorious articles to sell to the following letter from the advertising manager of the National Typewriter Company:

"BOSTON, MASS., May 31, 1890.

"TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY: Is the typewriter doing right in your hands? The advertisment in THE TRUTH SEEKER has proved a valuable investment to us. Hav had more replies to our card in your columns than come from the old established magazines, like Harper's, Scribners', Cosmopolitan, and others. Thanks for your valuable acquaintance, and may you liv long and prosper, until every wrong against human rights is annihilated."

Advertising rates will be made known upon application, and our business friends will find our columns valuable to them.

New York's Schools and the Sects.

A few days ago a friend visited this office and left this memorandum:

"Miss ——, teacher in 6th A class in —— street school, said, 'I would not hav a boy in this class without he went to mass.'"

The name of teacher and street were given. A day or two afterward the same individual came in again when the Editor was out, and this is the memorandum the business manager made of his errand:

"The man who told Mr. —— about the teacher's remarks about scholars attending mass on slip handed in Friday is afraid to back it up—fears ruin, wishes it withdrawn."

The informant's desire for secresy is the reason we do not print the name of this teacher and the location of the school. But the incident is too important to go unnoticed. First, it shows what the Romish church is doing in this city, where it has the power, by placing its own teachers in our schools; and, second, it shows how utterly incompetent these teachers are. No young woman who constructs sentences as does this teacher (for these are her very words) is fit to be placed in charge of a class of infants. Her true place would be with them, under a capable instructor.

The religious folk hav been very busy with our schools recently. The Romanists are at their ancient tricks—controling them to their own advantage when they can; trying to destroy when they cannot control. The decision of the Wisconsin supreme court has not ceased to be a text for speeches and resolutions; the evangelical Protestants pretend to see in it danger to themselvs, so hav ranged themselvs in opposition. They seem to be as much opposed to secular schools as the Catholics. An Episcopalian bishop of considerable note denounces the court, but proposes as a compromise, if other states will follow its example, to be satisfied with the teaching of the Ten Commandments and the Apostles' Creed. This is as absurd a proposition as could well be made, and the press hav very generally condemned it. The Apostles' creed is nothing if not theological sectarianism, and to teach it to children in the public schools would be to convert these institutions into religious schools. And, as the World pertinently says, the very large body of people who do not accept that creed hav precisely the same status before the law in this country as their fellow-citizens who do.

The Presbyterians hav also taken the matter up seriously, and their General Assembly at Saratoga last week adopted from its Committee on Bills and Overtures a preamble, two whereases, and a resolution on the subject, as follows:

"A paper reciting the recent decision of the supreme court of the state of Wisconsin, affirming the Bible to be a sectarian book, and its use in the public schools to be unconstitutional, and asking for a deliverance of the General Assembly, having been received, your committee recommends that this Assembly reaffirm the action of the Assembly of 1870. [See Digest, pages 278-279-80.] This action declares an unalterable devotion to the public school system as an agency next to the church of God, in laying a foundation of intelligence, virtue, and freedom in the United States. Regarding the Bible as the Magna Charta of our best moral and religious influences, we would consider its expulsion from our public schools as a deplorable and suicidal act, and do hereby urge upon our members to coöperate with Christian people in maintaining the place of this book of God as an educating force among the youth of our land. The committee, therefore, moves the adoption of the following resolutions by the Assembly:

"WHEREAS, a recent decision of the supreme court of one of our states has affirmed the Bible to be a sectarian book, and its use in the public schools to be unconstitutional, and

"WHEREAS, We see in this decision no mere local matter, such as affects simply the people of that state, but the culmination of an effort being made with relentless pertinacity by a foreign hierarchy to overthrow the system of public schools throughout the land; therefore

"Resolved, That we affirm the importance of our public schools to the welfare of our people; that with intellectual cultivation must go moral training, or the schools may prove a curse rather than a blessing; but this moral training must be based on religion, otherwise its sanction will not be strong enough to grasp the conscience of the people, or its utterances obligatory enough to shape their character; that as the Bible is the source of the highest moral teaching, we regard its exclusion from our public schools as a menace to national welfare, and we urge the members of our church to so arouse public thought on this subject, from the pulpit, the press, and ecclesiastical assemblages, that this book shall be restored to its true place in our system of education."

There is nothing weak or undecided about that Calvinistic utterance. The Presbyterians propose to maintain the present Protestant religious tone of the schools, and every effort to secularize them will meet their decided opposition. One of their orators, Dr. Roberts, defined their desires pretty clearly when, completely ignoring all non-Christians, he said that "some non-sectarian religious instruction may be introduced, as in England, without interfering with the rights or disregarding the conscientious scruples of any."

Another movement, ostensibly in favor of secular schools, but really to make all our schools more thoroughly Protestant than they are at present, has been made public during the past two weeks, and has provoked a great deal of comment. This is the incorporation of "The National League for the Protection of American Institutions." Its work is to be the presentation to Congress of a constitutional amendment in these words:

"No state shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use its property or credit or any money raised by taxation, or authorize either to be used for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding by appropriation, payment for services, expenses or otherwise any church, religious denomination or religious society, or any institution, society or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control."

In one of the documents which the League is sending to people likely to be interested in such a movement some details of its project are given:

"We want no foreign schools with doctrins, ideas, and methods at variance with our constitutional principles, disturbing instead of conserving the national harmony, and controled by those who seek, by perverting the infant mind of America, to use the American suffrage for the overthrow of American institutions.

"We insist upon careful instruction in the fundamental principles of American law, and the rigid exclusion of sectarian or denominational teaching, and attempts to proselytize, so that the citizens of different faiths may secure for their children, without fear of interference with their religious freedom, the unrivaled advantages of the public schools.

"It would seem hardly necessary to add that in seeking to protect American institutions it is not proposed to overlook the dangers that threaten them from the perversion of constitutional government by machine politics, by bribery, electoral abuses, fraudulent naturalization and any other form of political corruption. Nor are we unmindful of the perils of an unrestricted immigration, which permits foreign governments, aided by mercenary shippers, to transfer to our shores the dregs of their populations, representing the lowest forms of illiteracy, beggary, and crime, imposing new burdens on our laboring classes, and serving unscrupulous politicians for the most unworthy purposes."

It is quickly seen from this that "The National League for the Protection of American Institutions" is a Protestant movement to make our schools unsectarian but religious. As the Sun points out, "the suggested amendment does not at all settle the controversy over religion in the schools. It forbids appropriations for sectarian purposes, but it does not forbid religious instruction in schools supported by general taxation, the very bone of contention. The main question of difference would continue to cause discord and provoke religious animosities, the bitterest which divide society. If there is any danger threatening the public school system, it comes from the demand, whencesoever it proceeds, that religious instruction should be provided in the schools to some extent, greater or less. But the League does not oppose this demand, and the sentiment of a large part of its members has been openly in its favor, provided the teaching be agreeable to their own religious opinions. It insists upon the 'rigid exclusion of sectarian or denominational teaching,' but not of religion altogether. Yet there is no religious instruction which is not sectarian or denominational, according to the views of a great part of the people, or which can be provided 'without interference with their religious freedom.' If it be satisfactory to Roman Catholics, it is offensiv to Protestants, and the same the other way. If it suit Christian believers, it outrages Jews, Buddhists, Agnostics, and unbelievers."

The work of this League is as much against what we consider to be true American institutions as the callous demand of Dr. Roberts, and that is also the opinion of the journal just quoted. "In this republic," it says, "there is no union of church and state, as there is in England, and all religion is sectarian in the sense in which the preacher and the League use the term. Even the reading of the Bible and Christian prayer, as experience has shown, cannot be introduced without offending conscientious scruples." The manifesto of the League is aimed at the Roman Catholics, but they are no more unjust in their demands than are the Presbyterians and other evangelical sects, and who, strange to say, seem to regard themselvs as going to the furthest limit of liberality in their proposed compromise. They are just as determined as the Roman Catholics that religion shall be maintained in our schools, and their criticism of the schools is the same—that they are too purely secular.

There is some gratification in knowing that in this war between the two great divisions of Christianity, the Secularists occupy the only tenable ground, and that the press recognizes the fact. "The whole matter is very simple if rightly viewed," says the World. "The public schools are the educational agencies of a purely secular state. Their sole function is to giv secular education to the children of the state, leaving parents and churches to attend to the religious side of their training. It is not the business of the state to teach religion. The state is unfit for that work, and even if fit, it could not undertake it with justice or any show of right." And the Sun defines the Secularist position exactly in these words: "Nothing is more apparent than that the existence of the schools depends on the total exclusion of religion from them. Forbidding public appropriations for sectarian purposes will not save them, unless they are made wholly secular in their instruction. Instead of becoming more religious, the last vestige of religious teaching must be removed from them. As they grow more numerous with the growth of the population, the differences of opinion as to religion increase and become more irreconcilable. Even if Protestantism and Romanism came nearer together in sentiment as to the subject, unbelief and belief other than Christian would stand out in rebellion. . . . The only way to save the system from overthrow is to demand the exclusion from it of all religious teaching, thus putting all parties on the same footing. Then, the state giving no other than purely secular instruction, parents can educate their children in religion themselvs, if they are believers, and in such religion as they believe, or send them to such religious schools as they prefer."

When purely secular schools shall be the rule such remarks as those of the nameless teacher, quoted by the man who fears ruin if it should be known that he objected to them, will not be heard, and the way to bring that about is for every interested person to remonstrate, not cringe, whenever the pietists show their evil designs. The Sun thinks that the sentiment against any sort of union or connection between church and state is determined in this republic, and that if it ever rises to assert itself against opposition, an evil day will hav come for the church; but if all parents follow in this man's footsteps the church will hav us down in the mud, and be walking all over us, before anyone realizes the situation. There is now a practical union of church and state, and it bids fair to soon become a great deal closer.

Two Judicial Views of Spiritualistic Phenomena.

On the day that W. E. Reid was refused a new trial by Judge Jackson in the federal court at Grand Rapids, Mich., another medium was on trial in another part of the country. The different views of the matter taken by the two judges are interesting when compared.

The second case was in Atlanta, Ga., and arose out of an accusation of fraud against Mrs. Maud Jones, who was described as a slate-writer and Spiritualist. The complainant alleged that he believed her pretensions to Spiritualistic powers were fraudulent, and in order to expose them he agreed to pay her one dollar for a séance, and did pay the dollar after it was over, according to his contract. This is substantially the charge against Reid, but the Georgia man was more honorable in fulfilling his contract than the one who set Wanamaker upon Reid, for he only paid thirty cents, holding out inducements of future advantages for the balance.

The judge in the federal court and the judge in the Georgia state court were wide apart in their opinions of the province of government. Mr. Reid's judge holds that "the government assumes to protect the incredulous," while the Georgia court held that neither a criminal prosecution nor a civil suit could be maintained upon these facts, inasmuch as it was quite preposterous for a man to claim that he had been cheated or overreached when he made the agreement to pay the money under the belief that the person who received it was an impostor, and courts, he held, should not waste their time in any event in attempting to pass upon the truthfulness of the claims of those who profess to hold intercourse with spirits. He thought such claims must be regarded either as too absurd to be capable of deceiving anyone, or else as religious notions which the law should let alone.

On the legitimacy of the alleged phenomena and the attempt to suppress mediums the judges differed as radically as upon the province of the courts. Judge Jackson at Grand Rapids asked, interrupting Mr. Reid's counsel:

"If the counsel expected that the government was bound to prove that the defendant could not do what he claimed he could do? Did the counsel suppose that the government was obliged to prove that he could not do something impossible and supernatural? Would you expect the government to prove a case like this: A man who advertised to take sealed letters and read therein the diagnosis of a disease and then send a prescription for said disease—would you expect a court to stultify itself by attempting to allow such a thing to be proved?"

To Mr. Reid's offer to answer sealed letters in court Judge Jackson replied:

"Do you think the court would stultify itself or make itself ridiculous by allowing anybody to attempt to prove any such impossibility? Suppose a juggler were present and could pass around with an empty bottle and pour out different wines to each juror. Do you suppose that the court would make a spectacle of itself by allowing him to attempt to prove this, even though he would swear on a pile of Bibles as big as the court house?"

And he concluded his decision in these words:

"There is not a particle of doubt as to the constitutionality of the statute under which this indictment is brought. The power certainly rests with Congress to prohibit the use of the mails to parties for fraudulent purposes. Congress has the power to say what shall go through the mails, and consequently must hav the power to say what shall not. As to the charge of the trial judge, I find that he said: 'If you believe that Dr. Reid believed himself that he could do these things—receive communications from the spirit land, etc., then you must acquit him.' That seems to me the fairest kind of a charge, and it is going farther than the circuit judge would hav gone. One of the witnesses for the defense received a letter, he says, which from its nature must hav come from the spirit land. That same kind of an argument would apply to other instances just as ridiculous. Suppose, for instance, a surgeon sends circulars through the mails advertising that he can restore the dead to life. He is called upon to prove it, and he says: 'Mrs. Jones was dead for twenty-four hours, and I brought her back to life.' Here is a case where the woman was in a trance and the physician has just as good a claim to the argument as Dr. Reid."

The Georgia state judge took the contrary view on all these points. He did not believe in such prosecutions, for no law could be framed to cover them that did not at the same time interfere with freedom of religious belief, and if a man should desire to pay money for such entertainment, it was his right to do so at his own risk. He had no remedy at law for evil results from his own credulity. The judge concluded with these words, very different in spirit from those of Judge Jackson:

"If the claim of a Spiritual medium to hav communication with the spirits of the shadow land beyond the grave be utterly and patently preposterous, how can any man be duped by them? And if not utterly preposterous, how can the government summon a jury to try the question of how much truth or falsity there is in any particular creed or system or religious belief or doctrin? If a man invoke the services of a fortune-teller to apprise him of future events, or of a spiritual medium to inform him of the events transpiring in the other world, he must abide his trade; if he pay over the money with full knowledge he is duped. I will not impanel a jury to try the question whether his fortune was truly told, or whether true spirits spoke to him from the vasty deep."

Mrs. Jones consequently went free, while Mr. Reid is now serving a year's sentence to the Detroit House of Correction.

Thinking both of these cases over, we like the way of the Georgia judge much better than that of Judge Jackson, and it seems more consistent with the genius of our government. If there are spirits, who can say that they cannot communicate with the living? If there are none, why imprison mediums who pretend to hold converse with another world and let priests and ministers, who also pretend to tell about that same world, escape? If a Spiritualist is foolishly credulous in believing in one other world peopled by spirits, what shall we call the religious folks who believe in two other worlds, both peopled by spirits? And if it is the government's province to protect people from their own credulity, why does it not forbid the paying of money to get souls out of purgatory? Hundreds of priests are to-day using the mails to get cash for that very purpose.

On the whole, we think the government may as well mind its own business in this matter. Spiritualism is a religion to thousands, and they believe in spirit communication. That is as much their inalienable right as the belief in heaven and hell is to other thousands. And they hav precisely the same right to hav mediums to fool them—if it be fooling—that the Christians hav to hav ministers and priests to bamboozle them. Reid in prison and Talmage loose is a complete reversal of the eternal fitness of things, no matter how great an impostor Reid may be!

Messrs. Harman and Heywood.

The petitions for the pardon of Mr. Moses Harman are now being circulated. Blanks can be obtained at this office. Some time this month the motion for an appeal will be heard, and if it is rejected the petitions must be depended upon to repair one of the grossest legal outrages ever perpetrated in America.

On another page we print the report of the preliminary hearing of Mr. Heywood. The judge has since rendered his decision, sending the case to the grand jury, which will undoubtedly find an indictment against the editor of the Word. The judge, writes Mr. Heywood, does not think the O'Neil letter is obscene, but holds the editor on "plain words."

As this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER goes to press, June 3d, Mr. Heywood is being tried in the United States court at Worcester. The district attorney is a Comstock-Wanamaker sort of man, and will undoubtedly do all he can to send Mr. Heywood to prison. He has, he says, orders from Washington—which means Presbyterian Sunday-school Superintendent Wanamaker—to "push Heywood." The indictment in this court has three counts. The first is of the April Word, the second, March Word; both of this year; the third is the April Word of last year, which contained an article by Mrs. Heywood, called "The Woman's View of It," a reprint of the leaflet on which Mr. Heywood was arrested in 1883, though Judge Putnam quashed the indictment at the following May term of court. The case looks dark for Mr. Heywood.

Next week we shall be able, probably, to giv the result of the trial, as District Attorney Allen will try hard to "railroad" Mr. Heywood to prison. More there is no time to say now.

Good News.

Victor E. Lennstrand, imprisoned in Stockholm, Sweden, for delivering the lecture printed in these columns a few weeks since, and which the Swedish authorities pronounced blasphemous, was liberated on May 2d by a pardon from the king, granted because of ill health. There are two more judgments hanging over him, however, which, if the king's court decides adversely to him, may again consign him to jail.

Lennstrand's health is much broken, and he is unable at present to resume the editorship of Fritankaren, but will probably do so soon, if not returned to the dungeon. He contracted prison consumption, and must rest awhile ere taking up the pen. Let us hope that Sweden will never again disgrace herself by imprisoning men for speaking their thoughts.

Editorial Notes.

THE law of Kansas is, that criminals condemned to death shall be confined for one year after sentence in the penitentiary, and then be executed at the pleasure of the governor. Senator Ingalls says: "The result is an accumulation of a job-lot of convicted felons, whose lives, which hav been judicially forfeited, instead of being abbreviated are indefinitly prolonged by improved diet, scientific sanitary regulations, and enforced good habits, at the expense of the state."

EDGERTON, Kan., has concluded to let the husbands rather than the wives do the office-holding. At the election held on the 19th to fill the vacancies caused by the resignations of the ladies chosen a few weeks ago, a male ticket, composed chiefly of the marital partners of the retiring women, was overwhelmingly victorious. The eternal fitness of things seems to be somewhat conserved by this action, but that is no reason why women everywhere should not be entitled to assist in choosing their rulers and themselvs be eligible to rule if they see fit.

THE Unitarian organ, Unity, relates that in a town near Chicago the Congregational preacher has said that he would never enter the Unitarian church nor invite a preacher of that denomination to his pulpit, yet when the church was set on fire by sparks from a burning building the same Congregational minister was the first to climb the ladder to put out the fire and save the church. From this Unity concludes that the minister "gave better evidence of the real nature of his creed in the help he rendered his townsmen in an emergency than in his pulpit discourses defining Christianity." The puerility of such a conclusion is excellent evidence of how theology makes men distort facts to impress people with the idea that religion is an important thing in the world. The Congregational minister's act was the triumph of humanity over creed, and simply shows that his creed has not entirely ruined his manhood. His pulpit utterances are his religion; his brave act was performed when the pious part of him was off duty.

MUCH indignation is expressed in Montreal over the case of the ex-priest, the Rev. Louis Martin, who has rejoined the Roman Catholic church after deserting his wife and two children, with whom he has been living for years. The general verdict is that the man's action is an outrage, and that his conduct in every way is most contemptible. There is a movement on foot to take action against Martin for wife desertion and against the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical authorities for conspiracy in aiding and abetting the same. According to the law of the Roman Catholic church, once a priest always a priest, and the marriage is, therefore, in the eyes of the church, null and void. In accordance with this law, this priestly scoundrel, after living with a woman whom he recognized as his wife for several years, coolly deserts her and her two children and is received by the church with open arms, the poor woman and her two children being left to look after themselvs as best they can. A dispatch from Canada says: "The question arises, shall the church law or the civil law prevail? There is no doubt that if the desertion had taken place in the United States, where the church of Rome is not above the law of the land, Mr. Martin would be called to pretty sharp account, but here, in the province of Quebec, where the law of the church is supreme, the case is very different, and it looks very much as if the woman and her two children will hav to submit to a cruel outrage."

Letters from Friends.

CALISTOGA, CAL., May 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I shall soon send you money for one copy of the picture book. I keep THE TRUTH SEEKER on account of the pictures. Yours truly, JOHN DUMBACHER.

EVANSVILLE, MINN., May 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote you a few days ago that I should not subscribe to your paper before August 1st. But I can not help myself; it must after this come regularly to my home. The pictures in it take me. I shall giv the paper my best attention. As a Liberal paper, it is the best I hav ever seen. MARTIN GRAU.

WEST VIEW, O., May 21, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5, which sum apply as follows: $3 for renewal, $2 for cartoon book to be sent when published, and when your pictorial Bible is published put me down for a copy. Put my vote down for the pictures. I am convinced, from my own experience, that the pictures cause many to investigate and read, where without them they would not. L. C. TANNEY.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., May 19, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $2 25, for which please send me the picture book when it comes out, also the story, "For Her Daily Bread." I hope the pictures will be a success financially, and that you will be able to publish the Bible illustrations in the same way in the near future. I hav a lot of each arranged in large albums for the benefit of my orthodox friends, but would prefer them in book form. It would be just elegant for the center table. H. F. MILLS.

JERRY CITY, O., May 19, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: It givs me pleasure to remit you $1, for which you will be so kind as to send THE TRUTH SEEKER for four months to a trial subscriber—the third one on my cap, and I hope he will continue. It also pleases me to say to you that you will hear from the two I sent you some time ago, in the way of more money, as they both assured me that they would not do without the paper any more, and that the paper is of more consequence to them than all the daily or weekly papers that come to them for perusal.

Yours, etc., C. C. GERMANN.

DETROIT, MICH., May 3, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In a recent communication a correspondent makes the suggestion of having the Liberals establish schools of their own—a good idea, and very feasible. However, Liberal schools cannot be established in all communities, hence I suggest that the Liberals combine and compel the teachers in public schools to quit reading that filthiest of all books, the Bible, to the pupils. The law is very clear on the subject, and has more than once been tested favorably to us. If Mrs. A. will take the matter in hand, I feel confident that this objectionable feature will be done away with in the public schools of Eaton Rapids. L. KNAPP, M.D.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., May 19, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Having reason to believe that many of the Liberal Swedes in this country read your paper, I ask you to let them know that my lectures delivered in Minneapolis will now be published in the Swedish language and sent to any address. One of them is just now ready, and I send you a copy of it. Its title in English would be, "The Devil, the Hell, the Eternal Punishment, and the Last Judgment." The price is only ten cents a copy.

My work is meeting with a great success, which shows that the Liberal ideas are very much spread among the Swedes in this country as well as in the old one. I am asked to go to at least a dozen other places and speak, but yet hav been too overcrowded by work in Minneapolis and St. Paul. I hope, though, to be able to lecture in Chicago, Kansas City, and Omaha in a near future. AXEL LUNDBERG.

ANAHEIM, CAL., May 15, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: At last we are on hand to pay for two copies of the grand picture book that the gifted Heston is giving to the world. The tree of knowledge is a little the best yet produced. I am just convalescing from a severe attack of la grippe, so, of course, the Methodist Episcopal minister called and used a little flattery—said I ought to join the church so as to giv my "influence in the right direction." I replied that he did not want me to become a hypocrit, when I did not believe in Christianity; besides, I did not expect to liv for four days, and I could say with truth that I did not hav a doubt or fear of the future life, if there is one. I then held an argument about the God question; gave him an idea of my experience; then showed him "The Tree of Knowledge." Of course that paper will make him think better than a treatis. Long liv THE TRUTH SEEKER and Watson Heston. K. PARKER.

POTTER, ARK., May 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I object to the teaching of Christianity. It misdirects the energies of humanity. The mind is directed in search of the surest passport to the skies. Day after day, year after year, the pages of a large volume of parables, riddles, and dreams are perused, with no other good than to divide people into sects, each one claiming to hav the surest waybill. Christ, it is said, promised the Holy Ghost, which should teach them the way of all truth. Who has ever received this truth? Point them out. Maybe it was Calvin, or the pope of Rome, or Wesley. Who knows? Point them out if you can. A study of this ancient puzzle, this false absurdity, is detrimental to our interest here. It is antagonistic to science and truth. It purports to settle all questions of right or wrong for past, present, and future. Faith and baptism are more worthy than good conduct. Morality, kindness, good works, all hav no attraction for heaven. Faith is the purifying substance. Matt. xxiv, 14, says: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." That means, if they do not throw down their own religion. Verse 34 says: "Verily I say unto you this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." The things spoken of are too numerous to mention here. Read that chapter and see if they were fulfilled during that generation or not. If not, Christ was mistaken; and if so, we hav passed to the other world. J. R. PERRY.

March 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Many are beginning to see the strides the Roman Catholic church (with a big R) is making toward supreme power in this country. It often occurs to me that it would be easier for the devilish church to gain supreme power in this country than in a country governed by a king, queen, or czar, as they, the crowned heads, would be jealous of the church's power and would check it when they could, but here, all they hav to do is to get a majority of the votes and presto! the plum falls right into their hands and nobody to say nay, for does not the majority rule? And we poor fools are making voters of the thousands of tools this political church is crowding on us every year, so that if we continue the naturalization laws for another ten years we may giv up the contest and let the pope of Rome rule this glorious country, and we shall prove ourselvs unworthy sons of nob'e sires, who, having been left the glorious heritage, had not sense nor manhood enough to save it from the most ravenous monster that afflicts the earth. It plainly tells us what it means. It is not mealy-mouthed, but openly tells in encyclical letters, by bishops, and in every other way that its intention is to root out our unsectarian schools and supplant them with its priestly parochial schools, where nothing shall be learned but obedience to the pope. Americans, arise, and kill this monster before its fangs reach your vitals, when it will be too late to struggle. Let us hav an American party outside the parties of politicians, both Republican and Democrat, either of which would sell us to Rome for the sake of office to themselvs. Let no man be sent to Congress or state legislatures who is not pledged against popery and for the separation of church and state in all its forms.

J. DOWNES.

BASIN, MONT., May 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I send money for three cartoon books. I am a little late to express my notions about the cartoons in THE TRUTH SEEKER, but here they are in a nutshell—the cartoons are just admirable. By all means do not let the illustrations drop. Some find fault and say they are uncouth. The subject they represent is uncouth. Does anyone think it correct to represent a one-cent story with a $100 cut? The representations are just the thing in the right place. They could not be better. They do not need any improvement. They are a capital instructor. Well, I must hav that cartoon book. My friend says he must hav it too. He further says that he sends $3 to renew his subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. He says he must hav it, although it injures his business a good deal. There are quite a number of Roman Catholics in this vicinity, but he keeps it on his table at his place of business. And right here I will say, I notice the effect of the cartoons. Around every new paper that comes can be seen a group of men looking at the pictures and discussing about them, and a good many of them will read the paper.

I was dumfounded when I saw the sentence, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, of Moses Harman, pronounced by Judge Foster It is outrageous, rascally. I, as a citizen of the United States, demand of the government that it see to it that the sentence imposed upon Moses Harman by Judge Foster be commuted, and I further ask that Judge Foster be retired from the high position that he now occupies as judge, as a man entirely unfit for the position and power to judge and pronounce upon his fellow-man. Moses Harman charges Judge Foster that he (Harman) was forced to trial without proper counsel; that there was no good reason why his case could not hav been put off a few hours pending the arrival of his attorney, which Judge Foster refused to do. Now, I submit that the subsequent action of Judge Foster proves the defendant's statement to be correct. J. B. THOMSON.

TWIN MOUND, KAN., May 13, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed money to apply on my arrears. It takes so much produce or hard labor to pay for a dollar, that poor men handle but very few, and the Editor soon feels the pressure. Having joined the Farmers' Alliance for the protection of myself and other producers against monopolies and combines, and remembering those in bonds the same as if bound with them, I am compelled to forego the pleasure of reading the world-renowned TRUTH SEEKER for a time, at least, however much I shall miss it, for every dollar I can consistently spare must be applied for the defense and relief of my esteemed friend and co-worker Moses Harman, now confined in a loathsome prison for no crime whatever, but simply for advocating more freedom for women, now just emerging from a condition of slavery fraught with more pernicious and cruel results than was the African slavery of the Southern states. He is confined simply for advocating one of the most needed reforms ever presented to the human race, that of sexual abuse in marital as well as other relations. He was convicted through a vindictiv personal hate of Judge Foster and a bigoted church, especially the Young Men's Christian Association, encouraged by a fanatical president and postmaster-general, together with the Women's Christian Temperance Union; also nine-tenths of the professed Liberals of this country, whether members of the Secular Union or not, who, by their profuse criticisms of Harman for publishing such letters and who (if silence givs consent) indorse the crimes said letters expose, hav all directly or indirectly encouraged Judge Foster to convict. For be assured that if all professing Liberals and Spiritists, including yourself and R. G. Ingersoll, had labored as hard in defense of Harman's constitutional right to publish said letters, and had contributed their money as liberally in Harman's defense, as a few hundred of the best men and women in the world hav done, no sane judge in the United States would hav convicted him. Judge Foster has proved himself unfit for the office he holds, and a disgrace to the court he serves regardless of past frauds and corruption. But advanced thinkers will be slow to blame him for his vindictiv decisions, for he is built that way. Comstock and his supporters are among the worst enemies to liberty and a free government that ever infested any country on earth, but their day will soon be over. They can do but little else, and we need not blame them—they are built that way. The Women's Christian Temperance Union are using their combined efforts to crush the principles of American freedom and giv us instead a religious oligarchy. They will sooner or later learn better, and must not be blamed—they are built that way. The numerous church organizations are zealously engaged in stuffing the tender minds of all the children they can reach with their Sunday-school exercise, Bible nonsense, and superstition. What else can be expected from such children when grown up but persecution and hate? But do not blame them—they are built that way. Those milk-and-water Liberals who are quite extensivly scattered over the Western states, and a few in the East also, act much as if they had arrived at the summit of progress and had no more to learn, giving much of their time in criticising more or less severely those who differ with them. Do not blame them; they are not thoroughly weaned from their early training when they were built that way. R. G. Ingersoll is a man with few or no equals and certainly no superior in eloquence; a man who has done more to educate and lift the churches out of their superstitious ruts by showing up the absurdity of their Calvinistic creeds than all others combined. His numerous discourses in favor of universal freedom, and the rights of man, woman, and child, hav never been excelled. But when he takes a step backward to indorse a protectiv tariff, a gold and silver currency, and to oppose the repeal of the whole Comstock laws, he also presents evidence of early partisan training, by depriving free men of their natural right to buy in the cheapest market; by favoring a currency that always hides when most needed, and by siding with church bigots in opposing the repeal of Comstock laws. He too is built that way, and may not be to blame, but if he does not learn better soon, I cannot blame those who blame him.

Your noble defense of Harman's innocence in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 10th came too late, for which I am sorry. Better late than never, is a maxim containing some truth, and if you are built that way you are entitled to an average amount of leniency. Were it not for such men as Harman, Heywood, and the Chicago Anarchists, and such women as Slenker, Heywood, and Waisbrooker, who hav the courage to speak and publish truths in advance of public sentiment regardless of persecution and death, preparing the way, the present success and popularity of Ingersoll, Underwood, and Macdonald would hav been impossible.

HENRY HIATT.

LINCOLN'S BELIEF—A LETTE TO MR. REMSBURG.

PORTSMOUTH, O., May 7, 1890.

DEAR FRIEND: In the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER you solicit information as to "Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" You desire it, as the solicitation states, for a book which you are about to publish relativ to that particular matter. I some time ago wrote THE TRUTH SEEKER that I had the evidence of two worthy and truthful witnesses which might with a sort of "knock-out propriety" (that is, to the church side) be added to your already large accumulation of testimony, proving "Honest Abe" an unbeliever. I intended to send it to them, but your solicitation cut that short for the present, and in as brief space as possible I will address it to you—you in turn can send to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Of the two witnesses I refer to one is dead, viz., Hon. Oran B. Gould. His death occurred several weeks ago at his beautiful home near Franklin Terrace, which lies on the Ohio river, about fifteen miles east of this city. He was a grand old man, and was known as the "Sage of the Terrace." He lived and died a Freethinker. This the church denies, and sets up the assertion that previous to dissolution he recanted. The fact is that three weeks before his demise his mind gave way, and in this condition, tottering as it were upon the very edge of his grave, a minister of the gospel called, took advantage of the situation, and proclaimed him converted to Christianity. The robbery, as the church and their hireling thought, was complete. In fact, a thief at night acts upon the same principle. The purpose, the intent, was there. In my feeble way I endeavored to vindicate the dead through the columns of the Portsmouth Press. I based my article on a quotation from you: "Law was his god; justice his creed, and liberty his heaven." That served your purpose in the closing remarks as to Abraham Lincoln, and it served mine in vindicating Oran B. Gould. And here I will say that the martyred president and the Sage of the Terrace were great friends. Gould took a conspicuous part in politics, and was asquainted with the leading public men. He loved Ingersoll, and when the great Agnostic passed this way in 1876 making political speeches he became the honored guest of Gould for the night. Oftentimes I hav heard him remark that that night was the merriest ever passed in the old home. He thought the colonel one of the greatest of men. As I said before, Gould took a great interest in politics. He was a Republican of the Abolitionist kind, and when in Illinois became acquainted with Lincoln. The friendship thus formed never grew cold; it waxed warm until the assassin's bullet played its deadly part. Then broken in death, it yet remained living in memory. Gould was with Lincoln on various occasions. He knew him well. The two believed alike, that is, they were moralists. I hav Gould's own words for this. They were spoken to me last fall previous to my Southern trip. At that time your articles on the question, "Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" were appearing from week to week in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that is what brought about my interview at that time. I asked particularly as to Lincoln's idea of Christianity. Said Gould: "He, like myself, recognized no monsters for gods. He, like myself, discarded the divinity of Christ, and the idea of a hell's fire. He, like myself, admired Christ as a man, and believed the devil and evil to be simply 'truth misunderstood.' He, like myself, thought good wherever found should be accepted and the bad rejected. In a word, we were firm in the belief of the Golden Rule, Do unto others as you would hav them do unto you, and the passage, that you'll reap what you sow."

The other witness, who still livs and has his being, is Judge Robert Leachman. I met him when South. It was at Anniston, Ala. He is a very old man now, being past eighty. In his day he was quite prominent. He was born in Virginia; when but a child his parents moved to Kentucky. In that state he received his education, and became famous as a lawyer. He afterward formed the acquaintance of Abraham Lincoln. They too became close friends, and always remained such. Upon leaving Kentucky Robert Leachman located in Mississippi. He was practicing law there when the war broke out. He was a Republican, and as such, amid the threats and abuse of secessionists, he proclaimed the cause of Lincoln. Nothing daunted him. He was brave and fearless, and stood his ground. Honest Abe never forgot it, and had he not fallen a victim of assassination he would hav called Judge Leachman to the Supreme bench of the United States. That was the understanding between them. Now, Leachman's testimony is of value for two reasons, viz., first, he was near unto Lincoln; and second, he is a believer. He says: "Lincoln was not such a Christian as the term is used to imply by church-going people and the members of churches. He was in the strictest sense a moralist. He looked to actions and not to belief. He greatly admired the Golden Rule, and was one of those who thought 'One world at a time' a good idea. He substantially demonstrated secession impracticable thus—that a wheel could not exist within a wheel, a kingdom within a kingdom, a world within a world. He held to 'One at a time.' He thought this a good place to be happy, as is shown by his wonderful love for liberty and mercy. No, I can truthfully say, Abraham Lincoln was not a Christian."

Yours Liberally, etc., WILL S. ANDREES.

March 26, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed are some comments on the Hawes hanging, from the Nashville Banner, on which I wish to make some comment:

Rev. Dr. Pickard, a Baptist clergyman in Birmingham, made a reference in a sermon to the execution of Dick Hawes, the wife and child murderer, and said: "The demon who went through the gallows on last Friday went straight to hell. I do not believe that the gallows is a stepping stone to heaven, but a springfall to hell." Whereupon the Knoxville Journal is moved to remark: "We are not learned in theology, but the teachings of the churches will hav to be changed if this be true. We are taught that whosoever repents his sins and believes in the savior will be saved. A man condemned to die would very certainly repent, and the belief would be all that was lacking."

Brother Rule, of the Journal, is getting into deep theological water. The Bible certainly teaches that the vilest sinner may be saved if he brings forth fruits meet for repentance and exercises a true faith in Christ. A noteworthy instance of the assurance of salvation in the extreme crisis is the case of the thief on the cross, but it is difficult to believe that the many brutal and hardened criminals who declare on the scaffold that they will go straight to heaven hav an adequate conception of the true principles and fundamental requisits of a saving faith. One can hardly accept the conclusion that the gallows is the stepping-stone to heaven, and that the murderers and other criminals who are doomed to death are accorded by the exigencies of their helpless situation and the fact that the days of their lives are definitly numbered, an exceptional certainty of making their calling and election sure. If such were the case, those who commit the most outrageous offenses against the laws of God and man might—in view of the brief and transitory nature of this checkered mundane life and the immeasurable prospects of the eternal life—deem themselvs the most fortunate of mortals. We take it that no just view of religion can compass the idea of placing a premium of future happiness upon crime or of making the gallows the most privileged of the altars of salvation. While none is prepared to deny that some of the vilest criminals hav attained a genuin faith before their execution, it is not unlikely that in many of the frequent instances of scaffold repentance the miserable creatures are deluded into a fervor and frenzy of emotion which they mistake for the faith of the Christian. While it is not for man to judge and condemn in spiritual things, we doubt not that in many cases the criminals who profess to be ready to step from the gallows into the Christian's heaven would speedily return to their evil ways if reprieved at the last moment and allowed to liv out their natural lives on earth.

The first thing I will notice is, why should the Bible God object to taking Hawes to his bosom? Hawes murdered only three, while he murdered millions. Not only so, but he continues to keep them in suffering. Hawes seemed to be satisfied at the death of his victims, while the Christian God is never appeased. Hawes is certainly the better of the two. I hav never read of anything in the history of the Apaches or Comanches that would equal the depravity and brutality of the wholesale murder of the Midianites, and they, too, an industrious, virtuous, and pacific nation. And then to giv the maids over to the lust of the murderers—Hawes, though bad, would hav revolted at such as that. And then every advanced thinker will admit he was not sane for the time being, and when reason asserted itself he would not let the man be harmed that betrayed him. My verdict against Hawes would hav been imprisonment for life. Then the state would not hav been as brutal as he.

The Christ myth says a man must hate all his nearest kin, yea, his own life, to be his disciple. Hawes did not do that, so he is better than the Herald's young God it speaks so commendingly of. Hawes loved his son and brother. This young God said, "Love your enemies," but he damns his. Example would hav been better here than precept. The preachers, Dr. Pickard included, hate unbelievers and would annihilate every one of them if they had the power.

Will the editor of the Herald (for he must be a very intelligent man) tell his readers where heaven is? Does he not know there is no such thing as up to space—that he revolves every twenty-four hours with this globe, and it is up all the time? Does he not know it is as dark as Egypt is said to be after he should get past the reflection of light from this globe until it should strike some other body? He can test that any night by letting a ray of light pass through his window pane until it strikes an object. Does he not know the higher you ascend the colder it is? Would not the Herald be a better educator if he printed such science, and all science, than when it retails such slush as Dr. Pickard's, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union's, and Young Men's Christian Association's, as it does? Will the Herald's editor tell us what is the difference, chemically, between men and all other animals? Will he enlighten us as to what the soul is? where or what part of the human animal it occupies? where was his before he was born? at what time it entered him? did he receive it conjointly from his parents? Will he tell us the difference between the human fœtus at certain stages and that of other animals, even the young chick at certain stages? Will he tell us how much better a man he is now, taking age and experience out of the balance, than he was before he became ecstasied and imagined he had religion—that thing which makes a man a monomaniac and makes him hate everyone that does not believe he is right? Will the editor of the Herald read Rawlinson's "Ancient Egypt," chap. 3, vol. i, what he quotes from Brugsch's "History of Egypt?" The forty-two laws of the Egyptian religion contained in the one hundred and twenty-fifth chapter of the Book of the Dead fall short in nothing of the teaching of Christianity. Does he not know all his Bible was plagiarized from heathen myth older than the Bible purports to be? Does he know that if its teaching was followed a few centuries man would go back to the same state of barbarism that produced it? Man is but the reflex of the God he worships. That is why in the Dark Ages Christians could torture men and maidens, mothers and children. They worshiped a bloody savage's God. Will the Herald point out one line or one word of its Christ, I mean one good one, that is original? The Golden Rule was uttered five hundred years before he was born, by a heathen philosopher. Now, I hav been a reader of the Herald for a long time, and I hav failed to see any Freethought paper, lecturer, meetings, Secular Unions, or anything that would lead to Freethought mentioned in its columns. But on the other hand, every Sunday-school meeting, conference, synod, general assembly, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Young Men's Christian Association, and pulpit filled by some reverend D.D. that has not three ideas above the animal Balaam rode, is detailed in first-class style. Now, let us Freethinkers everywhere boycott every secular paper that refuses to recognize us and our rights. A THINKER.

BELVIDERE, ILL., March 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav a great desire to relate my experience. I will do my best not to be tedious while I relate how I became a Freethinker. When I was a young man I got converted and joined the Methodist church. I also got married, and my wife was also a member of the Methodist church. Now, although I was completely hedged in by church influences, although I had never read an Infidel book or heard anyone speak on the subject of Infidelity except the preachers themselvs, yet in a few years I became an out and out Infidel. And this is the way it happened. It began in a quarrel between the minister and the leading classleader. The minister thought the classleader too severe in his remarks to the members of his class. The fact was, the leader would not look on sin with the least degree of allowance. Some of the lady members of his class complained to the minister, because if the leader spied the least bit of jewelry or ribbons or sign of either bustle or hoops on them, he would tell them of it and lecture them severely on the subject. The minister sided with the ladies, and told the leader he must quit talking so severely to them, but the leader would not quit. So the minister turned the leader out of his office and appointed another man. Then the row began; half of the church people sided with the minister, the rest with the leader. My wife and myself sided with the leader. The leader called on me and asked my advice about starting a new church. I said: "Go ahead. It's the only thing to do. I'll join and help all I can." My wife also said, "Go ahead," but I could not swear whether she said she would join or not. The next Sunday the new church was organized, and I joined it. I was elected secretary of the Sabbath-school, an office I held until I abandoned the church. My wife did not attend that day, and there's where my trouble began, for before the next Sunday arrived she had an interview with a minister who was in sympathy with the old church. He advised her not to join the new church. He told her it was started in a rebellious spirit, and in consequence it would never prosper, etc. He sent a message by her to me advising me to withdraw from the new church and stick to the old one. This I did not feel inclined to do, for I had begun to do a little thinking for myself, and did not propose to be led around by the nose by either women or preachers. My wife was just as set in her opinions as myself, so for two years she went to one church, while I went to another. This was a bitter pill to me, but I felt that I had done the right thing and was very indignant that any preacher should meddle in my affairs. He knew that I had joined the new church and could not in honor back out. He knew that my wife sided with the new church and proposed joining it, but he appealed to her cowardice, and she was afraid to join the new church for fear it would burst, and then she would feel awfully cheap to hav to come back to the old church. But I bided my time, and at the end of two years my wife and her adviser found that they had made a mistake, for the new church prospered, while the old one went down. All the young folks in the old church came over in a body and joined the new, and the membership of the Sabbath-school, which at first was only fifty scholars, swelled to nearly two hundred. As we were a progressiv church, we had some progressiv sermons preached. The fact was, we had no regular preacher for the first six months, but had to take up with any preacher who offered to preach to us for nothing. The consequence was, some of the sermons were not exactly orthodox. Listening to some of those speculativ sermons caused me to become a little speculativ myself. Then other preachers hammered at Infidelity and poor Tom Paine, and the more they hammered the more I began to reason on the subject. Then my wife, becoming alarmed at the state of my mind, made haste to join the new church. In fact, her old adviser advised her to do so. But it was too late. For two or three years more my wife, myself, and my family attended the new church regularly, but I only attended from force of habit, for I had lost faith in religion. But I was still to all appearance a Methodist, for I kept my mouth shut on the subject. Now, it happened one day that the pastor and his wife were spending the day at my house, and he took me to task for being so lukewarm in church work. Well, I hardly know how it happened, but I opened up my whole heart to him. Then we went at it and had a regular discussion on the truths of revealed religion, and I was astonished to find that he had not a solitary argument to bring to refute anything I advanced. At the end of two or three hours' talk he slammed the Bible shut and stared at me and said, "Why, Brother Swail, don't you know that you are an Infidel?" I replied that I had a suspicion that I was. "Oh, there's no doubt about it," he replied; "you certainly are one. And now will you please tell me what Infidel books you hav been reading, for by the way you talk I am pretty sure you hav been reading Paine's 'Age of Reason?'" I told him that I had never read it; that I had not the least idea what was in it; also that I had never read any book or article in favor of Infidelity in my life, or even heard any Infidel talk on the subject. "Then how did you become an Infidel?" he asked. I told him I suspected it was by listening to Methodist preachers' sermons, for I had always noticed that in every chain of evidence that they produced in favor of the truth of Christianity, or the falsehood of Infidelity, there was a link lacking, and whenever I tried to supply that link I would discover that the whole chain was only a rope of sand. Of course the preacher was shocked, but before we parted he begged me to conceal my views from my children and neighbors, for it would hurt my reputation and do a great moral damage, etc. Then it was my turn to be shocked. "What?" said I, "do you really advise me to play the hypocrit and to act a lie?" "Oh, no," said he, "not quite that, but wait awhile till you get better posted. I am going to lend you some books on this subject and you will come out all right yet." "Very well," said I, "I will gladly read everything on this subject, but I mean to read both sides. I am going to get Paine's 'Age of Reason' as soon as I can and read it." Well, do you believe it, the preacher never again mentioned those books he spoke of. But I hunted around and got acquainted with some Freethinkers. One of them lent me the "Age of Reason" and some copies of the Investigator. I did not know till then that there was a Freethought newspaper in the world. I read the "Age of Reason," and was astonished at the discovery that I was a bigger Infidel than Thomas Paine. I immediately subscribed for the Investigator, and afterward for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I then notified the preacher to erase my name from the church-membership list, for I was no longer a Methodist. When I entered the church I expected to find nothing but harmony, love, and brotherly kindness. Instead of that, I found the very opposit. And the quarrels in the church were the cause of many domestic squalls in my own family. But they were the means that helped to open my eyes and awaken me from the horrible nightmare of superstition that I was in, therefore I am very glad it happened. So you see I became a Freethinker in a different way from that in which the generality of Freethinkers do. I hav a family of eleven children. My wife and my three eldest grown daughters are members of the Methodist church. My four nearly grown sons I notice like to look at the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and also to read and laugh at the jokes on the last page. They occasionally, I think, read some of the inside matter. My youngest little girls I observe spelling out the little stories in the "Children's Corner." For that reason I like the pictures and jokes for the sake of the boys, and the stories in the "Children's Corner" for the sake of the little girls. In order to accommodate my wife and big girls I fear that you would hav to fill up the rest of the paper with Joe Cook's and Talmage's sermons. But perhaps that would be asking too much, so I will take THE TRUTH SEEKER just the same if you do not print a single word in it about either Cook or Talmage. Being brought up a Methodist, I am naturally long-winded when I come to tell my experience, so if I hav wearied you, I hope you will forgiv me on that account. ROBERT SWAIL.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

To Mary Ba(i)rd Finch.

The poet goldfinch with pinions
Like the glory of the sun's rays;
The bullfinch with his crimson breast,
Like ardent lovers' hearts ablaze—

How wonderfully sweet they sing,
How inspiring their song, how gay!
Yet I know of a Ba(i)rd, a Finch,
Who sings more divinely than they.

The gentle zephyrs catch the notes
And send them floating on the breeze;
I list and hear their cadence rare,
Their symphony among the trees.

In the spring and bright summer time
Merry are the chimes of the birds—
The dear little poets, the bards,
But they're songs without any words.

No words to soothe the weary souls,
To cheer the lonely and the sad;
To banish grief and sorrow,
To elevate and make them glad.

Then sing, still sing thy songs divine,
And thy dear name immortalize;
Sing, ever sing thy songs, and with
Them help the earth to Edenize.

Los Angeles, Cal. SADIE ATHENA MAGOON.

Looking at Both Sides.

The good wife bustled about the house,
Her face still bright with a pleasant smile,
As broken snatches of happy song
Strengthened her heart and her hands the while.
The good man sat in the chimney nook,
His little clay pipe within his lips,
And all he'd made and all he had lost,
Ready and clear on his finger tips.

"Good wife, I've just been thinking a bit;
Nothing has done very well this year,
Money is bound to be hard to get,
Everything's sure to be very dear.
How the cattle are going to feed,
How we're to keep the boys at school,
Is a kind of debit and credit sum
I can't make balance by any rule."

She turned her around from the baking board,
And she faced him there with a cheerful laugh;
"Why, husband, dear, one would really think
That the good, rich wheat was only chaff.
And what if wheat is only chaff,
So long as we both are well and strong?
I'm not a woman to worry a bit—
But—somehow or other, we get along.

"Into all lives some rain must fall,
Over all lands the storm must beat,
But when the storm and pain are o'er
The sunshine is sure to be twice as sweet.
Through every strait we hav found a road,
In every grief we hav found a song;
We hav had to bear and had to wait,
But, somehow or other, we get along.

"For thirty years we hav loved each other,
Stood by each other whatever befell;
Six boys hav called us 'father' and 'mother,'
And all of them living and doing well.
We owe no man a penny, my dear;
Are both of us loving and well and strong.
Good man, I wish you would smoke again,
And think how well we hav got along."

He filled his pipe with a pleasant laugh,
He kissed his wife with a tender pride;
He said, "I'll do as you tell me, love;
I'll just count up on the other side."
She left him then with his better thought,
And lifted her work with a low, sweet song,
A song that's followed me many a year—
"Somehow or other, we get along."

—Mackay Standard.

The Cacao tree.

I suppose that many of the children of the Children's Corner are acquainted with chocolate, but perhaps are not with the tree from which chocolate is obtained. It might perhaps be interesting to them to know something about the cacao-tree.

The cacao-tree is from twenty to thirty feet high, and resembles a large hazel-bush, but is rather thicker in the trunk. The leaf is something like that of a sweet chestnut, only larger. It is planted out in plantations, at fifteen feet equidistant. It is generally set out in the same way as a coffee orchard, except that the young stocks may be transplanted from the nursery after two months' growth. An acre of land will accommodate about two hundred trees. The tree begins to bear sometimes at three years, but is never in full bearing before it is ten years old, and yields annually two crops, and with proper care it can attain the age of about sixty years. A cacao plantation is shaded by very large trees, the Bois immortelle, or as it is called in Spanish, El madre del cacao.

For the proper development of the cacao-tree, so as to produce remunerativ crops, it requires at least a temperature of eighty degrees Fahrenheit. Hence it is that the area of the cacao belt is comparativly restricted. Besides this, this tree requires a moist soil and a humid temperature, and so the lands along the coast of the Carribean sea, sloping from the mountain tops to the shore, bedewed by the exhalations from the sea and irrigated by the numerous rivulets that course down the valleys, are found to be in all respects adapted to cacao plantations.

It is a very beautiful and picturesque sight to look at the valleys and hills in the season when the Bois immortelle is blooming. They hav beautiful violet-colored flowers, which combined with the surrounding trees and their variegated flowers, presents an appearance to the eye which is indeed lovely.

The fruit of the cacao-tree is a great big pod eight or nine inches long, and it grows not on the sprays like other fruits, but hangs from the side of the trunks or one of the larger branches. The pods vary in color from a deep crimson to scarlet and orange, and a heap when gathered has a very pretty appearance. The pods contain from sixty to seventy beans each. They are opened by the sharp (machetis) large knives of the (peons) laborers.

The bean in size, color, and form is very similar to the almond. After the beans are taken from the pods they are placed in large heaps in fermentation boxes, where they remain for a few days, and are afterward taken out in the sun and dried. It is afterward shipped to Europe or the United States in bags containing 170 to 180 pounds, which sells from $15 to $25 per bag, according to the quality.

It is from the cacao bean that chocolate is made. I infer that many of the children of the Children's Corner hav seen the process how the bean is converted into chocolate, and therefore it would be out of place here.

SOTNAS.

[We are grateful to our friend for his instructiv and interesting account of the cacao-tree. We hope the Corner may often hav the privilege of welcoming his graceful and scholarly essays.—ED. C. C.]

The Squarest Un Among 'Em.

The charitable ladies from the hospital stood beside a little newly-made grave in the Potter's Field, over which the preacher had said the last prayer for the departed child's soul. One kind-faced lady, turning to walk down the narrow path, saw a ragged newsboy standing beside one of the mounds. She had seen dozens of newsboys of the same type every day—had passed them by unnoticed on her way to the cemetery that afternoon—yet it was strange to find this boy in such a place, and there was something in the face bent toward the poor mound that tempted her to speak.

"Why, what brings you here, my little man?"

The boy looked up in astonishment. Dropping his eyes, as if to hide traces of tears, he answered:

"I—I thought I'd jest come out and see where it was they put Jim."

"And who was Jim? Tell me about him."

"Jim? There weren't nothin' much about Jim, 'ceptin' he was my pal, and he died. They wouldn't let me see him when he was sick and I thought I'd like to find out which one of these was his'n. They hain't given him so much as a board to mark it."

"Did you like him?"

"Like him? Didn't I though? You just bet I did! He was the squarest un among 'em. Never took a cent he didn't earn at shines or sellin', and was allers fair at penny ante. He made the others play fair, too. Why, I seen him scoop in twelve cents all to onct—fair play, too. Then the littlest fellow in the crowd he cried 'cause he lost his two cents and couldn't hav no supper, and Jim up and gave him ten cents and buyed a doughnut with the other two cents for himself, and giv me half, 'cause he allers looked out fer me, I bein' smaller'n him. We liked each other, I can tell ye, Jim and me. He left me his newspaper bag and this here piece of caliker, what he wanted me allers to keep. 'Tain't nothin' worth nothin', but he thought a sight of it. Ye see 'twas like this: One day last winter he'd been trying all the mornin' and hadn't sold a paper, and he was so cold he was a-runnin' and hollerin' ter keep him a little warm, he happens to think of this in his pocket. He stops short and takes it out and looks at it and puts it back in his pocket and buttons his coat tight on it and runs on. A cop what sees him do it comes runnin' after him, thinkin' he was gettin' off with something he'd been a thievin'. And he ketches a holt of Jim in a way as Jim said as hurt him, and he says to show him what he's stole and come along with him. Then Jim stands up as prompt as he can, bein' held so tight, and says he, a-takin' out this bit of caliker:

"'It's a piece of my mother's dress, sir. It's all I've got as was hers. I keeps it in my pocket, and I look at it when things goes hard, and it helps me to sell.'

"And it did help him that time, for the folks as was standin' round, hearin' it, crowded up to buy his papers fast as he could hand 'em out. He sold most a hundred papers that day, and that night him and me went to a restring and had such a supper of hot stew and things as ye never eat. I keeps the kaliker 'cause he left it fer me with the woman at the hospital.

"I wanted to do somethin' for him, but I'm broke just now and can't. Business ain't brisk since he ain't in partnership with me no longer. I hain't got nothin' ter leave here with him 'ceptin' this. I took it out of a store were there was a new party jist movin' in. He had a likin' for them advertisin' cards."

The lady glanced down at the little mound of earth, where the boy had placed a pasteboard card from a shop window. The writing was blurred and illegible, except the two words in large letters:

"Removed to——."

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

Paterfamilias: "Wonder what's the matter with my watch; I think it must need cleaning." Tommy: "Guess it must be clean enough, pa; cos I saw baby washin' it in the bathtub this morning."

A little girl was in a beautiful garden with a number of ladies one day, when the following conversation took place: Lady No. 1: "This is a perfect garden of Eden!" Lady No. 2: "Yes, and what a number of Eves are here!" Nellie (seven years old): "Yes, and not an Adam to Add-um up."

"Mamma, what's hereditary?" asked Bobby, laboriously tripping over the syllables of the long word. "Why, it is—anything you get from your father or me," replied the mother, a little puzzled for a definition suited to his years. Silence for two minutes. "Then, ma," he asked, "is spankin' hereditary?"

"Be a good boy, Johnny," said the minister, "and study hard. You may be the president of the United States some day." "Well, I guess not." "Why, Johnny, I am surprised at you. Don't you want to be president?" "No, sir; it's bad enough to write compositions to suit the school-marm. When it comes to working over tariff essays that will suit a whole country full of kickers—excuse me."

Teacher (to new ten-year-old scholar): "Who made you?" Ten-year-old: "Don't know." Teacher: "Don't know! You ten years old, and can't answer that question! Why, there's little Willie, he is only three, and I know he can answer it. Who made you, Willie?" Willie (model scholar): "God." Ten-year-old boy: "Oh, well! he ought'er know—he's only been made three years, and I've been made ten."

Last Sunday little Alice, five years old, who is a regular attendant at Sunday-school, was with her class reciting their lesson when the subject was turned to the passage of scripture where it speaks of Lot's wife turning to salt. Little Alice paid close attention until they had stopped talking, when she spoke up and said: "What did they do with her after she turned to salt?" Then before giving her teacher time to answer, replied, "Oh, I know. I suppose they used her to salt meat and potatoes with."

Acknowledge the Corn.

The phrase "acknowledge the corn" is variously accounted for, but the following is a true history of its origin: In 1828 Alexander Stewart, member of Congress, said in a speech that Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana sent their haystacks, cornfields, and fodder to New York and Philadelphia for sale. Wickliffe, another member, called him to order, declaring that those states did not send their haystacks and cornfields to the Eastern cities for sale. "Well, what do you send?" asked Stewart. "Why, horses, mules, cattle, and hogs." "Well, what makes your horses, mules, cattle, and hogs?" queried Stewart.

"You feed $100 worth of hay to a horse. In doing that you just animate your haystack and get on top of it and ride off to market. How is it with your cattle? You make one of them carry $50 worth of hay to the Eastern market. How much corn does it take to fatten a hog, Mr. Wickliffe?" "Thirty-three bushels," replied the man from Kentucky. "Then you just put thirty-three bushels of corn into the shape of a hog and walk him off to market," said Stewart. At this point in the debate Wickliffe sprang to his feet and exclaimed very hurriedly, "Mr. Speaker! Mr. Speaker! I acknowledge the corn." The incident caused quite a laugh among the members and was never forgotten.

LITTLE FRED came down to breakfast with the grippe in full force. "Bofe of my eyes is leaking," he said, "and one of my noses don't go."

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 314 S. State st, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, Woodbine Cottage, Coit ave., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 803 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau st., New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
W. Smith, 329 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.
Emory P. Robinson, Sydney.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.
W. Wedeken, Portland, Ore.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.

tf

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

FREETHOUGHT

IS IT

DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?

A SYMPOSIUM

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAMS,
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,	THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:

Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?

PRICE 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

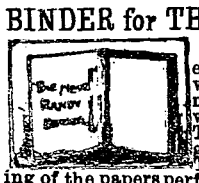
8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,



The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND, LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Charles Watts's Works.

The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of Mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.

A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.

Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.

The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.

Saints and Sinners—Which? 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Nature and the Supernatural; or, Belief and Knowledge. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3. Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.

NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.

Christianity: Defectiv and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,

OR, THE

Conflict between Reason and Superstition.

BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FESTIVAL OF ASHTAROTH.

A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews.

By A. C. MIDDLETON.

Price, ... 10 cents.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.—[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ANTICHRIST.

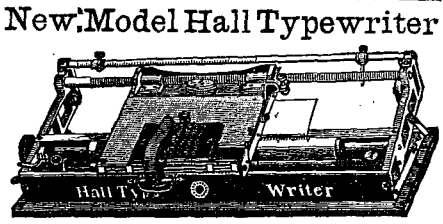
PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS

AN ADDRESS

By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE



New York State Bar Association, at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1890.

The only Complete and Authorized Edition.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

New Model Hall Typewriter

The Best Standard Typewriter in the World. Cheap, Portable, No Ink Ribbon, Interchangeable Type in all Languages, Easiest to learn and rapid as any. Agents wanted everywhere. WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED. Address

National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. P. O. box 5159.
Send for catalog and specimens of work.
13t10

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies. For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, ... $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Every Liberal Should Read

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.

INTRODUCTION.

Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.

Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Poetry.

Poetry for the Polemics.

THE DE ST'S CREED.

I believe that God, who planted the hope
Of eternal life in the human breast
Has ample power to giv it scope,
Without any prompting by priest or pope,
And I trust his wisdom, for all the rest.

I believe this life is a primary school,
Where man is prepared for a higher sphere,
That all will arrive at the selfsame goal,
When the Jew and the gentile, the sage and the fool,
Will resume life's task when they leave it here.

I believe that conditions are all that divide
The good and the evil, the high and the low,
That the humble serf and the king in his pride
Will stand on a level, side by side,
And the least will hav plenty of time to grow.

The bud is the pledge of the future rose,
The spring is the source of the mighty stream,
And I hav no doubt but time will disclose
That our imperfections cause our woes,
And that life is more than an idle dream.

—Livy Penney in Mt. Desert Herald.

Poetry for the Lovers.

IN THE HAMMOCK.

Beth and I in the hammock swung;
June was sobbing its life away—
Dew, like tears, from each grass-point hung,
And up in bent boughs, to greet the day,
A wee bird sang this strain to me:
"Love lingereth through eternity."

"All these round little worlds of dew
Disappear when the sun mounts high;
So will this world that cradled you
Sink in the stream of time and die.
What shall it matter to you or me?
Love is the child of eternity!"

Widely opening her languid eyes,
Beth looked laughingly at my own;
Was it a glance of sweet surprise
At finding how luminous life had grown?
"Why not love me now?" said she,
"It's so long to wait for eternity!"

—Wm. Haskell Simpson in Chicago News.

FIVE O'CLOOK IN THE MORNING.

The dew lay glittering on the grass,
A mist lay on the brook;
At the earliest beam of the glowing sun,
The swallow her nest forsook;
The snowy bloom of the hawthorn tree
Lay thickly the ground adorning;
The birds were singing on every bush,
At five o'clock in the morning.

And Bessie, the milkmaid, merrily sang,
For the meadows were fresh and fair;
The breeze of the morning kissed her brow,
And played with her nut-brown hair;
But oft she turned and looked around,
As if the silence scorning;
'Twas time for the mower to whet his scythe,
At five o'clock in the morning.

And over the meadows mowers came,
And merry their voices rang;
And one among them wended his way
To where the milkmaid sang;
And as he lingered by her side,
Despite his comrade's warning,
The old, old story was told again,
At five o'clock in the morning.

A SUMMER ROMANCE.

We stood in the moonlight's tender glow,
And I thought her the daintiest girl
That ever lived; and I loved her so,
She had set my brain awhirl!
For she was charmingly gay that night,
And we stood on the shore in the soft moonlight,
And never a soul was nigh.

So I whispered low, "I love you, dear,
And you thrill me through and through!
As I look in your eyes, in the moonlight here,
It is all that I can do
To keep from straining you close to me now,
And kissing your eyes and your lips, I vow—
It's hard to be good!" said I.

Then she looked up at me with a roguish glance,
And a light was in her eyes,
That made my blood leap and the whole world dance
In a rapture of sweet surprise.
"I suppose it is hard," she roguishly said;
Then, softly, and turning away her head,
She added, "What makes you try?"

—Exchange.

Poetry for the Philosophers.

A WISE CONOLUSION.

Tim Doolan and his wife wan night
Were drinkin' av the crature,
Whin something started up a fight,
An' they wint at it right an' tight,
According to their nature.
O'Grady and mesilf stood near
Expecting bloody murther.
Says he to me: "Let's interfere."
But I, pretending not to hear,
Moved off a little further.
"Lave off, ye brute," says he to Tim;
"No man wud sthrike a lady."
But both the Doolans turned on him,
And in a whist the two ayethim
Were wallopin' O'Grady.
That night, whin I was home in bed,
Remembering that token,
I took the notion in my head
That the wisest word I iver said
Was the one that wasn't spoken.

—India Exchange.

Poetry for the Poets.

GOOD MORNING.

"Good morning, world!" On the window seat
She balanced her two little timid feet;
She clung with her dimpled hands and stood
Framed in like a picture of babyhood.
The clambering vines hung low and green
'Round the sunniest curls that e'er were seen
As she stood with beauty and light impearled,
And bade "Good morning" to all the world.
"Good morning, world!" and the great world heard;
Each rustling tree and each singing bird.
The dancing flowers and the fields of grass
Nodded and waved at the little lass;
And the far-off hills and the sky overhead
Listened and beamed as the word was said;
And the old sun lifted his head and smiled—
"Good morning, world!" "Good morning, child!"

GIRARD'S WILL AND Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid. for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER. tf

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED ANCIENT EDITION.

A so-called "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary" is being offered to the public at a very low price. The body of the book, from A to Z, is a cheap reprint, page for page, of the edition of 1847, which was in its day, a valuable book, but in the progress of language for over FORTY YEARS, has been completely superseded. It is now reproduced, broken type, errors and all, by photo-lithograph process, is printed on cheap paper and flimsily bound. A brief comparison, page by page, between the reprint and the latest and enlarged edition, will show the great superiority of the latter. These reprints are as out of date as a last year's almanac. No honorable dealer will allow the buyer of such to suppose that he is getting the Webster which to-day is accepted as the Standard and THE BEST,—every copy of which bears our imprint as given below.

☞ If persons who have been induced to purchase the "Ancient Edition" by any misrepresentations will advise us of the facts, we will undertake to see that the seller is punished as he deserves.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO.
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00;

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents;

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price. $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents;

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This givs a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Duo Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No.2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps. 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Biblo-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell..... 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Capphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 5
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology..... 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
10 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson..... 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
23 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 288pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ASTHMA—DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE CURED never fails; send us your address, we will mail trial BOTTLE FREE
DR. TAFT BROS., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. ROSSITER RAYMOND.
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR BOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SPECIAL SALE OF WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2 50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4 50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.50; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels. $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart-shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can have their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 5th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,
Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union
Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club
Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Milwaukee, Wis., Liberal Club
Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 216 Grand ave., (Fraternity Hall). Lecture followed by debates. The public cordially invited.

Brotherhood of Moralists, No. 903, Prairie City, Ia.,
Meets every Sunday in the Liberal reading-room hall at 2:30 P.M. All Liberals are cordially invited. F. V. DRAPER, Cor. Sec.

San Francisco, Cal., Freethought Society
Meets every Sunday evening at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Seats free.

Des Moines Secular Union
Holds regular meetings at Good Templar Hall, Flynn Block, S.E corner 7th and Locust streets. Lectures followed by discussion. Friends from abroad heartily welcome.
FRANKLIN STEINER, Pres.

Portsmouth, O., Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7 P.M. in Grand Army Hall Lectures, discussions, readings, poems, music and songs. A cordial invitation is extended to all; especially to friends from abroad. Correspondence solicited. J. L. TRENTHART, President. WILL S. ANDRES, Secretary.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N.J.

Inquiries are frequently received asking what we know about Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, N. J., First, we know that he is a reliable gentleman of rare professional skill, who has earned success by good work. Second that he fulfills all has agreements to the letter. Third, that he has performed cures of hopeless cases that in the olden time his skill would have been called miraculous. Fourth and last, we know him to be an honest man and a stanch Liberal.—The Better Way.

News of the Week.

AT the burning of the Texas Spring Palace, at Fort Worth, on the 30th ult., twenty persons were injured, but only one, Walter Hayne, was killed, and this was while risking himself to save others. Russell Harrison also showed bravery, which has made him popular.

STANLEY will lecture through America this fall.

A $40,000 statue of Hendricks will be unveiled at Indianapolis on the Fourth of July.

AT San Francisco on the 30th ult. a railroad accident from an open drawbridge killed thirteen.

IN Paris Nihilists were arrested recently while sending explosivs to St. Petersburg to use against the czar.

IN the Schuylkill valley the grass worm that did so much damage twenty years ago has reappeared and is creating havoc.

SEVEN children were recently bitten by a mad dog at St. Joseph, Ill., and hav come to New York for treatment on Pasteur's method.

ENGLISH papers take the occasion of Emperor William's receiving an injury of the foot, to remind him that he is only mortal and that he must talk less about divine right.

NEW YORK state has enacted that no person interested in the sale or manufacture of liquor may hold public office. This disables the mayors and aldermen of many cities.

STANLEY reproaches England with slackness in contesting African territory with Germany.

WILLIAM THOMPSON recently became crazy from attending religious meetings at Eldorado, Kan., and attacked his family with a butcher knife.

AN Anarchist named Kaiser has been arrested on suspicion of attempting to blow up the Haymarket monument. He does not belong to the Chicago circle, who would not anger the public while working for a pardon for their imprisoned comrades.

AT the unveiling of Lee's monument at Richmond there was the greatest gathering in that city since the war. Twenty thousand men in gray marched. Colonel Shepard of New York was denounced for his utterances against the preponderance of Confederate over Union flags.

Two negro convicts who had escaped from Trenton penitentiary after sandbagging the keeper and robbing him of $800 and a revolver, were overtaken near Philadelphia. After they had fired and dangerously wounded a policeman, one was killed. The other was captured, and sat all the rest of the day by the body of his mate singing hymns and praying.

A NATIONAL convention of Christian Scientists opened in New York on the 27th ult. Two thousand, mostly women, were present. Among the reports of progress was this from McGregor, Ia.: "All the members of orthodox churches in this town of 1,500 people hav withdrawn and hav become Christian Scientists. The doctors are in despair."

ST. MAHLEN, Germany, has suffered so from hailstorms that on the 22d ult. the people assembled in church and prayed for their cessation. While they were praying a storm came up and lightning struck the building. Four persons were instantly killed and twenty were injured, four being rendered completely blind. The people were panic-stricken, and in the mad rush for the doors two children were crushed to death.

To satisfy objectors to the census questions as to mortgage, ailments, etc., the commissioner has directed that these queries need not be answered. Declination to answer will be noted by the canvasser, and the decliner will receive from Washington a mailed request for the information. After the statement has been mailed to Washington and there recorded without name, the communication will be destroyed, all being kept private. The physicians of New York and Brooklyn hav been asked for statistics of their patients, but as the request was not mandatory most hav declined replying, on the ground that it would violate confidence. However, no names would hav been published, and only the totals given the press.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Givs a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

28 Lafayette Place, N.Y.

DAVID IS SORRY FOR SPOILING SAUL'S UNIFORM.

And it came to pass afterward, that David's heart smote him, because he had cut off Saul's skirt.—1 Sam. xxiv, 5.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1890.

(E. M. 290.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Calendar for 1890,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1889,	17
Faded Flowers. Poem by J. E. Remsburg,	24
The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue. T. B. Wakeman,	26
Mostly Fools. W. Stewart Ross (Saladin),	36
Record of the Spanish Inquisition,	44
Dates of the Fabrication of Some Roman Catholic Dogmas,	44
The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a Moral. Helen H. Gardener,	45
The Middle Ages. Illustrated,	69
The Priest,	70
The Supernatural World,	71
The Reformation,	73
Future Terrors,	77
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated,	79
Freethought Journals in the United States,	96
In Search of a Spirit. E. M. Macdonald,	97
Why I Left the Church. H. O. Pentecost,	109

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Gems of Thought.

CANNIBALISM: It was superstition that caused human victims to be immolated; it was necessity that caused them to be eaten. Which is the greater crime—to assemble piously together to plunge a knife into the heart of a girl adorned with fillets, or to eat a worthless man who has been killed in our own defense?—Voltaire.

Is it more barbarous to eat a man when dead, than to hav him roasted by a slow fire, or torn to pieces by dogs and swine, as is yet fresh in our memories—and that not between ancient enemies, but among neighbors and fellow-citizens—and, which is worse, on pretense of piety and religion?—Montaigne.

RELIGIOUS despotism, monarchical despotism, hav more than once obtained the sanction, almost the love, of the population which they governed. Perhaps this may be partly accounted for by the fact that, in religious and monarchical despotism, authority is always exercised by virtue of some belief or opinion common to both ruler and subjects; he is the representativ, the minister, of another power superior to all human powers. He speaks or acts in the name of divinity or of a common feeling, and not in the name of man himself, of man alone.—Guizot's History of Civilization.

IT was at this time that those strange theories which Filmer afterward formed into a system, and which became the badge of the most violent class of Tories and high churchmen, first emerged into notice. It was gravely maintained that the supreme being regarded hereditary monarchy, as opposed to other forms of government, with peculiar favor; that the rule of succession, in order of primogeniture, was a divine institution, anterior to the Christian and even to the Mosaic dispensation; that no human power, not even that of the whole legislature, no length of adverse possession, though it extended to ten centuries, could deprive the legitimate prince of his rights; that his authority was necessarily always despotic; that the laws by which, in England and in other countries, the prerogativ was limited, were to be regarded merely as concessions which the sovereign had freely made and might at his pleasure resume; and that any treaty into which a king might enter with his people was merely a declaration of his present intentions, and not a contract of which the performance could be demanded.—Macaulay's History of England.

THE nations in which faith in theology remains the strongest at the present day are certainly not in the front rank of civilization, nor do they furnish striking examples of obedience to the moral code. The southern Italians, the Spaniards, and the Irish are preëminently theological, but are not so conspicuous for their good social qualities. High in the scale of piety, they are low in that of morality.—John Wilson.

I AM firmly persuaded that whatever is injurious to the intellect is also injurious to moral life; and on this conviction I base my conduct with respect to Christianity. That religion is pernicious to the intellect; it demands that the reason shall be sacrificed upon the altar; it orders civilized men to believe in the legends of a savage race.—Winwood Reade.

MEN are unhappy only because they are ignorant; they are ignorant only because everything conspires to prevent their being enlightened; they are wicked only because their reason is not sufficiently developed.—D'Holbach.

As to crime, the science of heredity has a great mission in this field. Conversion may rescue a few; but the improvement of the race must be gradually effected by physical improvement, by vivid impressions of the certainty of the punishment of crime, and by the growth of prosperity. A disciple asked the ancient Rationalist, Confucius, "Since the people are so numerous, what more is needed?" Confucius replied, "Make them well off." "After that, what else?" "Instruct them." Preaching and tracts will not restrain the starving. Comfort is a prerequisit to learning. The question of capital and labor is therefore a problem intimately connected with that of crime, and general thrift must precede general virtue.—Robert C. Adams.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 17. No. 24. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. { New York, Saturday, June 14, 1890. } 28 LAFAYETTE PL. } $3.00 per year.

MURDER WITH PRAYER.—(SEE PAGE 375.)

Notes and Clippings.

FROM Proctor Knott's Louisville lecture: "Women in the olden days were not allowed to drink wine, and to prove that they had not been drinking it they kissed everybody they met. This would be better than Prohibition."

THE London Women's Liberal Federation will present a memorial to Mr. Gladstone asking him to include the granting of the franchise to women in the program of issues to be settled at the next general election for members of Parliament.

GREAT preparations are being made in Mayence to celebrate the 450th anniversary of the invention of the art of printing. On June 22d there will be an exhibition of specimens of printing from the days of Gutenberg down to the present time. On June 24th, the natal day of Gutenberg, the Gutenberg Platz and the monument erected to him will be brilliantly illuminated.

A NUMBER of wealthy Jews recently offered $200,000 for the Vatican's copy of the Hebrew Bible, but the pope would not sell. A similar effort to buy this Bible was made in 1512, when Julius II. was greatly in need of money, but still he refused $100,000. The nearest approach to such a price for a book hitherto was $50,000, paid by the German government in 1884 for the missal formerly given by Leo X. to Henry VIII., together with the parchment making that sovereign "Defender of the Faith." Charles II. gave the missal to the duke of Hamilton, and it stayed in his family two hundred years.

KAISER WILLIAM selected a dinner at Königsberg for delivering his conception of kingship in the following speech: "It was here, in the palace church, that his majesty, the late Emperor William I., again proclaimed before the whole world his kingship by the grace of God. This 'kingship by the grace of God' expresses the fact that we Hohenzollerns accept our crown only from heaven, and are responsible to heaven for the performance of its duties. I, too, am animated by this view, and am resolved to act and to govern on this principle."

A DISPATCH from the city of Mexico, dated June 6th, says that some of the Protestants resident in Geretaro, where the religious riots occurred last Sunday, hav received long, threatening, anonymous letters saying that the Protestant ministers must leave the city, or take chances of being murdered. The letters are well written. One letter was sent to the president by a Protestant inclosing another asking him for protection. A prompt reply was sent that they should be fully protected. As D. M. Bennett would remark, See how these Christians love one another.

DR. A. SUPAN, the distinguished German geographer, makes the remarkable assertion in Petermann's Mitteilungen that changes in the geographical latitude of places hav been observed for several years. It was thought that these apparent changes might be due to errors in observations or imperfections in instruments, but during the past year systematic observations hav been made at a number of central European observatories which hav demonstrated that the geographical latitude of a place is not constant, or, in other words, that the earth's axis is subject to small variations with regard to whose character and cause we are as yet completely in the dark.

SAYS the Oregonian: "Presbyterians may not be able to purge their creed of the doctrin of infant damnation, election, predestination, and other cheerful features for a while, but there is evidence of progress in their church decrees, for all that. Witness the action of the Oregon presbytery at Albany last week in deciding that the students in the ministry could not use tobacco. This may not amount to much, it is true, but it indicates a belief (by one majority in the presbytery), in the declaration that cleanliness is akin to godliness, and is encouraging as far as it goes."

MARCUS SNYDER, of Spirit Lake, Iowa, writes to the Ironclad Age: "I was at Des Moines and present in the supreme court when Billings's case was argued. I heard nearly all the evidence read; that is, all that the attorneys considered important, and I must say that I never before knew of anyone being convicted on such slim evidence. Before this I was of the opinion that Billings was guilty. I am now confident that Kingsley shot Billings and then ended his own life. Billings has a hard reputation; whether it is all on account of his religious views I am not able to state. The supreme court will certainly giv him a new trial or acquit him. I think they will acquit."

ALEXANDER TAGLIAFERRO, of Alexandria, Egypt, writes to the directors of the Chicago World's Fair that he is in a position to furnish them an interesting exhibit. He has sent the officials a photograph of a sarcophagus which he asserts is that of Cleopatra. It was recently discovered in Cæsar's Camp, near Alexandria, by archæologists. When the sarcophagus was opened the contents were in ashes, with the exception of the skeleton, which is still preserved. Mr. Tagliaferro says he is prompted to negotiate with the Exposition authorities from notices which he has seen in the newspapers from the United States announcing that the khedive of Egypt has been asked by the directors of the Exposition for the mummy of Ramises. His price is $60,000 at Alexandria.

IT has long been a silent but gnawing grief in the bosom of the New England clergyman. We refer, says the World, to donation parties, free parsonages, surprise parties, and kindred games which rural congregations hav been in the habit of playing on their innocent and unworldly pastors. To giv a man a donation party, eat up all the seeming eleemosynary food, and all the provisions in the house besides, has been a grim and expensiv joke for more than a century. To provide a free parsonage whose maintenance must cost more than the minister's salary is a direct outcome of the donation party theory. Such a scheme has finally broken the back of the pastor's patienee and he has revolted. It was in Somerville, near Boston, and the society insisted that the minister should liv in a $30,000 "mansion" which has been bequeathed to it. He had a house of his own. His salary was only $3,000, and he insisted that he could not afford the fine "mansion." Then the society kindly proposed to use part of the house for "sewing circles and meetings," and that seemed to the pastor to make the proposition even less desirable. The donation party idea has reached a climax and there is a "rose of down" for the rural clergyman.

Communications.

Is It True That the Catholic Church Is the Enemy of Progress?

The above question is propounded and answered by a Catholic paper called Church Progress and Catholic World, which was sent to me by a friend in Ohio, requesting me to tell what I think about it in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The author of the article opens up in this wise:

If you mean by progress, divorce, polygamy, sects, Socialism, etc., yes. Such things are not the outcome of Catholic teaching.

While it may be true that Catholics do not openly teach these things, yet is it not true that they regard the Bible as a sacred book, written by divine inspiration? If so, do they not indorse the loose and lecherous conduct of David and Solomon and all the old patriarchs and polygamous wretches with hundreds of light women around them, and who are represented to be under the direct command of God? And do not Catholics teach that these men were appointed to giv laws to and govern the people? And is it not true that it was the law and the custom for these divinely appointed blisters on humanity to put away their wives whenever the whim took them without let or hindrance? So that there is really a lie covered up in the first paragraph.

The church has not been the enemy, but the best friend and guide of this world's march to the highest ascents of progress.

It takes one of long practice and possessed of the devil's own grit to stand up unblushingly and lie before a multitude, when two-thirds of the people know he is lying.

If the above statement is true Catholics ought to be the most intelligent people in the world. But the very reverse is true. Not only so, but Catholics hav the highest criminal rating according to their number of any class of people in the country.

The mission of the church is to teach truths of the supernatural order, but as truths of the natural order are from God also, the truths in both orders will not contradict each other.

If the law of gravitation is a truth of the natural order, does it not contradict the statement of the supernatural order that men hav ascended bodily? If the science of astronomy is founded in truth, does not its truth contradict the statement that the planets were stopped in their courses, and that the crucifixion of Christ caused the sun to be darkened, and that Egypt was shrouded in darkness on account of the conduct of a king who acted just as God compelled him to act? If natural truth is in harmony with the supernatural, then the natural truth that when people die life can never return ought to harmonize with the supernatural statement that people jumped out of their graves and rambled about the country. What is supernatural truth to a Catholic is a natural lie to all people who take reason for their guide.

The church always interested herself in the glory which resulted to religion from being the foster mother and patroness of learning and science.

How does this statement tally with the fact that the greatest ignorance prevails in the most Catholic countries? In Italy seventy-three per cent, in Spain eighty per cent, in Mexico ninety-three per cent of the people are illiterate. Is it because these peoples are intellectually inferior to other nationalities, or because ignorance follows in the wake of Catholicism as naturally as sharks follow in the wake of a famin-stricken ship? The author of this article was either very ignorant or else he lied to deceive the people.

If Guttenberg had waited seventy years longer before inventing the printing-press, and printing the Bible, and if Columbus had waited thirty years more before discovering America, what eloquent orations we would hav on the glories of the Reformation!

There are two point-blank lies covered up in the above statement. And they show as much meanness as a sneaking boy who lies to disgrace his mother. The church would hav the world believe that it is entitled to the glory of these two great achievements. The truth is, the church fought the printing-press, as an insane savage would fight one who was trying to better his condition. The art of printing was denounced by the church as the work of the devil. The publication of most books was prohibited, and for years no book could be published without the consent of the church. And even at this late day the church dictates to its enslaved dupes the kind of books which they may read.

As for the project of the discovery of America, the church fought it tooth and nail, and officially denounced it at the council of Salamanca. These facts are too well known to be disputed by any except Catholics, who are kept so ignorant that they are a disgrace to the civilization of the age, in order that they may the more easily be fleeced by the church.

If the church were the friend of mental darkness, she had, during the Middle Ages, the golden opportunity to display her spirit, and scatter to the winds the sources of enlightenment.

Is not that pretty rich? I knew the church would lie, but a more disingenuous lie was never told by the "father of lies." The church had the "golden opportunity," and most damagingly did she use it. Why did the author of the article under consideration refer to this period as the "Middle Ages," instead of the "Dark Ages," as it is generally called? Was it because he was afraid that some of his readers might be led to inquire what was meant by the "Dark Ages," and what produced the darkness, and thus find out that the church did "display her spirit and scatter to the winds the source of enlightenment?" This "golden opportunity" of the church rolled a wave of darkness over all Europe, that she did not recover from for more than a thousand years. This period was not called the Dark Ages because the sun was shrouded in darkness, but because of the worse than midnight darkness of ignorance and brutality which prevailed during that period.

Let it be borne in mind that during this time the power of the church was triumphant. Even the state was under the complete sway and control of the church. Notwithstanding the pretentious boast of the church, there was not one in a hundred who could write his own name, and the physical condition of the masses was worse than that of our domestic animals to-day.

Their houses were of the rudest kind, built of mud, or stone laid up without mortar. Their clothes were after the most primitiv pattern, made of hides and skins or plaits of straw bound round them with thongs or strips of bark. Their food was black bread, roots, and herbs, nuts, wild fruits—in short, it was little better than that of savages. And a more superstitious race could nowhere be found.

Let anyone read the history of the Middle Ages, and he or she will become satisfied that it is impossible to do justice to the subject in an article of this kind. "Golden opportunity," sure enough, to the church and the priesthood, but the masses were reduced almost to a level with brutes, mentally and physically.

The church had everything its own way; there was nobody to oppose it—all were Catholics. They were put to the rack or burnt if they were not. The author of the article committed, so to speak, a rape on truth and history, and was probably too intelligent not to know that he lied. "O for a lodge in some vast wilderness!" O for a lodge anywhere where Christians will not lie for the church!

She [the church] gathered up with loving care beneath the folds of her mantle the literary treasures of the past, and all she could find of the monuments of profane learning from Greece and Rome.

We read that God put lying spirits in the mouths of the prophets, but our Catholic author was so crammed with them that there must hav been help from the "other fellow" too. It is notorious that the church preserved whatever upheld it, and altered or utterly destroyed whatever opposed it. This was true of the sciences, particularly that of astronomy, as well as of literature. And she has not outgrown her old tricks unto this day. It is true she cannot destroy books as in the days of her power, but does the next thing to it, by prescribing to her deluded slaves what books they may read. Not only so, but she dictates to them whom they shall marry and to what societies they may belong.

If it is true that the church has been and is the patroness of learning, a great proportion of the scientists and teachers and statesmen ought to be found among the Catholics. Go into any city and compare the intelligence of the Catholic inhabitants with that of the non-Catholic, and then it will be seen to what use the church has put this treasure of learning which she gathered under her mantle with so much care. In every city and country Catholics are the most ignorant, riotous, and vicious people to be found. Among the inmates of our prisons are to be found a greater proportionate number of Catholics than of any other class of people. It is well known that ignorance and crime go hand in hand the world over.

She appointed her monasteries to be the depositories of her treasure (learning) and commissioned her monks to guard them.

When the church is condemned out of her own mouth, and she stands convicted of lying by her own words, outside testimony is superfluous.

If the church was engaged in the diffusion of knowledge, as is claimed, why lock up the treasures of learning in the monasteries, and carefully guard them by the monks. Suppose we should lock up all our works on science and philosophy, our histories and text-books, and appoint those now engaged in teaching to guard them, would that be a good plan for the diffusion of knowledge? While there may hav been a few dignitaries of the church who were educated, the masses were as ignorant as the animal that held the palaver with old Balaam. And this state of ignorance lasted more than a thousand years, and always will exist wherever the church bears undisputed sway.

The church set to work to dissipate the darkness which had settled on the world outside of her sanctuaries.

One fact should never be forgotten, that during what is known as the Dark Ages the power of the church was supreme. The church certainly had the power, and if it was so anxious for the diffusion of knowledge, this period ought to hav been the brightest in the world's history, whereas it was the darkest period recounted in history.

Does anyone believe that during the Dark Ages, when the church was so much engaged in the diffusion of knowledge, learning was at all comparable with what it was in ancient Greece and Rome? Is it not a fact that the people of to-day, who are so far above the condition of the masses during the dark period, are trying to reach the excellence of the ancient masters in painting, literature, and oratory?

Is it not a fact that we look through the Dark Ages, that period of "Catholic enlightenment," as looking over a barren desert, to the green fields of learning which lie beyond?

Is it not a fact well known to every student of history, that as the church became dominant learning declined, that the palmy day of church power was the midnight of mental darkness in Europe, and that the power of the church declined as learning revived?

The acknowledged fact that the church locked up the treasures of learning tells the whole story. To lock up the treasures of learning is a queer way to educate the people.

Next, they tear violently from Catholics their property and then charge them with poverty.

I wonder if this "author hero" supposed that the people had ever heard of the Inquisition. What was its object? The extirpation of heretics. And the property of heretics was confiscated, and as the church had swallowed up the state, the property went to the church. During the time of the greatest ignorance and poverty to the people, the grandest churches and cathedrals were built that the world ever saw, and the church owned fully two-thirds of all the property, and church dignitaries were rolling in wealth.

Even to-day it is next to impossible to find a Catholic church without a piece of land in some way connected with it. The church has always understood the power of wealth. I hav only space to hint at these matters, but when they are fully understood, some idea of the great wealth of the church during the days of its power may be found.

When there was something like a separation between the church and the state, the church owned most of the property, especially the real estate; some of this property was taken possession of by the state. The day of great wealth and luxury to the church was the dark day of ignorance, crime, squalor, dirt, and rags for the people.

The equal of these structures (churches and cathedrals) hav not been erected in Protestant times, and yet Catholics are charged with being the sworn enemies of the fine arts.

It must be conceded that the church erected some very fine buildings, but while these God-houses were erected the people were plundered to such an extent that they lived in the most miserable hovels ever found among any people claiming to be civilized. No doubt God was glorified, but the people were degraded. No matter how much the people suffer, as long as God is tickled.

Neither hav Catholics been behind in discoveries and inventions. Nicholas the Cusan taught that the earth moved, not the sun, more than a hundred years before Galileo, and was created cardinal for his learning.

No doubt the article under consideration was written by a Catholic and designed for Catholics, who are supposed to be too ignorant to know anything about the facts of history. It is remarkable only in one feature, and that is the wonderful faculty the author displays of hitching a lie to nearly every word in a sentence.

Is there anyone but a Catholic who does not know that Galileo was summoned before the Inquisition and condemned for heresy in teaching the Copernican theory of the solar system? How did it happen that Nicholas was promoted and Galileo was persecuted for teaching the same theory?

Copernicus, a priest, taught the same doctrin under the protection of Pope Paul III.

How the lies do multiply.

Copernicus was not a priest, was not educated for a priest, never acted in that capacity to my knowledge. He was a doctor of medicin, and a teacher of mathematics. As for his protection from Pope Paul III., or any other pope, a greater lie was never uttered. When he wrote his great work, "On the Revolutions of the Celestial Orbs," for fear of persecution from the church he delayed the publication of his work for thirty years. He was on his deathbed when the first copy was brought to him, so that he never read a printed copy of his own work. To claim the honor to the church for the discovery and promulgation of the true solar theory displays a meanness that would disgrace the lowest thug in India. This boastful Catholic author cannot only claim the most lies, but the biggest and the meanest as well.

A Catholic first read the field of the heavens through the telescope.

As far as we know, Galileo was the first man who ever "read the field of the heavens through the telescope." It is true he was a Catholic, for the church put to the rack or burnt all who were not Catholics. According to the letter the statement is true; according to the manner in which they treated him a meaner lie was never told nor for a viler purpose, for it was written to deceive. For the church to persecute him and render the last years of his life as miserable as possible and then claim the glory of his genius, inventions, and discoveries, is an act of hypocritical meanness below which it would be hard to descend.

A Catholic discovered the compass.

Well, this shows genius. Not every man can crowd as many lies in as few words as the author of the article referred to.

I do not believe that it is known when the compass was invented nor by whom, nor is there any way of finding out. As far back almost as the vanishing point of authentic history we find allusions to an instrument which must hav been used in directing the course of a vessel at sea. As the compass has been improved from time to time, as it has been; and as it has been introduced into different countries, different times hav been assigned for its invention and different individuals hav been credited with the invention. But of one thing I am sure—that it was in use long before a Catholic disgraced himself by lying for the church.

There are certain hints here and there in ancient history which point to the use of the compass or something akin to it. References to certain people as understanding the "secret of night sailing" and to the "wonderful cup" which was taken to sea and considered sacred and kept in the temple when not in use, and to the "mysterious needle" which floated in water, seem to indicate that the compass was in use as far back at least as the time of the ancient Cushites.

I would not wonder if Thales and Pythagoras and Plato and Socrates and Solon and all the great men in every age were Catholics. I hav been so much concerned about Catholicism reaching forward that I never considered, until reading the article referred to, how far it reached backward.

I hav heard of the Lord's prayer being written in a circle of the size of a ten-cent piece, but it was reserved to a Catholic to make that feat appear insignificant, by telling a lie in the fewest words of any man who ever lied for God's sake. A few more lies and then, as the ministers say, "we'll close with the benediction."

Father Secchi was the highest authority on astronomy.

I began, when quite young, to pay attention to the subject of astronomy, and now for the first time hear Secchi's name mentioned as authority on that science. According to our enthusiastic author the greatest sculptors, philosophers, painters; the greatest musical composers and performers and the greatest singers, were Catholics. Then we are indebted to them for all that is known about galvanism; for the discovery of the gases and their properties; for the invention of the barometer, gunpowder, paper, and the art of engraving. And since he gives Catholics credit for algebra and arithmetic, he might with equal propriety hav given them the credit of inventing the law of gravitation and eclipses and the phases of the moon. Because the more a Christian lies for the glory of God the more will his grace abound.

But there are a few things which are to be placed to the credit of Catholics which our "author hero" has overlooked. Let me remind him.

We are indebted to Catholics for the ignorance and poverty and brutality of the Dark Ages. We are indebted to them for the Inquisition—for the torture and murder of millions of people for opinion's sake—for killing other millions in religious wars. We are indebted to them for the rack, the thumbscrew, the iron boot, spiked chain, and the ripping-knife. None will doubt that these are Catholic inventions, and few will dispute their just claim to the honor of all the benefits which they hav conferred upon the race. I am persuaded to believe that our author is a great reader, but I am afraid that he has been too much confined to Catholic literature. I am inclined to think that if he would read "Baron Munchausen," "Gulliver's Travels," "Sinbad the Sailor," and other works of that character, it would not only help to develop his propensity for "drawing the long bow," but would giv polish and add zest and variety to his compositions.

Some weeks ago I reviewed a begging sermon sent to me by friends in Seattle, and since that time I hav had a number of papers sent to me from different parts of the country containing sermons and articles for me to reply to. Of course I cannot answer them all, but this one was so far from the truth, and one lie crowded so upon the heel of another, that I thought it proper to prick some of these Catholic bubbles of falsehood.

I hav been very busy and hav only taken the time to notice some of the most glaring. These are sufficiently numerous, but there are two lies implied where there is one expressed. Though a man may be trusted in every other respect, he will lie and misrepresent when his religion is brought into question. Catholics are particularly given to this sin. A lie will slip out of the mouth of a priest as easily as though it were greased. JOHN PECK.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

How Slade Did it Seventy Years Ago.

I think the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER is as fond of truth as my friend D. M. Bennett of old, and am prompted to reply to an extract from some foreign journal which I observed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 24th. It was in reference to Dr. Slade while in Germany. Its absurdity almost makes it read like a poor attempt at irony or burlesque.

Let me speak of my own brief sitting with Mr. Slade full twenty years ago. On this occasion a numerous party of inquirers invited him over to Williamsburg, now Brooklyn, E.D. We availed ourselvs gladly of this opportunity of investigating his peculiar powers. It was evening; a friend and our two wives sat at a small table we had prepared. We had never seen Mr. Slade before, nor hav I seen him since, nor would I know him again. He seemed to be an activ, intelligent gentleman. He made no inquiries of us save if we had seen much of Spiritualism. A small sponge was given us to wipe off the inner sides of the slates, as they were double-hinged slates; which being done a small bit of slate pencil was laid between and they were closed. In this condition they were laid on the top of the small table, and one of the hands of each, including Mr. Slade's, were laid upon the upper slate. In this quiet position the slates lay I should say about two minutes or so. As to any scratching sound like writing I cannot vouch. On examining the slates when thrown open there were two communications—one from my brother, signing his full name, and another from my friend's father, also giving his full name. The ladies were overlooked, but were watchful to see any attempt at fraud.

This is the only—and a brief—sitting I hav ever had with Dr. Slade, and this was prior to his departure for Europe.

Some ladies, hearing of our experience, went to Dr. Slade, who was in New York. They had prepared double slates, properly cleansed, and between each a small bit of slate pencil. These four slates were firmly screwed together in pairs.

From what was told us, their experience with Mr. Slade was similar to our own as before related. It was rather a delicate question, but they did ask Dr. Slade if he would try their slates. Smilingly he complied, but he remarked he could not be responsible for what might happen—writing or no writing. The slates were laid upon the table-top, each separately, with Slade's hands and their own laid thereon. The ladies thanked him for this out-of-the-way experiment, paid him, and returned home. What was their surprise on unscrewing the slates at home to find each had a written communication thereon, one from a husband and one from a brother. These double slates of the ladies I hav seen myself, with the writing thereon, which they almost held sacred until the day of their death. DAVID BRUCE.

Brooklyn, E. D.

More About Mr. Slade.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The friendly correspondence between yourself and Mr. McArthur regarding the phenomena in presence of Mr. Slade is of much interest to me; all the more so because I am personally acquainted with the medium. In connection with the discussion I hav also read "Secrets of the Spiritualists," from a German exchange, and in face of facts with which I am acquainted, I think it one of the most foolish articles ever published. Will you therefore allow me brief space in your excellent paper to say a few words?

In the fall of 1884, Mr. Slade came from the South to my house utterly broken down in health. He was very ill, and unconscious for hours at a time for a week or ten days. I engaged one of the best physicians and a man attendant, the latter and myself giving the medicins, and taking all of the care of the sick man day and night until he was convalescent. During the time, we had occasion to put Mr. Slade's feet in hot water various times, to rub him out of fainting spells, etc., and at no time did the "prehensil" toe appear. We found no peculiar formation of toe or foot, and none of the unnatural foot-gear mentioned by the German exchange. I helped put Mr. Slade's slippers on and off his feet many times, and handled them frequently during his three weeks' stay in my house, and found them remarkable in no way. He had none with straps at the bottom, and his stockings were such as other men wear.

His hands were neither large nor rough, as stated by the German exchange. On the contrary, they were small, for a man of his size, and white. He walked indoors considerably for exercise, and was neither stealthy nor boisterous in his movements; simply natural and like the majority of gentlemen in slippers.

He gave a great many sittings in my house and some to myself and family. In none that I ever witnessed or heard of here, did he sit with his feet under the table. It seems unreasonable to me that investigators could permit such a sitting. I should not.

Once while he was here I bought a new slate, sat down at the table with it in my right hand, gave my left to the medium, and held the slate on my shoulder. Another person held my right arm and the left hand of the medium. The sound of writing was very distinct, and on removing the slate from fifteen to twenty lengthwise lines appeared thereon. The room had three very large windows in it through which a bright light poured, and I could see well—well enough to know that Mr. Slade's foot did not get on my shoulder and do the writing.

Another time up in Massachusetts, he gave me some excellent writing. At several different times I had this experience. A friend and myself cleaned the slates, put them on a bare floor in the middle of a sunny room, and placed our feet on them. We two and the medium joined hands and the writing appeared on the under side of the slates, one slate at a time.

Being a strong Radical myself though acknowledging Spiritual phenomena, I hav a great regard for and sympathy with my brother and sister Radicals and Materialists who stop short of my experience in this matter. With it they would doubtless think as I do. With their lack of it I would surely be an unbeliever. I was slow to accept and cautious of what I received. I only want the truth, let it lead where it may. But knowing there is truth, I regret seeing such articles as "Secrets of the Spiritualists." It shows a gullible spirit which is foreign to the German race. It tries to explain the slate-writing by saying that Mr. Slade's bare foot does it, and that our wisest men, women, and scientists are duped, seeing nothing of these gymnastics though sitting purposely to observe. No one of even tolerable intelligence could be so deceived, it seems to me. I cannot think that anyone outside of orthodoxy has that much faith in a medium's powers. For myself I shall hav to see some proofs before I can believe them able to outwit our brightest minds. It is too much like a whale story. It is giving the charlatans the brains and the skeptics the vacuum.

In defending Mr. Slade from the falsehoods of his accusers I am only standing for the truth. I would do as much for those who so childishly abuse him did he turn falsely against them. I know that mediums do cheat. I hav studied some of their methods unknown to them and warned their victims against them. But I never found one using his foot for writing. I hav had genuin writing from them and then had a slate which had been concealed and written on by other parties mixed up with the clean ones and palmed off as genuin. I hav had such séances reported purposely to watch more closely how it was done. I know how it is and I warn investigators to look out closely for the prepared slate to get in its work when there are a number of slates in use.

Thanking you for your kindness, and with best wishes for your excellent paper, I am,

Very truly, AMARALA MARTIN.

Cairo, Ill.

An Opinion of Thoreau's.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I send for publication an opinion of that exquisit and original thinker, Thoreau:

Concord is just as idiotic as ever in relation to the spirits and their knockings. Most people here believe in a spiritual world which no respectable junk bottle which had not met with a slip, would condescend to hold even a portion of for a moment—whose atmosphere would extinguish a candle let down into it, like a well that wants airing; in spirits which the very bull-frogs in our meadows would blackball. Their evil genius is seeing how low it can degrade them. The hooting of owls, the croaking of frogs is celestial wisdom in comparison. If I could be brought to believe in the things which they believe, I shall make haste to get rid of my certificate of stock in this and the next world's enterprises, and buy a share in the first Immediate Annihilation Company that offered. I would exchange my immortality for a glass of small beer this hot weather. Where are the heathen? Was there ever any superstition before? And yet I suppose there may be a vessel this very moment setting sail from the coast of North America to that of Africa with a missionary on board! Consider the dawn and the sunrise—the rainbow and the evening—the words of Christ and the aspirations of all the saints! Hear music! See, smell, taste, feel, hear,—anything—and then hear the idiots inspired by the cracking of a restless board, humbly asking, "Please, spirit, if you cannot answer by knocks, answer by tips of the table." !!!!!!

Rochester, Mich. A SUBSCRIBER.

MEN make a great ado about the folly of demanding too much of life (or of eternity?) and of endeavoring to liv according to that demand. It is much ado about nothing. No harm ever came from that quarter. I am not afraid I shall exaggerate the value and significance of life, but that I shall not be up to the occasion which it is. I shall be sorry to remember that I was there, but noticed nothing remarkable,—not so much as a prince in disguise; lived in the golden age a hired man; visited Olympus even, but fell asleep after dinner, and did not hear the conversation of the gods.—Thoreau.

Communications.

Benedict Spinoza and Solomon Maimon.

The lives of these two men teach us a lesson of morality and of depravity, of virtue and of vice, of merit and of demerit, of self-sacrifice and of selfishness. In intellect, both men were of the same caliber—though Maimon may hav been somewhat the superior—but their moral traits differed widely. They were of the same race and brought up in the same religion. Both were destined for the rabbinical order.

Spinoza was born Nov. 24, 1632, at Amsterdam, of Jewish parents, who came from Portugal to escape the Inquisition in Spain. His father was a refined and highly respected merchant of moderate means, a man endowed with sound judgment and common sense. He gave his son a good training, and anxious to hav him become a future light of the synagog, spared no means to hav him accomplish this end.

Thus Spinoza entered upon his studies under the most favorable circumstances. His teacher, Sol Levi Morteira, was one of the greatest and most learned Talmudists of his time; he was the founder of a theological school, and stood preëminent among the rabbis of Amsterdam.

Spinoza soon proved himself to be one of the most promising students in the school. With apparently little effort he passed from the elements of Hebrew and the scriptures of the Old Testament to the Talmud, and in time became a master of the vast knowledge of Jewish theology. But this had just the contrary effect to that desired; for, instead of becoming a rabbi, he became a skeptic. The influence which Dr. Van den Enden exercised over him may hav contributed somewhat to this result; for Spinoza studied Latin under him, and it was said that the doctor's great love for nature and the sciences often led him to instil radical ideas into the minds of his pupils. Spinoza had also dipped into the philosophy of Descartes, and that quite thoroughly, while pursuing his rabbinical studies; and the breach that occurred between him and his instructor showed that his position was well fortified, and was not the result of premature thought or insufficient reason. It was not idle doubt, but conviction, which led him to renounce the Jewish faith.

Every possible inducement, from liberal promises to bribery, to remain true to his faith, was offered him, but all were stranded upon the firm moral sense of the profound thinker. After an attempt upon his life had been made, at the suggestion of a few of his fanatical opponents he was excommunicated and banished by the authorities of Amsterdam. Ever after this, he lived apart from all religious sects. He visited different places and finally settled at Hague, where, after releasing his claim to his inheritance in favor of his sister, he sought employment with an optician. Here he was engaged in grinding lenses, which brought him a moderate competence. He had no desire nor ambition to accumulate money; in fact, on every occasion he manifested an aversion to worldly goods. Many flattering offers were tendered him, but he declined them all. An intimate friend, Simon Van Vries, left him upon his death quite an inheritance, but Spinoza declined to accept it, until finally induced by friends to accept a small pension. He never married. He lived like a philosopher, and during his spare time wrote essays, completed his philosophical works, and made observations in the natural sciences. On Feb. 20, 1677, this truly great man, afflicted with consumption, passed away.

Maimon was born at Nesviz, in Lithuania, about the year 1754. At the time of his birth his parents were in moderate circumstances, but owing to the peculiar political conditions of the country and the general persecution of the Jews, they soon lost their property and were reduced to abject poverty. His father was a bright, intelligent man, of scholarly attainments; but he was shiftless and unscrupulous, and these traits had an influence in shaping the character of his son.

Maimon's early education was under his father's direction. In his sixth year they read the Bible together, and the following instances, which he relates in his autobiography, are illustrativ of his bent of mind:

"'In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.' Here I interrupted my father and asked, 'But, papa, who created God?'

"'God was not created by anyone,' replied my father. 'He existed from all eternity.'

"'Did he exist ten years ago?' I asked again.

"'Oh, yes,' my father said. 'He existed even a hundred years ago.'

"Then, perhaps,' I continued, 'God is already a thousand years old?'

"'Silence! God was eternal.'

"'But,' I insisted, 'he must surely hav been born at some time.'

"'You little fool,' said my father, 'no! He was forever and ever.'

"With this answer I was not indeed satisfied, but I thought, 'Surely papa must know better than I, and with that I must therefore be content.'"

"On another occasion," he writes, "I read in the Bible the story of Jacob and Esau; and in this connection my father quoted the passage from the Talmud where it is said, 'Jacob and Esau divided between them all the blessings of the world. Esau chose the blessings of this life, Jacob, on the contrary, those of the future life, and since we are descendant from Jacob, we must giv up all claim to temporal blessings.' On this I said with indignation, 'Jacob should not hav been a fool; he should rather hav chosen the blessings of this world.' Unfortunately I got for an answer, 'You ungodly rascal!' and a box on the ear. This, of course, did not remove my doubt, but it brought me to silence, at least."

He relates, in the same volume, of another time when he saw the reigning prince, with his court, in all his splendor pass through the village to hunt, how full of admiration he was, and that, as he exclaimed, "Oh, how beautiful!" his father whispered into his ear, "Little fool, in the other world the prince will kindle the fire for us." He says of this: "No one can conceive the sort of feeling which this statement produced in me. On the one hand I believed my father, and was very glad about this future happiness in store for us; but I felt at the same time pity for the poor princes, who were going to be doomed to such a degrading service. . . . I was thrown into the greatest perplexity on the subject, till some game drove these thoughts out of my head."

He had an unquenchable thirst for knowledge. Among the books which his father had in his library he found a number of interesting volumes, which he used to take to bed with him and peruse during the night. One book on astronomy in particular engaged his attention. He constructed a globe, and by means of the descriptions in the book was able to illustrate all the lines and circles, the axes, etc. But this came to a sad end, for his father discovered the globe, and informed him that the Talmud was the book he should study, and no other.

For a time he attended school, but from the description he givs it must be inferred that the pupils learned very little, and the treatment they received at the hands of the schoolmaster was cruel and inhuman. Even the breakfast or lunch that they brought to school had to be shared by their superior. The course of instruction was mainly of a religious nature. Grammar and other branches of science that are essential to an elementary education were not taught. The Talmud and the Bible were the important studies, while the little Hebrew that was taught was ungrammatical and impure.

He stayed but a short time at this school, for his father found it expedient to leave the place in order to save his family from starvation. The extraordinary methods and devices which Maimon, the elder, made use of to obtain money giv a cue to his character. It is sufficient to refer to the various bargains he entered into for money and commodities to obtain for his son a wife. The details of these transactions are shocking. They fully illustrate the almost total depravity of the man, and the lack of ability of the son to act for himself.

Maimon once more received instruction from his father. He soon completed his studies, and became well known as a thorough scholar and expounder of Jewish theology. He became a member of various religious organizations, but never remained with them long. In a number of families he was engaged as a private tutor, but he soon abandoned this occupation. Under peculiar circumstances brought about by the greed of his father, he married the daughter of a tavernkeeper. The result of this alliance was a child. Maimon lived with his mother-in-law, who fought with him incessantly. He contributed nothing to the support of the family, but amid dirt and filth—for the people were very common—studied the various systems of philosophy, and mastered them with an ease which was worthy of a genius.

His unquenchable thirst for knowledge and the severe treatment he received at the hands of his mother-in-law caused him to desert his wife, and leave for Berlin, Germany. Here for a short time he attended school, and formed the acquaintance of men like Moses Mendelsohn and others, through whose efforts he was soon employed as tutor of mathematics, philosophy, and science in private families. They conceded his remarkable ability and learning and aided him to procure literary work, such as translating and writing essays upon philosophical topics. For a time he succeeded remarkably, but, through some unknown influence, he began to spend his nights in revelry, thereby becoming derelict in the discharge of his duties, so that his friends soon withdrew their patronage. At the same time his wife, who had learned of his whereabouts, came to Berlin, and demanded of him to return or to consent to a divorce. Without any hesitation or regret he consented to a legal separation, which was granted. The last years of his life were spent in abject poverty. His friends had deserted him. The few pennies he earned by literary work were spent in dissipation. In fact, he sank so low that his friends would not even giv him a few pennies to supply his most pressing needs. Shortly before his death he found a home with Graf Kalkreuth, of Seegersdorf in Lower Silesia, who had taken an interest in him Here he died on Nov. 22, 1800.

This, in short, is a sketch of the main features in the lives of these two men.

Intellectually, they were both men remarkably gifted. Spinoza became a skeptic through study; Maimon was a skeptic by nature. Spinoza was wise; Maimon, erudite. Spinoza was firm in his convictions; while Maimon was vacillating, uncertain. As they were in their thought, so were they in their conduct. Maimon, as he related in his autobiography, had been an adherent of all philosophical systems in succession. Spinoza would often say: "Reason is my enjoyment, and the aim I hav in life is joy and serenity," and, "I look at human actions entirely as if I were dealing with lines, surfaces, and bodies; and upon human passions, such as love, hatred, anger, envy, ambition, and all the other emotions of the soul, not as faults of human nature, but as qualities which belong to it just the same way as heat, cold, storm, thunder, and other similar phenomena belong to the nature of the atmosphere, which may indeed be inconvenient, but which are necessary and which hav certain causes."

As to Maimon's ability, Kant writes to a friend, who has sent him one of Maimon's manuscripts for perusal: "But what were you thinking about, my dear friend, when you sent me a big packet containing the most subtle researches, not only to read through, but to think out thoroughly, while I am still, in my sixty-sixth year, burdened with a vast amount of labor in the completion of my plan! . . . I had already made up my mind to send back the manuscript with an excuse so well justified on all these grounds; but a glance at it soon enabled me to recognize its merits, and to show, not only that none of my opponents had understood me and the main problem so well, but that very few could claim so much penetration as Herr Maimon in profound inquiry of this sort." In another passage Kant says: "Herr Maimon's work contains, moreover, so many acute observations, that he cannot giv it to the public without its producing an impression strongly in his favor."

In character Spinoza was independent, courageous, virtuous, and firm; Maimon, on the other hand, dependent, timid, immoral, and fickle. Spinoza's independence led him to earn a livelihood; his courage led him to renounce his faith; his virtues led him to follow the dictates of his reason, and his firmness made him as steel against temptation. Maimon's dependence made him the slave of others; his timidity made him weak; his vices cost him his friends; his fickleness led him into temptation. It is strange that a man of Maimon's intelligence and ability should be so devoid of moral strength. He was nothing more than an intellectual monster who lacked all sense of duty. It seems that from amidst all his learning he could not deduce one principle of morality; nor was he led thereby to follow some useful occupation so as to gain a livelihood. And all this, in view of the wise ordinance of the Talmud, which demands of every Jewish scholar to learn, in addition to intellectual knowledge, a trade or mechanical art.

The wide difference which existed between these men in their moral qualities may be attributed to their training and environment. Spinoza had the benefit of a pleasant home life and surroundings, and the social conditions of Amsterdam were far superior to those of Poland. Maimon, on the other hand, knew only of persecution, poverty, and shame; for the social conditions of Poland were deplorable. The people mostly spent their time in riotous living and laziness, which was due to their oppression. There was no incentiv to strive for nobler and better aims. It is natural that Maimon, living under these influences, should become morally warped, yet it is strange that a person gifted with such remarkable intellectual qualifications should be morally so deficient as to fall far below the average. This, no doubt, is due to the fact that the moral qualities are less dependent upon the intellectual endowments than upon the training and environment.

FRANKLIN A. BECHER.

Buckley and the Methodist Book Concern Catch It.

From the New York Times of June 6th.

Our contemporary, the Christian Advocate, angrily resents the Times's characterizations of the publication of the book, "Heroes of the Dark Continent," sold by the Methodist Book Concern, and extensivly advertised and "reviewed" in the Advocate, as an act of religious piracy. We expected anger and resentment. A pious newspaper that occupies an intimate commercial relation to a book concern cannot easily free itself from worldly passions, and censure of its immoral practices quite naturally kindles its wrath against the censor.

We hav been led by the Christian Advocate's charge that the spirit and language of our article were "more untruthful than the advertisment it condemns" to look into the history of this African book a little more closely, and it is really a much more indecent and disreputable affair than we had supposed. But first, as the Christian Advocate objects to the assertion that the "Heroes of the Dark Continent" is a "pirated book," let us withdraw the offending phrase. The book is not pirated, for, as the Advocate says, it is not "an American reprint of a foreign book." Let us say, then, that the publication of the book is not piracy, but is just plain theft. The volume is made up of materials filched right and left from foreign and American copyright books on Africa. A compilation of this sort, though it should be sternly reprobated by a religious newspaper, and never be sold by a Methodist Book Concern, might pass without the censure of the worldly, for the art of compilation is useful, and has done much to diffuse useful information. But not only has the substance of the book been conveyed without honorable acknowledgment from storehouses of information filled by the arduous toil of many African explorers, but it was deliberately and craftily put forth with the wicked design of forestalling a forthcoming book by Henry M. Stanley, upon the sales of which the authorized American publishers, Charles Scribner's Sons, will pay Mr. Stanley copyright fees. An aroused public curiosity about Stanley's recent explorations was taken advantage of by Messrs. Hunt & Eaton, the agents of the Methodist Book Concern, to create a market for a book from which Mr. Stanley will not only derive no revenue, but the publication and sale of which was certain in some measure to diminish his profits from the authorized American edition.

The proof of this assertion is to be found in the columns of the Christian Advocate, which, according to its own statement, is "the medium through which the Book Concern makes its business announcements." On January 2d this book was advertised in the Christian Advocate by Messrs. Hunt & Eaton, as "The New Stanley Book," that description appearing in black display type at the head of the advertisment. On January 9th the volume was again advertised as "The New Stanley Book," and this advertisement was repeated on January 30th, February 6th, and February 13th. "Stanley in Africa," was the display headline of another advertisment of the book. appearing in the Christian Advocate of January 30th, February 6th, 13th, and 20th, and April 3d. In an advertisment of April 3d, repeated on April 10th and 17th, the agents of the Book Concern more clearly reveal their intention to entice and capture purchasers whose patronage would legitimately hav gone to swell Mr. Stanley's revenues from the authorized edition. "Do not be misled," they say in conspicuous type. "The great and popular book is one that pictures the whole of Africa, not a part; one that givs a complete life of Stanley, not one that deals merely with an episode of his career." This is palpably an attempt to depreciate Stanley's new book, already announced, which will treat chiefly of his relief of Emin. Then, on May 8th, Messrs. Hunt & Eaton published in the Advocate their now celebrated advertisment, in which they not only assailed Stanley's authorized American publishers, but declared that "the business of an editor is to make money for his paper, and as long as you pay him for what you desire inserted he will treat you just as kindly as he will anyone else."

This is the advertisment that was withdrawn after attention had been publicly called to its indecency, with the explanation, published in the Christian Advocate of May 22d, that it had been prepared and inserted by "an employee of the subscription book department without the knowledge of the superintendent of the department or the agents." Was it this same "employee" that "prepared and inserted" the advertisments published in January, February, and April, falsely describing the "Heroes of the Dark Continent" as "The New Stanley Book?" And were the agents and the superintendent of the subscription book department of the Book Concern in Europe, Asia, or Africa all that time? Doesn't the editor of the Christian Advocate see that the poor clerk isn't big enough to serve as a scapegoat in this serious matter? No doubt he is a hardened little sinner himself, and we sincerely hope he will repent and be saved, but the agents of the Book Concern will never save themselvs in this world, whatever may happen to them in the next, by turning him out into the wilderness. So far as the offensiv advertisment of May 8th is concerned, the editor's plea that neither he nor anyone in authority had remarked its character before publication may be accepted; but that plea will not do for the advertisments, equally misleading and immoral, though free from abuse and insult, which appeared almost weekly in the Christian Advocate throughout the winter.

We are reluctant to speak of the character of the book itself. We hav hitherto refrained from doing so, but inasmuch as we discover that the Christian Advocate, in its columns devoted to literature, editorially reviewed the book on April 24th, and not only made itself particeps criminis in the dishonorable undertaking of the agents by furthering their efforts to depreciate Stanley's forthcoming book as treating only an "episode" in his career, but had the hardihood to speak of this miserable and obscene publication as "the best and most trustworthy of the various books upon Africa yet placed upon the market," and to commend it to "the masses" "for its educational value," it becomes almost an imperativ duty to say that this book, by reason of its illustrations and some passages of its letter-press, is one that no man could put upon his bookshelvs or show in his family without shame. It seems to hav been the intent of the publishers of the volume to illustrate every phase of African nudity that has been made available either by the sketches of travelers or the creations of a filthy imagination. And yet, disgusting as is the edition sold by the Methodist Book Concern, there is an earlier edition containing sixteen coarse wood cuts of naked negro women that hav been omitted from the religious edition. For what purpose could these obscene images hav been so plentifully introduced in the book except to cater to prurient tastes and increase the sales? Does not all the world know that most Africans reject the fig-leaf as burdensome? Would not one or two examples of Ethiopian fashions hav served all proper historical and anthropological purposes?

Taking it altogether, this business in which the literary organ and the great publishing house of the Methodists are engaged is about as unclean and disreputable as any that has lately come under the public eye. A sordid, conscienceless spirit of money-making has evidently prompted the persons immediately concerned in the enterprise. They deserve the prompt and severe condemnation of the great denomination they profess to represent, and we hav no doubt they will receive it.

Colonel Ingersoll's Opinion of the Census Taker's Questions.

From the World.

Colonel Ingersoll yesterday talked about the objectionable questions included in the enumerator's official catechism.

"I suppose the government has a right to ask all of these questions, and any more it pleases," he said, "but undoubtedly the citizen would hav the right to refuse to answer them. Originally the census was taken simply for the purpose of ascertaining the number of people—first as a basis of representation; second, as a basis of a capitation tax; third, as a basis to arrive at the number of troops that might be called from each state; and it may be for some other purposes, but I imagin that all are embraced in the foregoing.

"The government has no right to invade the privacy of the citizen; no right to inquire into his financial condition, as thereby his credit might be injured; no right to pry into his affairs, into his diseases, or his deformities; and, while the government may hav a right to ask these questions, I think it was foolish to instruct the enumerators to ask them, and that the citizens hav a perfect right to refuse to answer them. Personally, I hav no objection to answering any of these questions, for the reason that nothing is the matter with me that money will not cure.

"I know that it is thought advisable by many to find out the amount of mortgages in the United States, the rate of interest that is being paid, the general indebtedness of individuals, counties, cities, and states, and I see no impropriety in finding this out in any reasonable way. But I think it improper to insist on the debtor exposing his financial condition. My own opinion is that Mr. Porter only wants what is perfectly reasonable, and if left to himself, would ask only those questions that all people would willingly answer.

"I presume we can depend on medical statistics—on the reports of hospitals, etc., in regard to diseases and deformities, without interfering with the patients. As to the financial standing of people, there are already enough of spies in the country attending to that business. I don't think there is any danger of the courts compelling a man to answer these questions. Suppose a man refuses to tell whether he has a chronic disease or not, and he is brought up before a United States court for contempt. In my opinion the judge would decide that the man could not be compelled to answer. It is bad enough to hav a chronic disease without publishing it to the world. All intelligent people, of course, will be desirous of giving all useful information of a character that cannot be used to their injury but can be used for the benefit of society at large.

"If, however, the courts shall decide that the enumerators hav the right to ask these questions, and that everybody must answer them, I doubt if the census will be finished for many years. There are hundreds and thousands of people who delight in telling all about their diseases, when they were attacked, what they hav taken, how many doctors hav given them up to die, etc., and if the enumerators will stop and listen the census of 1890 will not be published until the next century."

English National Secular Society's Conference.

The annual conference took place at the Secular Hall, Manchester, on Whitsunday. The attendance of delegates and members was exceptionally large.

Mr. G. W. Foote was unanimously elected president, Mr. Bradlaugh having resigned a few months ago, and the following ladies and gentlemen were added to the list of vice-presidents: Miss Vance, Mrs. Thornton Smith, Mr. Arthur B. Moss, Mr. J. M. Wheeler, Mr. W. J. Birch, and Mr. Umpleby.

In the evening there was a crowded meeting and eloquent addresses were delivered by Mr. O'Donovan (a new recruit for the Freethought army), Mr. Arthur B. Moss, Miss Thornton Smith, Mr. J. M. Robertson, Mr. Robert Forder, and Mr. G. W. Foote.

It is no exaggeration to say that Mr. Foote delivered an oration which, for profundity of thought, nobility of ideas, and brilliancy of rhetoric has rarely, if ever, been surpassed by even the greatest of English orators. It created quite a furore.

The conference was in every way a great success.

ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Notice.

Mr. F. C. Mende, treasurer of the society, will be traveling this summer, and does not wish letters and remittances addressed to him or to his order, but to the order of Ida C. Craddock, secretary, at the new office, Broad and Columbia avenue, over the bank. The undersigned may be addressed at No. 305 Second avenue, Asbury Park, N. J., until September 25th, after this date. Please make a note of this.

R. B. WESTBROOK,
President American Secular Union.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 2, 1890.

The Secular Union's Monthly Report.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED MAY, 1890.

T. A. Wilson, Reading, Pa. (new member)	$1 00
San Antonio, Tex., Secular Society (charter fee), through Charles L. Sauer	5 00
Flatonia, Tex., Secular Society (charter fee), through Theo. E. Tanner	5 00
G. H. Hauschild, Victoria, Tex	5 00
Neil Gregory, Philadelphia, Pa	5 00
Samuel H. Galton, " "	5 00
Alexander Cochran, Franklin, Pa	5 00
George B. Tyler, Ocala, Fla. (new member)	1 00
Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr., New York city	100 00
S. Brewer, Ithaca, N. Y., $2 contribution: .60 1 doz. "Ch. Taxn."...	2 60
G. A. F. de Lespinasse, M.D., Orange City, Ia	5 00
Anton J. Kraft, Grantfork, Ill	2 00
T. R. Burrows, Chatham, N. Y	1 00
Prof. H. M. Cottinger, San Jose, Cal	1 00
Pamphlets "Church Taxation" to members and others	6 90
Total	$150 50

F. C. MENDE,
Treasurer American Secular Union (per I. C. C.).

Brotherhood of Moralists.

Report of the Propaganda Committee of the Brotherhood of Moralists, at Hannibal, Mo., for May, 1890.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

During the month thirty-six membership certificates were issued, making the total enrollment to May 31st 1,043 members. The new members are from: New York, 1; Illinois, 1; Missouri, 1; Texas, 4; Montana, 1; Alabama, 6; Ohio, 4; Michigan, 1; Massachusetts, 2; Ontario, 2; Colorado, 13.

F. H. RAU, Secretary.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Balance from April report	$10 75
J. T. Allison, Texas	40
F. Shodl, Colorado	1 00
Wm. Perkins, Missouri	50
Harman Wettstein, Illinois	1 00
Wm. Horsfall, New York	25
	$13 90
Expended	3 20
Balance on hand	$10 70

A. R. AYRES, Treasurer.

The Cruel Creed.

The demand for a revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith is a result of man's evolution out of barbarism. The confession will not be revised yet, however. The idea of the vengeful nature of God, who is said by the Presbyterian creed to hav a world of endless torments in store for women and children as well as for men, cannot be gotten rid of without a painful struggle by believers. Fancy a lot of grown-up men disputing as to whether God fore-ordained men to eternal damnation in fire and brimstone or not! The only way to get such monstrous ideas into a man's head is to commence with him in the cradle. But when men and women hav grown up to maturity with that idea, it is like skinning them alive to convince them of their error. Nothing but education and the advance of science will do it.

Presbyterians do not believe in, and are far better than their creed. The matter of creed is simply religious politics, and it is not so much a matter of morality as it is of politics as to whether the Westminster confession shall be changed or not. In the mean time all things are governed by law—even theology—and there is comfort for all in that thought. —The Jury.

W. F. JAMIESON gave three lectures in Sac City, two of them on "Nationalism;" three in Holstein; three in Oto, all in the state of Iowa. Address at Des Moines, Iowa.

Communications.

Education or Honesty?

Everywhere we hear and read, "Vice is the eldest son of ignorance;" "education is the parent of virtue." Are these sayings invariably true? Does education alone insure virtue and exempt from vice? Does ignorance, in and of itself, constitute its possessor a villain? Some of the best persons I hav ever known were the most ignorant. Yet for all that I would not hav people kept in ignorance for fear that knowledge would make them vicious. Some of the most abandoned wretches I ever knew or heard of were intelligent, highly educated men and women. In one daily newspaper I read of a bank forger, an insurance defaulter, a county treasurer embezzler, a clergyman wife-murderer, a college professor's elopement, and another clergyman guilty of the most loathsome crimes in the criminal calendar. To be sure, these did not all occur in one day, nor in one week, but all were under consideration at the same time. Were any of these men ignorant? Were any of them uneducated? Had they not all possessed superior advantages, and were they not as a consequence intrusted with the lives, property, interests, and souls of their inferiors in point of knowledge and experience, each in his own especial calling or profession? And yet they betrayed this trust, how basely none know so well as the victims themselvs. This breach of trust was not on account of their general ignorance nor lack of business tact, but in consequence of it, each being placed where his superior attainments enabled him to use the same all the more efficiently while indulging in his vicious propensities, and screening himself, in some instances for twoscore years, and to the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars, or even millions. Now, the education of these men did not prevent them from being rascals, but helped them into and through their dishonesty in defrauding their trusting inferiors as these inferiors in education could never hav deceived and defrauded them.

What, then, shall we say of education—away with it? By no means, but place honesty above it everywhere. An educated rascal is the most deadly enemy to the normal growth of a people or individual. Never giv such a one a place above a herdsman, and even there he is not fit for a muledriver.

Place, then, simple honesty above education, religion, and wealth. Make it superior to all else. Let it be the watchword everywhere. Let the man be considered vile who is vile, whether he be a millionaire, general, honorable, bank president, president of the United States, clergyman of the D D. order or M.A. order, archbishop, pope, or even God himself. Try every person, speculation, pretension, creed, cause, or religion by the strict rule of honesty, and see who or what would be spared. Surely, not the church, its holy guides, its text-book, its savior, or its Gods. Go into the business marts, and there you would find the same dishonesty. The professions would not escape nor the filthy politics, neither would the courts of justice, so called, and as to social life—O my soul, come not thou into the secret depths of its depravity! In every-day life between neighbor and neighbor, under the guise of friendship, the most subtle and deadly policy exists known this side of sheol. Tattlers and scandalizers, that should not be mentioned outside of mud-cellars, are thick among the "society ladies" of large cities.

Let education and religion sink into insignificance by the side of simple honesty. Were the world honest it would be morally perfect; for how soon, when every motiv was pure, true, and good, would science come to the relief of mankind and through its facts teach the most ignorant how to liv without tyrannizing over others or wronging them in any particular. First, no one would hav any desire to do wrong; and, second, education, true education, would so enlighten the mind that the right would be sought, perceived, studied, and followed, not merely as a duty, but from choice, for its very gratification, as well as for its utility.

Never, never until plain, simple honesty is taught and practiced, and becomes the education of the masses, will these crimes cease, and vice prowl only in the slums and purlieus of degradation.

Now, in high life, so called, are perpetrated the most heinous crimes, in secresy and darkness, fit to startle the world when seen in open daylight. The remedy is not alone in education nor religion, but in honesty, simple honesty. The educated husband deceives his wife; the accomplished, refined wife plays double with her liege lord; the farmer cheats the merchant and mechanic, and vice versa; the lawyer cheats his client and the client his lawyer—if he can; the clergy cheat the laity and the laity the clergy. But why enumerate examples? Where is ill-doing not found among the highly educated, the partially educated, and the extremely ignorant who can neither read or write? No rank, age, or race seems to be exempt from this mania of lying. Honesty alone is the antidote for vice and crime, not education, religion, the fine arts, wealth, or any other prescription. Honesty is the only panacea.

Barre, Mass., May 28, 1890. ELLA E GIBSON.

A Miracle Spoiled.

On the Sunday before Memorial day there were thousands from New York at Greenwood cemetery preparing for the coming decoration. Among these were Commander John J. Finn, of Noah L. Farnham Post, G. A. R., and his family. They had marked several graves for decoration, and then Mrs. Finn proposed to visit the grave of Mr. Noyes, who was murdered several years ago at his store in Greenwich street by a man named Dolan, who was hanged for the crime and converted into an angel. Mr. Noyes was a personal friend of the Finns, and his widow has placed a bouquet over his grave regularly every Sunday since his death. And on this occasion there was a fine fresh bouquet in position.

While the party were admiring it it was plainly seen to move, and for three times it rose several inches perpendicularly. The women were very much alarmed at the phenomena, and Mrs. Finn nearly fainted. There was something ghostly about it. Mr. Finn, too, had some funny feelings, but being an old soldier and fireman, had lost whatever religious superstitions he ever had, and he made up his mind to probe the miracle to the bottom.

He accordingly left his terror-stricken friends, and in spite of their protestations stepped over the rail of the plot and approached the grave. As he did so the bouquet again rose up two or three inches.

At first he was in doubt whether the ghost of Noyes was rising up or that the devil had made a nest there, but mustering up courage he ran his cane with much force in to the ground beside the bouquet, and to his amazement out sprang a full-sized woodchuck which had burrowed there. At first Finn was as much startled as the woodchuck, but the women screamed and the woodchuck ran for his life. Finn soon recovered himself, but the ladies cannot get over their nervousness.

Had Finn's cane not solved the mystery, it is probable that this would hav gone down to posterity as a miracle. How many more such miracles hav been performed by woodchucks, skunks, or other underground inhabitants it would be hard to say. At all events, it is always safe to hav a handy cane and a stout heart, when it is an easy matter to solve them. A woodchuck can act the part of a ghost underground as easily as an ordinary medium in a cabinet. And their methods are similar, and there are wonders performed with a flash of light or the punch of a sharp stick. W. A. TREADWELL.

A Constitutional Convention in Kentucky.

I am at our quiet country home for the first time in a long while, and I am reminded that it is the holy Sabbath by the sound of the Sunday school bell. It is a good time for calm reflection and serious thoughts. Religious thoughts! No, I do not like the word, it has been so distorted and contaminated by selfish, designing men. But this is a good day for Liberals to think how to contrive means to thwart the designs of church people. I do not mean the masses of the church people, for they are commonly ignorant of the designs of their leaders, and if once informed would be their opposers. But I began this letter for the purpose of telling the Liberals of an important fact. When I hav done that I shall think I hav utilized this holy day to the best advantage.

Kentucky is soon to hav a constitutional convention for the purpose of amending the state constitution. In many respects the present constitution is very liberal, yet in many others it is defectiv. Religiously it is all right. However, it makes a preacher ineligible for governor of the state. It does not compel us to believe in witches and ghosts, Bibles, Gods, or devils, before our oath is valid. Now, I hope that the Liberals throughout the state and United States will giv this convention a little attention and see that the church people do not break down the Liberal clauses and insert their damnable trash. We should make an effort to hav church property taxable. I would like to see a petition circulated favoring the Nine Demands and presented to the convention. As soon as the nominations are made I am going to begin sending copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER and other Liberal literature bearing on the subject to the nominee most likely to be elected in my district. I hope the Liberals throughout the state will do likewise.

If any Liberal in the United States has literature which he would like to circulate in that way, he can send it me at Pineville, Bell county, Ky. Our destructiv work is to break down the strongholds of superstition. Our constructiv work is to implant in the human mind proper ideas of liberty. In that let us never lose an opportunity! S. P. HERRON.

[If Mr. Herron will send us the names of the delegates to the convention, when chosen, and their addresses, THE TRUTH SEEKER from its Literature Fund will supply them all with documents calculated to influence them rightly toward securing a purely secular government.—ED. T. S.]

Mr. Chamberlain's Reply to Mr. Overmyer.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: It is my rule, as you know, to refrain from noticing personal newspaper criticism. But there are features in Mr. Overmyer's letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 31st last which seem to call upon me imperativly to break that rule for once and to answer Mr. Overmyer, not so much on my own account as for the sake of "the unfortunate victim of all this blundering, who utters no reproaches," and who is not now in a position to speak for himself. I therefore beg you will allow me space for a very condensed, and, for that reason, necessarily inadequate reply to Mr. Overmyer's letter, from which reply I shall endeavor to banish as far as possible all that spirit and appearance of censoriousness which has been attributed to me.

The burden of Mr. Overmyer's complaint is in this paragraph of mine, which he quotes into his letter, and to which he takes exception:

> Their [Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens] abandonment of Mr. Harman was due to a combination of various influences which it is not necessary to dwell upon, such as local politics, disapproval of certain of Mr. Harman's methods of management, financial and otherwise, conflict of interest between Mr. Harman and the other clients, i.e., E. C. Walker and George Harman, etc. I cannot look upon their abandonment of Mr. Harman as justifiable.

When I wrote that I certainly had as little idea of "assailing" Mr. Overmyer, and of "casting unjust aspersions" upon him, as I believe he has of assailing me. Indeed, just preceding the paragraph quoted I had written of Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens as "the only lawyers, with the exception of Mr. T. B. Wakeman, that I had ever known or heard of who had any conception of the way in which a charge like that against Mr. Harman should be met and defended." If the English language can be framed so as to convey a higher compliment to the legal ability of these gentlemen, I do not know how to do it. My power of language is inadequate to say anything more flattering, and I hope Mr. Overmyer will not consider nor force me or any of Mr. Harman's friends to consider that this language of mine was an "unjust aspersion." I considered then and I consider now that Mr. Overmyer acted earnestly and sincerely, and I wrote that paragraph with the intention of stating truthfully but briefly what I believed to be some of the causes which led to the unfortunate rupture between Mr. Harman and his counsel, and with no intention of imputing insincerity to either of the counsel. And when I said, "I cannot look upon their abandonment of Mr. Harman as justifiable" I spoke only of my views from my standpoint, which I hope further on to justify.

Mr. Overmyer seems to object to my use of the word "abandonment," yet, considering the facts as he tells them, I think that word was rightly used. It was an abandonment not merely of Mr. Harman, but of a great principle as well, which principle, in its completeness, I fear, Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens both failed to see, when they, "hastily examining the paper" and "discovering the cause," i.e., the O'Neil letter, "in a brief note to Mr. Harman which we both signed and returned by the messenger," "informed him [Mr. Harman] that we could not defend him upon that charge," etc.

Let me, from my standpoint, outline the reasons for my use of this word "abandonment." One of the most sacred obligations which one man can possibly owe to another is the obligation which an attorney owes to his client. The attorney is bound to bring to the discharge of that obligation his very best skill, diligence, and effort. This is true even though the client may hav committed the most atrocious and inexcusable crime, and though the evidence of his guilt is complete, positiv, and incontrovertible. But the lawyer owes other obligations. He owes it to his profession to elevate, ennoble, and dignify the law, to purify it and to purge away what he finds in it of error and oppression, and to make its administration fair and honest and its judgments just. As the lawyer receives more liberally than his fellow-citizens knowledge and experience to aid him in discriminating right from wrong, so it is fair that he should giv of his effort more abundantly than others to protect right and to abolish wrong. The lawyer always is and naturally always will be of the ruling class, and the responsibilities of governing never are and never should be divorced from the obligations which such power imposes. The lawyer's obligation to his country and to humanity are no more to be ignored than his obligation to his client, and when these obligations coincide and move together they create a binding moral force which cannot safely or wisely be disregarded.

But Mr. Harman was not a common criminal. He had been guilty of no offense and had violated no law. He had done no wrong and had injured no one. Mr. Overmyer seems to be fully aware of this when he says:

> In view of the atrocious decisions of courts which now stand as precedents in this class of cases his skepticism was quite pardonable. These decisions, however, are not law, but simply perversions of law. The idea that a man may be imprisoned at hard labor for a long term of years, suffering the penalties inflicted only upon felons, upon a conviction of an alleged offense wherein it is admitted there is no evil intention, is simply infernal.

The same principle which was violated in the attack for which the Markland and Whitehead letters furnished the pretext, was also violated in the second attack upon the O'Neil letter. I cannot see nor understand the grounds of the discrimination which Mr. Overmyer makes between the two cases, and I am firm in the conviction that no such discrimination will stand the test of reason. The very essence of their pretense that Mr. Harman had offended, was the false and illegal claim that a citizen of the United States may not publish his own thoughts in his own language. The lawlessness of this claim, the meanness and hypocrisy of the way in which it was asserted, the usurped power which made the assertion, the inhumanity of the effort to silence Mr. Harman's outcry, the dishonesty of the effort to misrepresent his intentions, the character of his assailants, all these combined to impose upon his attorneys obligations greater than those ordinarily existing in that relation.

What Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens "hastily" did, cannot be considered anything else than an abandonment, and an unjustifiable one. All the more unjustifiable, because they knew that few or no lawyers were as well qualified as they by character, attainments, and special knowledge to try such a case as it should be tried, and to present the defense in the way it should be presented.

As to "local politics." The very first subject which I discussed with Mr. Overmyer at his office in Topeka was local politics and their bearing on Mr. Harman's case, and we spent a long time upon that point. I learned more about local politics subsequently in an interview with Mr. Joseph K. Hudson, editor of the Capital, and I concluded from what I heard all around that Judge Foster was a mere politician, who would use his judicial power to accomplish any purpose, right or wrong, which he thought would advance his political interests. The judge's conduct toward Mr. Harman demonstrated the correctness of this opinion. To what extent local politics may hav entered as a factor into the influences which combined to make up the decision of counsel I cannot say, but I still think I did no wrong in inserting that as an element.

The conflict of interest between Mr. Harman and the other defendants has been so painfully manifest for the past two years that I need say nothing in support of my introducing that as a factor. It is inconceivable that that conflict did not enter to some extent into the consideration of counsel and to some extent influence their action.

Under the head of "Disapproval of certain of Mr. Harman's methods of management, financial and otherwise," it is due to Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens to say, and I do say with grateful pleasure, that so far as the matter of compensation for their services is concerned they hav both been not merely honorable, but exceedingly liberal and generous. Still I know that Mr. Harman's methods of financial management hav been not only displeasing to his attorneys, but hav exerted a very great influence upon them.

The "otherwise" in my letter seems to be conceded by Mr. Overmyer, if we confine its meaning to the O'Neil letter, and like publications. I am willing to so confine it, taking the O'Neil letter as a type of the like publications which Mr. Overmyer refers to. I hav already explained why in my judgment the O'Neil letter should not hav produced the disagreement it did.

Mr. Overmyer quotes part of a long letter which he wrote to Mr. Harman which Mr. Harman sent me and which I commented on in a letter included below. In Mr. Overmyer's long letter he says: "I do not think you are right in this matter [O'Neil letter], and I consider you so far wrong that I cannot lend my sanction as a man to that which as a lawyer I can see no defense for." Now, this ability to see a defense is simply a question of degree. Colonel Bradley could "see no defense for" the Markland letter nor for the Whitehead letter, so instead of setting up a valid and meritorious defense, as he might hav done had he known as much about it as Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens, he fooled away Mr. Harman's chances with his nonsense about insanity. In my letter included below I indicate how the O'Neil letter might hav been defended.

Mr. Overmyer says, "It is understood here that Mr. Chamberlain counseled its [O'Neil letter] publication. If so, he should stand ready to defend the act." If such an understanding prevails there or anywhere, however fairly or honestly Mr. Overmyer may hav come by it, it is the result of a misstatement grossly mendacious in its inception. I never in any way did any act or said any word which could by any stretch of construction, however violent, be deemed to be an advice to Mr. Harman to print the O'Neil letter. I never saw the O'Neil letter, and never had any idea that there was such a thing in existence until I saw it printed in Lucifer. Mr. Harman has fully explained these circumstances, and I am willing to rest upon his explanation.

But notwithstanding the fact that I condemned the publication of the O'Neil letter, as a matter of policy I recognized the value of that publication and was ready to defend it as a matter of right. In publishing it Mr. Harman was guilty of an indiscretion, not a crime. I can defend that publication, and defend it successfully too, in any court where I can hav a fair hearing and be met with honest treatment. It was for the very purpose of defending that publication that I took a useless journey to Kansas. A useless journey, because it did not suit the pothouse politician who there masqueraded in the ermin of justice that any opportunity for a fair trial should be conceded.

I am glad that Mr. Overmyer has quoted at length a paragraph of Mr. Harman's that cannot be too often repeated:

As to any hope of justice through an appeal to "general principle of constitutional right," we hav only to look at the history of our land for the past decade or two to become convinced that "constitutional right" is simply a word to conjure with—nothing more. As a protection of personal and citizen right it is a howling farce—a delusion and a snare—but as a protection to robbers and wholesale murderers, it is a magnificent success.

I am glad that Mr. Overmyer comments fairly upon that paragraph, and on Mr. Harman's estimate that it was a "foregone conclusion" that he should go to prison, in the following language:

Mr. Harman seemed deeply imbued with the idea that the law could not afford him justice. He looked with suspicion and contempt upon all of the methods, processes, rules, and doctrins of the law. He was willing and anxious to claim that what he did was done in good faith and with perfect sincerity of purpose, but he apparently could not understand that good faith can be available as a legal defense. He seemed unable to comprehend how a proposition so righteous could hav any sanction in law.

In view of the atrocious decisions of courts which now stand as precedents in this class of cases his skepticism was quite pardonable. These decisions, however, are not law, but simply perversions of law.

I do not share Mr. Overmyer's faith in the higher tribunals. I do not know what foundation there is for such faith. I cannot agree with him when he says, "When brought rightly before the higher tribunals I hav an abiding faith that it will be utterly repudiated and condemned." The case is so confused now that I doubt if even Mr. Overmyer's skill will avail to "bring it rightly" before the higher tribunals. Mr. Harman's estimate of the administration of justice was correct. It was based upon an observation of such rascally outrages as that upon D. M Bennett, the hairbreadth escape of Mrs. Slenker, etc., and was amply confirmed by his own experience. Mr. Overmyer struck the keynote when he said that the publication of the O'Neil letter "angered" the court. Why it should hav had that effect it is not easy to see, but the judge's conduct certainly proved him to be a madman. It would hav been profitable if Mr. Overmyer had stated his estimate of the honesty and character of the judge, who in his eagerness to repel any possible defense put five minutes of his time against five years of Mr. Harman's.

Mr. Overmyer is not quite fair when he says that I wrote Mr. Harman that his (Mr. Overmyer's) views were all moonshine. When I used that expression it was not so much in criticism of Mr. Overmyer as of the great superstition which has claimed Mr. Harman for a victim. But here is the letter. Let it tell its own story:

NEW YORK, March 15, 1890.

DEAR FRIEND HARMAN: I received a short note from you yesterday, and this morning a package containing all Mr. Overmyer's letters. I hav read Mr. Overmyer's letters, both the long one and the short one. I want to show them to —— and —— and will return them to you soon. I would say, do not print Mr. Overmyer's long letter. You hav printed enough of the opposition. From now on to the trial I would print nothing but the strongest kind of favorable matter. As to your course in relation to Mr. Overmyer, of course I cannot advise. I can only giv my ideas, which at this distance from the scene may be very wrong. He seems sincere and honorable in returning your note, etc., but is it altogether right for him to leave you in the face of the enemy? In other words, will not his separation from you imply to the minds of court and jury that your crime is an indefensible one? I still hope he may defend you and make such a vigorous defense as I believe he is capable of. It seems to me there is only one error or misconception that stands in the way of his seeing clearly through to your acquittal. He expresses it, in his letter, in these words: "Because these things [O'Neil letter, et id omne genus.—E. W. C.] do not affect you, will you as a man of extended observation say that they will not shock and pollute the young and degrade and discourage them." Now this cry of "polluting the young" is Comstock's stock in trade, and there is no sense in it whatever. Legally it is a fallacy. Mentally and morally it is a superstition. It is a mere theory, entirely unsupported by any proof. The prosecution will not, for they cannot, produce any youth who has been polluted, degraded, discouraged, or led into vicious habits by a full knowledge of the truth. That is all moonshine. That is where the stubborn intrenched prejudice appears. You hav just as much right and just as strong reason to maintain the opposit theory that the withholding of such knowledge is what leads ignorant youth into pollution and degradation. And I believe that last theory to be the correct one. Now, citizens are not, or should not be, convicted and imprisoned on mere theories, however strongly those theories may be backed up by prejudice. If you are convicted, it will be upon that theory, which Mr. Overmyer has stated in the language I quote from his letter, and a damned fallacious theory it is too, and that theory will be made to take the place of proof. There is the mischief of this whole business right in a nutshell. An honest judge will not let this superstition take the place of proof. But there are few honest judges. I believe good strong lawyers, such as I consider both Mr. Overmyer and Mr. Clemens to be, could so manage on the trial of the case that this kind of tricky imposition on the part of the prosecution would be entirely thwarted. If they could succeed in this, and I see no great difficulty in it if they hav a judge who is disposed to be half-way honest, it would be a great triumph for them, or either of them. There is a lot of damned bad precedent mixed up in the law which a little clear-headed vigor would weed out. A good deal of it is to be found in that infamous old case of United States vs. D. M. Bennett. The judge in that case was so anxious to get Bennett into prison that he laid down, as law, a great many mischievous principles which are not law at all, and judges too lazy or too careless to think for themselvs hav been following the dicta in that case all along, and the consequence is all this confusion which characterizes the decisions under this law. A good example of this confusion is found in the report of Mrs. Slenker's case (32 Fed. Rep. 691), where Judge Paul, blindly and foolishly following Benedict's outrageous ruling in the Bennett case, charged the jury that it was immaterial whether the defendant knew the matter deposited by her in the mail to be obscene or not, also immaterial what her purpose was so long as she did the act. As to the purpose or intent part of the charge, Judge Foster has disposed of that on the argument of motion to quash your indictment, and as to that part which relates to knowledge, Judge Paul overruled himself, and after careful consideration decided, on my motion in arrest of judgment, that it was necessary not only to prove knowledge, but to allege it in the indictment as well. . . .

Yours sincerely, ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

The rest of this letter relates to matters purely personal, and is not interesting in this connection. It concludes with permission to send to Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens if Mr. Harman saw fit.

Now, Mr. Editor, I feel that I hav pestered you and bothered your readers too long with a matter which, after all, is not worth so much time and space. The main fact which confronts us now is that Moses Harman is in prison. In view of that fact I propose to decline all unprofitable and inflammatory controversy with those who ought to be my friends, and to limit my efforts in the future to two lines of work. First, to do what I can to get Mr. Harman out of prison. Second, to do what I can to make the benefits resulting from his imprisonment to my fellowmen somewhat commensurate with the suffering and deprivation which he, with most heroic self sacrifice, is enduring. If in this course I can be of any service to Messrs. Overmyer and Clemens they can rely upon my assurance that the utmost aid in my power will be rendered them in the most friendly spirit and with the most hearty good will. ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

New York, June 2, 1890.

Murder with Prayer.

Down in a wild and lonely region near the Arkansas border a young man named Kirby recently started on a journey to Stone county, Mo., in company with an old school-teacher named Rogers. Both men were true believers in God and the beauties of the Christian faith, and yet, strangely enough, while passing through a deep hollow near Cow creek young Kirby forgot his Sunday-school lessons and put two bullet-holes through the body of his unsuspecting Christian friend, Rodgers, and robbed him of his watch and $100 in money. After the shooting, Kirby asserts that he was about to shoot himself, and thus save the state the cost of hanging him in the sweet by and by, but his dying victim begged him to liv and get forgivness for his crime, in order that they might meet again where revolvers are unknown, and greenbacks are not yet in circulation. With Christian weakness young Kirby requests the dying man to lead in prayer, and the murderer and his victim clasped hands and sent up a powerful appeal to the throne of grace. It is said that "where two or three meet together in his name, there is he in the midst of them." We know not whether any third party was present, but we hav no doubt that Javeh adjusted his ear-trumpet to catch every word of this unique supplication. If Christ was correct in his statement, we must believe that "there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than there is over ninety and nine just persons, who need no repentance," and with this inspired promis before us, we hav no doubt that when God became aware of the tragedy on Cow creek, and of Kirby's repentance right then and there, there was a great hullaballoo in heaven, and all the darling little angels twanged their harps and sang hosannas, and the four and twenty bald-headed elders who loaf around the foot of the throne shouted "hallelouiahs," and the multitude of murderers and cut-throats who hav gone before cried out, "Save a harp for Brother Kirby!" No doubt that the tender-hearted Mary Magdalene wiped her beautiful eyes on the sleeve of her Mother Hubbard, and St. Peter became so agitated in his exultation that for a time and times and half a time he could not find the keyhole to unlock the gate to let in the just soul of Brother Rodgers! After prayer, the pious murderer pockets the dead man's money and watch, reloads his revolver, and departs, softly whistling,

Jesus loves me, this I know,
He will wash me white as snow,

etc., and leaves the body of his victim to the tender mercies of the wolves and buzzards! Great is the Christian scheme of salvation! Ponderously huge and overgrown are the mysteries of godliness! Kirby is now in jail at Ozark, Mo., and ere long will probably find that the gibbet is the gate to paradise.

Carthage, Mo, May 30, 1890. WATSON HESTON.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 14, 1890.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

IN PRESS.

The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book.

One Hundred and Eighty-five Pictorial Arguments Against the Church, and Nearly the same Number of Pages of Reading Matter.

Price, $2; advance orders solicited.

The "Civil Policy" of "Sabbath" Laws.

We commend to the attention of those hypocrits of the American Sabbath Union who are falsely proclaiming that their purpose in endeavoring to procure more stringent Sunday legislation is only a matter of "civil policy" the Christian Statesman's review of their arguments. "That Sabbath laws cannot be maintained at all on the basis of mere expediency or policy, or on the ground of preventing a breach of the peace, is clear," says this candidly bigoted journal, "from a simple reductio ad absurdum. If we hav a civil Sabbath law simply because it coincides with the law of the Christian Sabbath, it follows that where there is no Christian Sabbath in fact to be coincided with, there can be no Sabbath law. This makes all civil law dependent on prevalent sentiment and practice. As in France, in the days of the Revolution, the public sentiment might favor one day in ten instead of one in seven. The basis of expediency or policy or public peace would require the coincidence of the civil law with the sentiment; and then where would the Sabbath be? Or, again, greed of gain might rule public sentiment, and business and pleasure go on without any day of rest whatever. What basis would there be left for the civil Sabbath? The moment we depart from an immutable moral basis, that moment we are adrift without compass or chart."

The only ground upon which "Sabbath" laws can be maintained is religious, and the logical view is that taken by the National Reformers, which is this: "The state is the creature of God, and civil government is his ordinance. The state has its own moral relations, therefore, with God himself, as well as with its subjects. Its Sabbath law is for its courts, its legislatures, its executiv officers, as well as for private citizens. Is there no question of morality in the transaction or non-transaction of judicial business on the Sabbath? Is the old law maxim, Dies dominicus non est dies juridicus, 'the Lord's day is not a judicial day,' a mere dictum of policy or expediency? May 1st or Decoration day may be made a day on which no legislativ or judicial business shall be done; but is it proposed to reduce the Lord's day to this level in the estimation and conduct of the state? Business may be suspended on other days as a matter of convenience, of sentiment, of policy. But the state is required by its author to suspend its business on the Sabbath as a matter of moral obligation. What is done on May day or Decoration day may not be legal, but if it is morally right to do it on any other day of the week, the doing of it on May day cannot be morally wrong. But this is the very essence of Sabbath violation. It is the doing of that which would be right on any other day, but which is morally wrong because done on the Sabbath."

If we admit that the state is "the creature of God," and that "civil government is his ordinance," then the "Sabbath" laws are religiously right, and there is no need to hypocritically maintain that they are desired as a matter of "civil policy." The question is, therefore, broader than the Sabbath Union would lead the people to suppose. It is a question of whether the church is superior to the state, for that is the logic of the argument that God made the state and that its administration is his ordinance.

On this there can be no two opinions among true Americans. Our government secures its right to govern from the consent of the governed; not from God, nor any of his prophets. No king claiming divine appointment; no pope with the same preposterous claim, can ever saddle themselvs upon us, for the fundamental principle of our government is directly opposed. To allow a God to direct our affairs is to go back to monarchy, popedom, slavery; for "God" means the self-elected interpreters of his "will." There is no "God" but the preachers. Their stock-in-trade, their capital, like the devil, is a myth, and the business the clergy do is the largest ever conducted with nothing back of it.

We hav had in this country once perfect "Sabbath" laws as the Sabbatarians desire. As a matter of civil policy they had to be repealed or allowed to die a natural death. To reënact them would be folly, for "civil policy" unquestionably was advanced by their abrogation. On that ground, then, there can be nothing done for the Sabbatarian fanatics, and the Christian Statesman knows it. The "divine law," in other words the welfare of the ministers, is all that "Sabbath" laws can be based upon. And this, says the Statesman, "is where our ablest jurists hav based them. Judge Flandrau, of the supreme court of Minnesota, declared that the Sabbath law of that state 'can hav no other object than the enforcement of the fourth of God's commandments, which are a recognized and excellent standard of both public and private morals' (Brimhall vs. Van Campen, 8 Minnesota Reports, 13). Judge Caldwell, of the supreme court of Texas, held that 'the object of the legislature was to forbid all secular employments on the Sabbath, not excepted in the act. The disregard of the Sabbath, the refusal to recognize it as a day sanctified to holy purposes, constitutes the offense' (Elsner vs. the State, 30 Texas Reports, 524). The supreme court of Alabama said: 'We do not think the design of the legislature in the passage of the act can be doubted. It was evidently to promote morality and advance the interests of religion, by prohibiting all persons from engaging in their common and ordinary vocations' (O'Donnel vs. Sweeney, 5 Alabama Reports, 467. See also Wright vs. Geer, 1 Root, 474; Fox vs. Abel 2 Connecticut Reports, 548; George vs. George, 47 New Hampshire Reports, 27)."

Let us hear no more, then, about the "civil policy" of "Sabbath" laws; no more about the poor workingmen; but let the Christians come out boldly and say they want Sunday laws to benefit the churches and ministers and creeds. They will then, at least, possess the merit of honesty—something, in the merit line, which they at present sadly lack.

Catching Up.

This confession of fallibility is found in the last number of Unity, the Western Unitarian organ: "The average heretic, who is compelled to throw aside his old beliefs, and comes from the orthodox church, holds a comparativly plain and consistent position, said Mr. Gannett, in his conference sermon. But the position of the Unitarian heretic is necessarily anomalous, since Unitarianism has a habit of 'catching up' with its heretics, glorifying and exalting great leaders like Emerson and Parker, whom it once felt obliged to deny and ostracise."

The Unitarians, in this respect, are very much like the remainder of the world. Catching up with heretics—unwillingly and unknowingly—has been the chief business of about ninety-nine of every one hundred persons born into the world for the past few thousand years. In all lands conservatism has endeavored to hold back the pioneers in thought and deed, only to finally be pulled up from its seat and set to hurrying after the leaders then almost lost to sight around some new bend in the road of progress. Myth and tradition and history all tell the same story—some heretic scorned and ridiculed, then glorified and exalted. Even the almighty, in that world-wide fable of creation, had to to chase after heretical Eve, who would not be content with statutory conditions. And, according to the legend, what does not the whole world owe to that beauteous rebel! and who does not now note with joy the efforts of her daughters to catch up with her, and become mutineers to their lords'—now very far from being almighty lords—authority!

It is a blessed thing, says Ingersoll, that in every age some one has had individuality enough and courage enough to stand by his own convictions—some one has had the grandeur to say his say. The truth of this becomes more apparent from decade to decade. In the thousand years of Christendom's insanity heretics were killed, and not followed, and the result was a millennium of stagnation. Every generation was a copy of the preceding, more ingenious only in devising machines to murder those heretics with whom they were utterly incapable of keeping pace, lagging and inconsequential though the heresies were.

The heretic of the creativ myth is the type of the world's real savior. But from her time to the time of the creation of another tradition the world's advancement was due to the doubters, to the teachers of new things, to the expounders of new gospel. To the law-giver Lycurgus, to the pyramid-measuring Thales, to the statesman Solon, to the philosopher for whom the conservativs mixed the poisoned draught, to Aspasia, the teacher of both Pericles and Socrates—all teachers in advance of their time—the world owes more than it will ever pay. To the later heretics is due still more, an almost infinit debt of gratitude, and though the world has caught up with and passed them, none the less do they deserve its tributes. Without Copernicus, without Galileo, the world would hav for many more years thought the sun and stars but candles in a canopy lighted at night for its benefit, and gone on indefinitly searching for the four corners of the earth. It has taken the Unitarians three hundred years to catch up with Servetus, and our philosophers still puzzle over the problems propounded by Bruno. "Martin Luther started toward Humboldt—Wesley toward John Stuart Mill," but the Lutherans and the Methodists are still far in the rear of these two men. Shortly, perhaps, they may get a glimpse of Humboldt, but it will be many decades ere they see by the light that guided Mill. France has nearly overtaken Voltaire—some of her sons and daughters are ahead of him—but in this country how few comparativly hav yet caught sight of Thomas Paine! To what a small band are Tyndall, Huxley, Spencer, Darwin, more than a dim shadow on the distant horizon! Who now walks beside America's own genius, sharing his humanitarian feelings, his charity for all human mistakes, his sympathy with all human misery, his kindness toward all life, his detestation of falsehood, sacred or profane, his love of the true and the good? Catching up! The world must travel a thousand years ere it catches up with half of the heroic heretics it has scorned and crucified, and when it takes their hands, those now living will still beckon them on.

It is fortunate for the Unitarians that they never possessed power to do more than deny and ostracise their heretics. But those things they hav done, and some of them here in the East are not even now putting themselvs out of breath in their endeavors to catch up with those they hav thus treated. But the two main branches of the Christian church, the Catholic and the orthodox Protestant, hav gone far beyond denial and ostracism of the heretics. "For ages they were rivals in the infamous effort to rid the earth of honest people. They infested every country, every city, town, hamlet, and family. They appealed to the worst passions of the human heart. They sowed the seeds of discord and hatred in every land. Brother denounced brother, wives informed against their husbands, mothers accused their children, dungeons were crowded with the innocent; the flesh of the good and true rotted in the clasp of chains; the flames devoured the heroic, and in the name of the most merciful God, his children were exterminated with famin, sword, and fire. Over the wild waves of battle rose and fell the banner of Jesus Christ. For sixteen hundred years the robes of the church were red with innocent blood. The ingenuity of Christians was exhausted in devising punishment severe enough to be inflicted upon other Christians who honestly and sincerely differed with them upon any point whatever."

Now these sects hav been compelled by evolution's resistless force to become partially civilized, and they are slowly trying to catch up. The Catholic church has about got up to Galileo and no longer forces the teachers of the heliocentric theory to abjure their discoveries as heresy. She has, in some quarters at least, got beyond Martin Luther's gross superstitions. Civilization has carried the majority of Methodists up to Wesley, while Thomas Paine's heretical Deism is now almost conservatism and orthodoxy among the scholars of the world. The Presbyterians are traveling painfully along the highway hallooing after the evolutionists that that heresy is now reconcilable with the Confession of Faith—in some places. And so it goes; the heresy of one generation is the orthodoxy of the next, and the great leaders once denied and ostracised are later on glorified and exalted.

But there remains one heretic the Christians are not catching up with. None of them liv up to his social teachings, and they are getting farther away from his religious dogmas. If he were here to-day he would not be admitted to their churches—except in the poor gallery—and he would be fortunate indeed if he escaped imprisonment in a charge of lunacy. His name was Jesus Christ.

Our Modest Reformed Presbyterian Friends.

Because our government does not recognize the Christian religion the Reformed Presbyterians, successors to the old Scotch Covenanters or Cameronians, refuse to take part in electing officials or to recognize any laws or institutions which they conceive to be inimical to those of the "kingdom of Christ." This determination places them in a very peculiar position, and at the meeting of the synod in this city last week two measures were proposed to extricate them from the dilemma their religious obstinacy has led them into. The first was an overture by the United Presbyterians to unite the two sects, and abrogate the statute forbidding the members of the Reformed church to vote for a candidate for political office who would be required to swear to uphold the federal Constitution. The second measure was the formal approval of a petition to Congress in favor of an amendment to the Constitution recognizing the Christian religion, so that the signers of the petition may no longer feel obliged to forego the right of suffrage. The petition contained over two thousand names, and several delegates thought that members of other churches who disapproved of a "Christless constitution" should be allowed to sign the petition. This would mean a union with the National Reform Association, otherwise known as the God-in-the-Constitution party.

That these Covenanters hav never been a very modest sect in their claims upon governments may be seen from the "Solemn League and Covenant" forced by them upon the government of Britain in 1650. According to Hallam the people were made to take an oath whereby they bound themselvs "to preserve the Reformed religion in the Church of Scotland, in doctrin, worship, disciplin, and government, according to the word of God and practice of the best Reformed churches; and to endeavor to bring the churches of God in the three kingdoms to the nearest conjunction and uniformity in religion, confession of faith, form of church government, directory for worship, and catechising; to endeavor, without respect of persons, the extirpation of popery, prelacy (that is, church government by archbishops and other ecclesiastical officers), and whatsoever should be found contrary to sound doctrin and the power of godliness; to preserve the rights and privileges of the parliaments, the liberties of the kingdoms, and the king's person and authority in the preservation and defense of the true religion and liberties of the kingdoms; to endeavor the discovery of incendiaries and malignants who hinder the reformation of religion and divide the king from his people, that they may be brought to punishment; finally, to assist and defend all such as should enter into this covenant and not suffer themselvs to be withdrawn from it, whether to revolt to the opposit party or to giv in to a detestable indifference or neutrality."

It is evident that in all ages, climes, and places, the Reformed Presbyterians imagin that they hav a valid claim to the earth. But, with due deference to their infallible interpretation of the word of God and consequent right to govern the world, we advise them to accept the overture of the United Presbyterians and abolish their rule in preference to waiting for a chance to vote till Congress puts Christ and the Christian religion into the Constitution. To accommodate a very few thousand Cameronians it is much to be doubted if it would be wise to remodel our organic document and reverse the tradition of the republic. In 1650 the Cameronians were in accord with the spirit of the age; in 1890 they are just two hundred and forty years behind the times.

How It Fares with Mr. Harman.

Mr. Harman has recovered from the illness consequent upon his advent in the prison at Lansing, Kan., and has been put to work in the kitchen. Mr. Swartz, the pro tem editor of Lucifer, visited him a few days ago and "found him in apparent good spirits, cheerful and hopeful in manner and in reasonably good health." He is as firm as adamant, says Mr. Swartz, "in his belief that he has committed no crime, and does not back down an inch from his position, nor does he want Lucifer to recede one iota from its policy and position."

The status of the case remains unchanged, and will until Mr. Overmyer argues his appeal, or the petitions are presented to the president. These petition-blanks can be procured from this office, or from Fair Play or Lucifer, at Valley Falls, and also from the offices of Freethought, 838 Howard street, and Egoism, box 1678, San Francisco, Cal.; the Individualist, box C, Highlands, Col.; Pomeroy's Advance Thought, 234 Broadway, and Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York city; the Investigator, Paine Memorial Building, Boston, Mass.; the Ironclad Age, Indianapolis, Ind.; the Plaindealer, Hastings, Mich.; Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Pulaski county, Va., and Secular Thought, 35 Adelaide street East, Toronto, Ont. Those at Secular Thought office are for the use of its subscribers in the United States, as Canadian solicitation does not count with the authorities. Mr. Walker says: "Now let us all get right down to work on business lines. Flippant criticisms and fierce denunciations of officials, saying nothing of impotent threats, can do no good and are sure to do much harm. A plain statement of the facts with cogent reasonings from basic principles of individual rights and the constitutional guarantees thereof are the imperativ needs of the hour. The first thing to be done is to release Mr. Harman from the living grave to which he was consigned in defiance of both law and justice." That is good advice. Everyone in favor of having our courts administer only justice should get a few of these petitions and hav them numerously signed.

Mr. Heywood.

We expected to be able in this issue to giv the whereabouts of Mr. Heywood, but are unable to, as the law's proverbial delay prevents. As we go to press we do not know whether he is free, still on trial, or acquitted. The following letter from Mr. Heywood explains the situation:

"PRINCETON, MASS., June 6, 1890.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I appeared for trial in the United States circuit court, at Boston, June 3d, but was postponed till the 4th, when Judge Nelson was unwell, and the case went over till Monday the 9th. Among other leading citizens, at the front, in defense, are Wm. I. Bowditch, Esq., the old antislavery lawyer of Boston; A. E. Giles, Esq., of Hyde Park, and H. H. Bigelow, of Worcester. Rev. M. J. Savage, the ablest and most influential Unitarian clergyman in New England, sends me a vigorous and timely letter, of which I forward you this copy for publication:

"'CHURCH OF THE UNITY STUDY,
"'PEMBROKE STREET, BOSTON, June 4, 1890

"'MY DEAR MR. HEYWOOD: Understanding that you are in another legal contest over your right to express your opinions I hasten to send you a word that you are at liberty to use as you see fit.

"'Were I not compelled to be in camp I would appear in person and speak in behalf of justice.

"'I need not raise the question as to whether or not I agree with you in all your opinions or methods. It is a petty and narrow type of man who can agree to work only with his own personal echo. I wish, however, to say, as emphatically as I can, that, in my judgment, it is either stupidity or something worse, that can charge you with intentional obscenity. It looks like a petty persecution springing out of the narrowest religious bigotry, rather than a manly zeal for social purity.

"'Whether I could work in just your way or not, I believe you are true and manly in character, and are actuated by high and humane motivs. I trust that those having the matter in hand will be broad-minded enough to see that the real issue is a question as to the right of an honest man to speak his mind. Most sincerely, M. J. SAVAGE.'

"At 9 A.M. to-morrow, June 7th, I hav to be in Boston to respond to the report of the grand jury in the state case pending. Hustling me from one case to another between 'appearances,' 'hearings,' and 'trials,' they hardly giv me time to breathe—such is the impetuous Vice Society frenzy to hav me in prison again. With business mostly broken up, to make adequate defense in the court cases, save my family from actual suffering for food and clothes, and keep my own soul and body together, is indeed a task! Eight weeks now we hav been defrauded of our right to use the mails; not allowed to reach our subscribers and other friends by printed appeal; you can see, Mr. Editor, what power the foe has to strangle us. In behalf of the right of opinion, touching morals, physiology, and language, in me now invaded, will you not speak to your readers? We greatly need assistance in this unequal struggle and shall be glad indeed of all the aid friends can render. Thankful that you are giving so much space to pending cases, and trusting that more and more able men and women will stand up for liberty imperiled, Truly yours, E. H. HEYWOOD."

Mr. Heywood has said for himself what he probably desired us to say. Ere this is read his trial will be over. If convicted he will undoubtedly appeal, so it is unlikely that he is in jail.

Items of Foreign Freethought News.

For saying that a black statue of the Virgin found in a Roman Catholic church represented the Egyptian goddess Isis, and for remarks concerning the human nature of "God," Dr. Vaelhel, editor and lecturer, has been indicted for blasphemy by the German authorities.

The eighteenth annual Congress of German Freethinkers was held in Hanover May 31st to June 2d. The most prominent Freethinkers present were Prof. L. Büchner, Dr. A. Specht, Dr. T. Voelkel, Dr. P. A. Rüdt, and Frau Hedrig Heinrich Wilhelmi.

The Humboldt Freethought Society in Leipzig, Saxony, has been suppressed. It is the old tale of coöperation between the Christian church and the powers that be.

Victor E. Lennstrand being liberated from prison after the inhuman, but very Christian, treatment had ruined his health, the Swedish authorities hav now directed their attention to Henry V. Berghell, prohibiting him from giving certain lectures. But as the prohibited lectures are for sale in bookstores, Mr. Berghell intends to ignore the order, and in spite of king and church will let the people into the secrets of orthodoxy.

One Day's Domestic Religious Intelligence.

The Rev. C. H. Gleason, formerly pastor of the Congregational church in Somers, Conn., has applied for absolute divorce from his wife on the ground of her infidelity. Soon after the death of his first wife he became ill, and decided to investigate the merits of the Christian science method of treatment. He went to Northampton, Mass., where he met a lady who was practicing the science cure, and eventually, to the surprise of his flock, he married her. A few months ago reports of an unpleasant character reached him. He did not credit them until after he had located in Boston, where such stories came to his ears that he decided to apply for a divorce.

The prosecution closed its case yesterday in the trial of Harris Smiler, the Salvation Army shouter, who killed one of his three wives at No. 284 Seventh avenue on April 3d, and the defense was opened by Lawyer William F. Hickey. The defense was first, that Smiler did not commit the murder, and that the evidence against him was purely circumstantial; and second, that if he did commit the crime he was insane at the time.

The secretary of the interior has received a telegram corroborating the report that a white man was recently murdered on the Tongue river reservation in Montana by the Northern Cheyenne Indians. The trouble, it is said, had its origin in an effort made by the agent to arrest a medicin man named Porcupine, who was exerting a very bad influence among the Indians. Porcupine is a full-blooded Cheyenne of great intelligence, who is at present upon a tour of exhortation among the Indians. He assumes to be the forerunner of a red messiah, who is shortly coming to wrest the land from the dominion of the white man and to restore the buffalo and deer to the plains and forests and the fish to the streams, as in the olden time.

The Rev. Dr. T. C. Carter, editor of the Methodist Advocate, who two years ago received the solid vote of the South for bishop, is the defendant at Chattanooga, Tenn., in a church trial. The charges are made by the Rev. John Swiney, pastor of the Jasper circuit, and the Rev. R. S. Sampson. In their bill of complaint they allege that Dr. Carter, "while attending a district conference at Pleasant Grove Church, Marion county, in June, 1887, and while walking in company with Mary Ann Ramsey, now known as Mary Ann Nelson, after the close of the night service, put his arms around her, embraced her, expressed great admiration and affection for her, and solicited her to permit him to visit her in her room after bedtime." It is further alleged in the specifications under the third charge, which accuses Dr. Carter of adultery, that the Nelson woman accepted his proposition, and that he left his room late at night and visited her in her room. The last charge is "subornation and corruption of witnesses." The allegation is that on May 7th last Carter induced Mary Ann Nelson to assert that she was mistaken when she said he [Carter] was the man who was with her, and that the man she meant was the Rev. Mr. Sampson; also that Carter procured other witnesses to swear falsely that Sampson was the man. Sampson is one of the complainants and was Carter's room-mate at the time of the alleged offense. Since the date of the alleged adultery the woman in the case has been a disorderly character at Jasper, Tenn., although at that time she was living with her parents, with whom the two ministers were stopping that night.

Letters from Friends.

LE RAYSVILLE, PA., May 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I esteem THE TRUTH SEEKER highly.

Yours, C. W. SLOCUM.

STOCKTON, CAL., May 25, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me two cartoon books.

J. K. GARRETT.

ELLISTON, MONT., May 30, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am for Friend Heston's cartoons. He does more good than writing. J. LAMBOTTE.

MASILLON, O., May 26, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, for which send me the "Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book" as soon as published.

Yours truly, S. HUNT.

TANEY, IDA., May 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I must hav the paper anyway. I will try to find some subscribers as soon as the spring work is done.

Respectfully, THOMAS WEAVER.

LINESVILLE, PA., May 24, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2, for which please send me "The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book" as soon as possible. D. C. THAYER.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., May 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $5—$3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, twenty-five cents for the ANNUAL, and the rest you may apply however you like. I like the pictures.

Yours very truly, MAGNUS HANSON.

WEST RICHFIELD, May 25, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I will soon send you $2 for the cartoon book, so count me in for one copy. I hav been trying hard to get a subscriber, but shall hav to take the paper alone.

WM. CURRIER.

SEATTLE, WASH., May 17, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $5, out of which take enough to pay for the cartoon book and the ALMANAC for 1890, and apply the balance where most needed to help along THE TRUTH SEEKER. H. L. YESLER.

NASHWAAKSIS, N. B., May 26, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I want the pictures continued on both sides, and more if you can afford it. They are the only part of the paper some ignorant Christians care to look at. I will order one of the picture books soon. S. H. GILL.

MIDDLEBURG, IND., May 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to record two obituaries: Isaac Ivins was born Sept. 30, 1806; died Jan. 17, 1890. His wife, Mary E. Ivins, died March 6, 1889. They both died very suddenly. They died as they had lived, Freethinkers. He had taken THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since it was published, and taken many other Liberal books and papers.

Yours truly, MRS. H. J. IVINS.

CLIFTON, KAN., May 30, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I send $2 for the cartoon book. The Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union are adding so to their numbers here in Kansas that I think they will change the political complexion of things so that it will astonish the natives. This has been and is now the Republican banner state, but I think there will be a change for the better in the near future.

Yours for Universal Mental Liberty, JOHN C. HANAN.

LONGSTREET, GA., May 24, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I send a new subscriber. I hav nothing to say about illustrations, only this—the magnificent display of horsemanship by Colonel Ingersoll and Hon. W. E. Gladstone was about the best, if not the best of all. Has Uncle John Peck joined the church? His friends are inquiring for him. His sledgehammer blows count for something every time. Very truly yours, T. N. MASON.

BOSTON, MASS., April 2, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I get but little time to read, and do not see THE TRUTH SEEKER as much as I want to, but I feel more pious if it is in the house. It is a missionary to others and that is some consolation. I am too much in sympathy with Freethought not to do what little I can to help it along.

Wishing you continued success, cordially,

A sister truth seeker, C. FANNIE ALLYN.

ASHLAND, ORE., May 18, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $6 25, for which send me three copies of the picture book, and Ayer's "Secular Funeral Handbook." I am an old man and am liable to pass in my checks some of these days, and I do not want any preaching over me, for they will be sure to lie about me. Long life to Heston and success to our noble cause.

Yours very truly, O. COOLIDGE.

PACIFIC, MO., May 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: There appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER lately quite a number of articles attempting to expose the fallacy of Spiritualism, and that too with a spirit of confidence and arrogance which surpasses all warrant from present conditions, i.e., human life itself. This "death ends all" theory—what an absurd, self-contradicting, misleading idea it is! If "death [so-called] ends all," how does one account for the complexity of object life and natures; the myriads of worlds, for man that thinks it, for man that reasons, for man that loves, that hates, that schemes and contrives, that designs—in a word, for man of motiv and thought?

Yours truly, AUG. H. KRUGER.

DEGRESS, TEX., May 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I renew my subscription, and send twenty-five cents for the ANNUAL. It is a hard time on us to raise money here now, as our crop prospects are bad, owing to too much rain and flood. I think I can send you a new subscriber or two after a while, but money is too scarce now. I want the cartoon book, but do not send it until I remit the money for it. THE TRUTH SEEKER has become almost a necessity to me. I vote to keep up the cartoons if possible.

Respectfully, J. L. ROGERS.

MINNESOTA LAKE, MINN., May 24, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $5 for that noble journal, THE TRUTH SEEKER. I cannot get along without it. Mr. Heston's great work is volumes in the form of pictures. Take March 15th, "Some Ordinances of God," and April 9th, "Work for the Faithful"—they could not be better done. And the Christian friends, I tell you, are knocked by them with such a force that a good many in our vicinity are commencing to think that a good many believers are yet in the period of monkeys or not far from it, to believe nonsense.

Yours for liberty, E. S. GLICK.

MARKSVILLE, LA., May 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am a constant reader of your most valuable paper. I look for it with eager eyes every week. I hav been trying to get you some new subscribers, but the present high water prevents me on account of the stringency of money matters. We hav two churches in this neighborhood and no school; plenty of faith and no education. I hav seen four or five who say they intend to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER as soon as they can get started with their crops. Respectfully, LOD. H. DANIEL.

SOUTH BOSQUE, TEX., May 28, 290.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $5 for renewal and Heston's cartoon book. We vote for pictures on both front and back of THE TRUTH SEEKER by Heston, and some of the portraits of the leading Liberals inside. My children know more of the Bible from these pictures than most Sunday-school scholars do, and it is properly taught, i.e., not with that reverential awe which the average Sunday-school teacher instils in their young minds. Long liv THE TRUTH SEEKER, its present editor, and its artist. D. F. MARRS.

ARAPAHOE, NEB., May 25, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been trying to get a few recruits for the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, some of whom hav been stanch believers in that Holy Queer and his stale old book of miracles and ancient lies. I hav given the new subscribers the benefit of your prices sent me, in order that the truth might be circulated among a would-be lot of preachers that we hav here, if they only knew how to be such, who some time in the misty past hav mistaken the measles or a wind colic for a call to preach, and the result is a lot of yaller-legged-chicken eaters, ignorant and superstitious enough to believe that Jonah swallowed the whale instead of the whale swallowing Jonah, if the good book only told them so.

WILLIAM GATH.

PORT HURON, MICH., May 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I do not agree with your Materialistic views, but as the glacier was nature's great plow to level the earth, for men to reap and sow, who can tell but that you are the instrument to tear up old theology by the roots, so that the children of earth can liv in peace? It is only a question of time before you will acknowledge the truth of the Spiritual philosophy. The forest must be cleared before the temple is erected. Hence I say, go on with your work of showing up the hypocrisy of the churches, as they pretend to be working for the other world, while they grab everything in this mundane sphere that they can lift and carry off. The criminal class multiply in the same ratio as the churches increase. The churches are the curse of this nation to-day, and you hav the moral courage to show them up in their true selvs; therefore I will take your paper to help along the good work.

Respectfully yours, W. E. LEONARD.

GRANTON, MO., May 23, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been trying for some time to get another subscription for your valuable paper, but hav failed so far, though now I hav a new field to work in maybe I will accomplish more good. If you hav any subscribers in the towns whose names I inclose please let me know. Those three towns are all close together. If there are any Liberals in either of them I want to know it, for they are the kind of people I like to associate with. I will continue to giv out my papers as fast as I read them, and try to make as many converts as possible. Please let me know about what time the book of cartoons will be out, as I wish to hav a copy of it. I will do all I can here for the Liberal cause. I am not much acquainted here yet, but I will get so after a while. I think from the number of joss-houses here there are a great many professed Christians. J. W. MCCOLLUM.

MONTESANO, WASH., May 17, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $18 and please send your valuable paper to the below-named new subscribers. Continue the pictures, as they are the best educators for our cause. In a minute they do more work than the best orator could by a long speech. For the sake of humanity continue them. Our small place of two thousand inhabitants is growing very fast, and a new element is coming, bringing new ideas, as our last city election showed. The power of the church is broken and Liberally inclined people are not now afraid any more to show their colors. In a few weeks we hope to hav Mr. C. B. Reynolds from Seattle here to giv some of his fine lectures to our reverends and their followers, and by the fall I hope we will hav money enough to build a fine hall for our purposes. Hoping to be able to send you some more subscribers in the near future, I remain,

Yours for truth, light, and liberty, HENRY KNUST.

STEUBENVILLE, O., March 19, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In your article on parochial schools, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 1st, you say: "If the Catholics provide the schools at their own expense, they are certainly entitled to them and to send their children to them." This we admit. If they want religious schools, all right; but the state supplies secular schools for all and claims the right to compel attendance there, and should hav it enforced against a religious school established with the acknowledged purpose of breaking up the secular school system. Let the public school be entirely secular. Let no Bible-reading be allowed to offend Catholic, Agnostic, or Jew, and then compel the attendance of all children, or children of all, and let those who wish their children to attend religious schools send them there at other hours. This can be done by state laws and still the schools can be run by local boards, and even if the priests did get a majority of the school board, the state law would bring them up standing if they attempted to introduce any of their religious mummery in the public schools. JNO. DOWNES.

LECASSIA, FLA., May 24, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Although past threescore and ten I am yet a boy, not having been to bed for sickness for sixty years. I had nine brothers and sisters that prayed to God and trusted in Jesus; they are all dead many years ago. But I early learned that God was a myth, always too far off to aid one in anything, and Jesus was a dead Jew. But the forces of nature were ever present; these I learned to subject to my use, and consequently hav always enjoyed good health and prospered.

My first lesson in seeking truth was to study space. Space has no end. And it always existed. Electric force always existed and consequently is the author of everything in space. No God could possibly create the universe. If one God, a million would be required.

Yet I am very religious. My religion is, to make my neighbors happy. When I hav succeeded in this I am feeling splendid. All other religions are frauds.

Inclosed find $5—$2 for the book of pictures when done and $3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER. May Heston and Peck liv a century to paint and "Peck" 'em.

Yours ever in truth, W. B. RADFORD, M.D.

TWIN MOUND, KAN., April 28, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I intended to send my subscription some time before it became due, but the legalized bandits who hold a mortgage on my farm sent me notice that if the interest was not paid when due, they would eject me. I do not propose to worry over my grievance, when we vote year after year to perpetuate a system of legal banditism. People who call themselvs free ought to blush that they are willing slaves to a system that robs them of the fruits of their industry. But if we suffer in this world we hav the satisfaction of knowing that we will hav a good time beyond the river, while those who hav robbed us we are to enjoy the sweet revenge of seeing drift leeward in the roaring, flaming tide of hell. My authority for the retributiv justice that awaits these moneyed sharks is Jesus, and of course I cannot be wrong, as Christians tell us he never lied. Then look at me, an ignorant old farmer, walking down the streets of the New Jerusalem, that on earth was only fit to be a chamber-maid for hogs and cattle—see me with my new regimentals on, squinting over my larboard side to see their torture.

Mr. Editor, accept my sincere thanks for the manly stand you hav taken in exposing the hidden deformities of that curse of curses, the Catholic church. ALEX. MCBEIDE.

ESCANABA, MICH., May 29, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am a French Canadian, just four years in this country. I hav taken my first papers out, and I like the United States flag. I was a Roman Catholic four years ago. I was inclined to read history every day, and all kinds of books, including the Bible, but was not able to get much learning. But THE TRUTH SEEKER came in my reach one day through my friend Mr. James McWilliams, from Gladstone, Mich. I found it the best paper that ever I saw or read. My surroundings were not favorable to improve my mind in the least. By reading THE TRUTH SEEKER I am given some chance.

Now I will tell you about a lecture here by an air-pilot, Colonel Copeland, on "The Mistakes of Bob." He got up and commenced to speak ill of Robt. G. Ingersoll, the greatest man of the world, and told some of his stories about the rib of Adam and about the windows of heaven being open, and made fun of him. I kept looking at him all the time to take it all in, and I would grind my teeth with anger and say to myself, If he was here you would not make so much fun. If you see Colonel Ingersoll ask him if he is sleeping, or what is the matter, to allow such sky-pilots to talk about him. I hav read his works and I know that if he had been here he could hav plucked the goose very easily. I am going to take THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mark me down as an Infidel in the first degree and put my name in full and do not fear.

ISADORE GOULETTE.

BRONSTON, KY., May 25, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to see that Ex-Rev. J. N. Maxey understands my letter of January 1st better than Mr. Moot, and still Maxey takes in only half the truth of my position. Ex-Rev. Mr. Maxey is a writer whose letters I am generally pleased with, but in his letter of March 11th he certainly makes a mistake in saying that he knows that there is no God. He says, "But in this case I think I can giv logical and satisfactory reasons why and how I know there is no God." Mr. Maxey then proceeds and givs ample and satisfactory evidence for the faith that is in him, or theologically for his lack of faith, but not a bit of evidence that would justify knowledge. Now I will giv a simple rule that I think is incontrovertible, which is this, If you believe a thing, you do not know it, and if you know it, you do not believe it. Faith ends exactly where knowledge begins. A man can truthfully say, I no longer believe it to be so because I know it to be so.

Now, I hav for a long time thought that a great drawback to science, knowledge, and the happiness of man is the honest belief of the masses in the efficacy of prayer. This is Sunday, and I hav no doubt that there are hundreds of thousands of people here in the United States on their knees talking to God, asking him to giv them health, long life, and happiness. And just think, if such an individual as the Christian's God does not exist, how long and how far we hav been traveling the wrong road. Hence I call on the preachers, the world over, to establish beyond controversy the existence of God. J. N. BROWN.

VINELAND, N. J., May 27, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just been reading the story of "An Amateur Preacher" in your issue of May 24th, and it has put me in an admirably jolly mood for a man who has just passed his eighty-ninth year. I do not think I hav laughed so heartily over any other article for twenty years. It has carried my mind back to the hell-fire sermons that I used to hear when a lad, and preached over to the boys in our sports after "metin';" and it follows the track of the parsons and shows up their character so accurately, it is a gem that ought to be read in every family.

I hope Parson Stiggins will return to his missionary work, and giv us the history of his travels, for the benefit not only of this, but of future generations. It would become more and more instructiv and amusing as the priesthood of all sects die out, as they certainly will in a few generations from this.

One thing more—I wish you to giv us your definition of the words Christian and Christianity. I hav always understood that Christian meant one who followed Christ, and that Christianity meant the doctrin that he preached. If this is your definition of these words, then you or Mr. Heston hav made a mistake, for in the same issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER you hav pictures labeled Christian gibbet, Christian wheel, etc. Now, whether Christ was God, man, or myth, he never used nor ordered others to use such instruments of torture, and it seems to me unfair to giv them his name. We often read of Christian churches, when, if the word Christian means a church that obeys Christ's teachings, there is not such a church on earth, and I hav long thought we ought to hav new words to represent such churches, and not disgrace Christ, even if he is a myth, by calling them by his name.

Though Christ had an idea that there was a hell for the wicked after death, he was far in advance of the wholesale murderer Moses, the Catholics, Puritans, and others who used those instruments, and his name ought not to be mixed with theirs.

We hear of Christian ministers; but if Christ ever lived and said what the New Testament says, he did not speak the truth. I can prove that every one of the eighty thousand clergymen of all sects in this nation who make preaching a trade, are on their way to everlasting fire, and I challenge any one of the eighty thousand to enter a discussion with me on the subject in any paper that will fairly publish both sides; and yet Christ never used any of those instruments of torture to force people to believe him, as his pretended followers hav done.

Please tell us what you mean by the words Christian and Christianity, or giv us new words in their place.

Sincerely yours, J. HACKER.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME,
QUINCY, ILL., May 26, E.M. 290.

MR. EDITOR: As I am at leisure, having abundant opportunity to labor for the advancement of the noble cause of Freethought and the grand old TRUTH SEEKER; and as I am associated with men of every shade of belief, race, rank, and color, who are constantly going and coming, and I consequently mingle with varied society, I trust I am accomplishing much good in shaking the faith of hundreds—while in turn they think I am as bad as Ingersoll, if not quite as influential. I am constantly advised by my friends, and chid, implored, and threatened by my adversaries, to desist from the ultra course I take in ridiculing sacred things, falsely so called. I am much pleased, in several of the "Letters from Friends," in the last issue of your inestimable paper, to see so many taking such a bold position. One day last week, as I was feeling uncommonly bad, I thought I would do well to write my funeral memorial, which I did, and speaking of it in the presence of others, one comrade desired to read it, to which I assented. As he read it aloud, criticising its grammar and commenting, one man protested, while the majority applauded him for his vituperation, ridicule, and abuse. When through reading it he threatened my life, and threw my manuscript on the floor. I will here giv a synopsis:

Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Quincy, Ill.—A dying request: I hereby earnestly protest against anyone who believes in revelation, or who has any reverence for the Bible or the Bible God, officiating as chaplain at my burial. But if there is anyone known as an Infidel or Atheist, I hope the following may be taken as a basis for what remarks he may choose to make.

J. N. Maxey was born near Alton, Madison county, Ill. When four years of age his parents removed to Bond county, Ill. They were Methodist; his father subsequently joined the Baptist church simply for convenience's sake. The subject of this memoir was from his youth deeply interested in religious subjects, and gave much attention to reading and discussing the Bible, believing it because he was taught to, suppressing reason. As his parents died when he was in his teens and he was thrown into varied society, he was thrown with a variety of churches, viz., the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist, being an exhorter and then a preacher. But as he became better acquainted with logic, the Bible, and the manner in which professors of theology attempted to explain away cavils, he became convinced that the Bible is a humbug, teaching a corrupting atonement and false morality. Here is what he says: "The Bible is the sworn enemy of philosophy, the persecutor of science, discouraging education, making hypocrisy a foul means to popularity and Christianity a handmaid for evil in disguise, corrupting the innocent and inexperienced until injustice is thought to be justice." And because Mr. Maxey made these discoveries and published them, because he loved truth and justice more than self and hypocrisy, he is despised. Within the church none are too ignorant to judge; none who hav offended the church are too good to malign, none too generous to mistreat, if it be so directed by church or priest.

EX-REV. JOS. N. MAXEY.

MARION, CONN., May 20, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: He who suppresses a fact is a liar. The grocer informeth not concerning the sand in his sugar. The milkman sayeth not his milk is watered. And the parson preacheth not the defects of his religion. The professors of theology tell us Darwin is in hell. In my estimation that man was perfectly free from prejudice. He displayed the facts to prove his theory, and also stated all the objections he had discovered. In this respect, if in nothing more, Darwin was never equaled by priest or minister. There is not a clergyman in the world who, if he knows anything outside of faith, does not know that the objections against supernatural religion are serious. That the Christian's Bible is a vast mass of grave and comical errors; that the record of Christianity is black as midnight, with only an occasional star of humanity visible, and that Infidels hav lived honest lives and died peaceful deaths, are facts well known to most of the clergy. The clergy apparently desire the people to believe as truth three falsehoods, viz.: 1. That the Bible is God's word, and is strictly true; that is to say, therein is not a mistake or an inconsistency. 2. That Christianity is a most beautiful religion; that it has enlightened this world, and filled it with happiness. 3. That Infidels are neither honest nor intelligent, and that they usually die most horrible deaths. Now, if our ministers of the gospel are honest men, let them unanimously undeceive the people. Let us hav one Sabbath when from every pulpit in this land words shall issue in substance as follows: "My hearers: We are aware that the majority of you hav all your lives believed as follows: 1. That the Bible is God's revelation to man, and contains no erroneous matter. 2. That Christianity is a splendid and harmless religion, and has been the only means by which the world has been enlightened and life made joyous. 3. That Infidels are generally ignorant and dishonest, and usually die frightful deaths. My friends, I am here to dissipate these beliefs. We hav allowed you to believe too long these untruths. The Bible is God's word, but in it are many foolish mistakes [here let the parson cite a few of the biggest lies, or rather productions of ignorance, he knows are in God's word]. The very prevalent notion that our only true religion is perfectly harmless, we are sorry to state, can not be proved by history [now let the clergyman talk a little on the true relationship Christianity has borne to human slavery, both bodily and mental; also please tell your hearers of some of the bloody persecutions your religion has been the cause of]. That we hav deceived you regarding the Infidels I now propose to illustrate." Giv it to them strong. Tell of the good Paine has done them. Tell them about the Infidel Abolitionists. In fact, tell them all you know relating to all the great good Infidels. And be sure and certify that Infidels die as resignedly as do Christians.

Now, my dear ministers, I hardly think you will follow my suggestions, for "the simple believeth every word." If some parsons I know of should do as I request, they would lose their salary, because their congregations through listening to my reverend friends are so firmly impressed that the Bible is strictly true, that Christianity has ever been contentment, and that Infidels are vicious sneaks, and die in agony terrific, that such a revulsion of feeling would come over them as to cause them to desert their religion, thereby losing their souls. So you see it is best to let a vast horde of believers believe away. What we workingmen need are facts, work, and justice, in the place of faith, hope, and charity. We find in Colonel Ingersoll's eloquent expressions better food for mind than in those brays of certain theological asses. And we hav arrived at the conclusion that he who dies that some fool may liv is a bigger fool than the survivor. We hate the orthodox religion. We hate the hypocrisy of these "sacred" scamps, who vociferously shout and whack pulpits (to direct attention from what they are saying) and say nothing of any particular value to us producers.

EDWIN N. BEECHER.

ONEONTA, N. Y., May 28, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find an article cut from the World of May 26th, which interested me very much, for I hav been reading in THE TRUTH SEEKERS of 1888 and 1889 the letters from Elmina Slenker, W. H. Burr, and others:

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., May 25.—"This is where Diss Debar kept his ghosts handy," said President Beckwith, of the county court, the other day when he found a trap-door in his residence. The house is one formerly occupied by the much-heard-of "Gen." J. H. Diss Debar, who, with Mme. Messant, the alleged daughter of Lola Montez, created a sensation in New York by their "spook pictures" some time ago. Diss De Bar was a Spiritualist and dabbled in the occult art while here. His séances were attended by many well-known people of this city, and his apparitions, spirit rappings, and other mysterious performances at that time caused general comment and wonder. No one could imagin the key to his mysteries until a few days ago, when Judge Beckwith's family were taking up a carpet in the large room used by Diss Debar during his séances. Judge Beckwith happened to notice that the floor seemed to hav been laid in sections, and upon closer investigation found that in the middle, or near the center of the room, where Diss Debar's cabinet stood, a large piece of flooring five feet long and several feet wide had been once cut out and replaced. Running along the walls of the basement was an outside web of wire. Judge Beckwith had known Diss Debar when here and satisfied himself that it was by these means he produced spirits at will and eluded detection.

If death does not end all and there is a spirit land, the query is, can the inhabitants of that land appear to the inhabitants of this earth? I am a skeptic, and the letters from many Spiritualists hav so far given me no reason to be otherwise. Some of the writers try hard enough, by means of a great deal of talk and little to the point, to make converts, thus aiding mediums, and themselvs, perhaps, in the accumulation of the almighty dollar. Many are being humbugged, the mediums and their satellites laughing at such credulity, though working for it and enjoying the fruits thereof.

While in Washington some weeks ago I attended a séance. Fee, $1; twelve in attendance. One, at least, in the circle was in collusion with the medium, to impress upon us the truth in Spiritual phenomena. They succeeded in impressing my friend and me with this fact—that the whole performance was a fraud, and that the perpetrators ought to hav been dealt with accordingly.

If Spiritualists, whether believers in their mediums for gain or otherwise, wish to impress the people at large that they are not impostors, they will hav to get up something new—something that does not look so terribly like juggling. If there are spirits they certainly hav no reason to be very proud of themselvs, for they seem to enjoy working in the dark and in an under-the-table, behind-the-curtain way, and never anxious to meet their earthly friends honestly under honest conditions, and to be at the beck of mediums, many of them without character. How can any of us ever desire to become a spirit and to dwell in a spirit land?

O spirits! Turn over a new leaf. Giv us a reason to be proud of you. Do away with the curtains, the covered slates, etc. Then tell us something worth the knowing—something to make this world, to some of us, at least, not seem "an empty dream." C. L. MILLEN.

NEWARK, N. J., March 22, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: About one month ago, I went to the town of Carlstadt, N. J., a German settlement. I went in a store to drum trade, and overheard the following conversation between two German women. One of them I was acquainted with, having sold her goods before. The stranger said to my acquaintance: "Last fall I lost my son. He had been sick a long time with consumption. Just before he died he desired to sit in the easy chair by the window, and looking at an apple drop from the tree he turned his head and said, 'Mother, do you believe that when we die we go to heaven?' I answered him, 'Yes, my child, we all meet there if we are pure and good.' 'Well,' he answered me, 'I hope it may be so, for I should like to meet my dear mamma and papa, but I don't believe it.' 'Why don't you believe it, Otto?' I inquired with tears in my eyes. He said, 'Don't cry, mamma, and I will tell you. I hav just seen an apple drop from that tree, and I hav never seen fruit drop till ripe, and when it once falls I hav never seen an apple go back to the tree again, or any open graves where people are buried.'" I said, "Excuse me for interrupting you, but I should like to know how old your son was." She answered, "Twelve years, sir." I told her he was a remarkable child for his age. I then asked her if she believed what she told her son about going to heaven. She answered, "No. I wanted to reconcile his mind for a change, for he knew he could not liv long." "Then I suppose the child had heard you and your husband talk against churches." She answered: "No; I always tried to impress my children to believe in a future, although I was not a strict church-going woman. I paid for a pew by the year, but since we hav retired from business I hav stopped paying pew rent, for it was business for me as well as the priest"—and pointing to a funeral of a man who was killed on the railroad—"You see, sir, that body has just had a high requiem said for the repose of his soul. The priest prays and works for money, and God gets the soul. The priest has the best of the bargain." I then handed the lady a TRUTH SEEKER and told the lady that kept the store that I would bring up a dozen more to-morrow. She thanked me, and, true to my word, I carried up the papers. She said: "I don't see why the Editor doesn't publish half his paper in German." They had been reading the one I gave them. I answered them that it would be a good idea to do so, for Germany is a land of intelligence and a land of song, and there are not many Germans that cannot read. She said, "I will read those papers and I think we will subscribe for the paper." I told her if she knew any friends to giv her copies to them when she got through with them, as I always giv my papers away. I hav given three away to-day.

Now, one word more and I am done. I ran against an Irish Catholic woman, married to a literary gentleman of education. She was drinking her beer when I entered her door. She asked me if I would hav a glass of the aloes. I told her I did not mind, so she poured out the beverage and poured out her mind on family affairs. She said her husband was a Protestant and did not believe in any religion. He was older than she was and the priest told her her husband was too old for her; that her burden was great, but she would hav to carry it, and he felt sorry for her. I told her the priest was talking for himself. I asked her how old the priest was. She answered, about forty, about her age. And I felt sorry for her husband. W. W. MORRIS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Peter, Pumpkin-eater.

Peter, Peter, pumpkin-eater,
Had a wife and couldn't keep her.
He loved her well, as all can tell,
But with her he could never dwell.

Peter, Peter, pumpkin-eater,
Also had nine children, sweeter
Than all else the world beside,
Yet with them he could ne'er abide.

He was a sailor, bold and free,
He compassed land and skipped the sea.
When home he came he could not stay
What seemed to him but one short day.

Then off again the world to roam,
He sailed o'er billows and through foam,
A lonely wreck of human joy,
Since when he was a sailor boy.

But now at home, he's ceased to roam;
His wife and children round him come.
With brothers, sisters, friends, and all,
He livs content without a squall.

Elf Song.

I twist the toes of the birds a-doze,
I tinkle the dew bells bright;
I chuck the chin of the dimpled rose
Till she laughs in the stars' dim light.
The glow-worm's lamp I hide in the damp,
I steal the wild bee's sting;
I pinch the toad till his legs are a-cramp,
And clip the beetle's wing.
O ho! O hey!
My pranks I play
With never a note of warning.

I set a snare for the moonbeams fair
All wrought of spider-web twine;
I tangle the naughty children's hair
In a snarl of rare design.
I flit through the house without any noise,
There's never an elf so sly;
I break the toys of bad little boys
And the cross little girls who cry.
O hey! O ho!
I work them woe,
Till crows the cock in the morning.

—Samuel Minton Peck in St. Nicholas.

Corner Gospel.

EARN WHAT YOU SPEND.

The sweetest bread is that which is earned by the sweat of the brow. Try it and see for yourself. Earn something. As soon as a child is able he should work a little. He should learn to be helpful in some way. Play is very attractiv to boys and girls, but they should not play all the time.

If it is true that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," it is also a fact that all play and no work often makes Jack a bad boy. So the two should be combined, some work and some play.

Jack can attend to the garden, somewhat; he may, if he is a farmer's son, hav a little garden of his own. The vegetables that grow in that garden, planted and cared for by his own two hands, will hav a fine flavor.

Jack can get the kindlings for the fire, bring in the coal, blacken his papa's boots, amuse the baby, keep his room in order, and, in fact, be of assistance in many ways. There are many chores that he may do to prove his kindly and generous disposition.

I once knew a boy who earned money in a small way by saving all the bits of brass, lead, copper, etc., that came in his way. He sold it one day, the first that he had collected, to a tin-pedler. The vender had many pretty toys to please a little boy, but what do you suppose this boy bought with his first money? Among the articles displayed in the wagon of the pedler was a tiny tin pail, painted red, and upon it in gilt letters were these two words, "Good Girl." Henry—that was the boy's name—fancied this pail and purchased it for the sum of eight cents. With a great joy in his heart he placed the little toy in the hands of his sister. "It's for you," he said, "for you." "I earned the money myself," he continued, with proud consciousness, while his great eyes sparkled with a pure delight, "and I didn't want to buy things for myself, but something for you."

This act revealed a generous disposition, and it made happiness for two little child hearts.

It is right for children to hav pocket money, some to spend as they please, but it is better that they should render some equivalent for it—earn it in some good way.

It makes them respect themselvs. For a parent to take a child's money that the child has earned, to buy something for the house, is not in good taste. The child feels robbed. But it would be quite proper for the child to do that voluntarily, if he so desired. No two hav any business to become parents unless able to feed, clothe, and educate their children.

An aged man told me the other day that he well remembered in his boyhood being at one time the proud possessor of a silver half dollar, the result of his own hard labor. His father kept it for him until July 4th, when he and his brothers went downtown with their father to see the procession.

What did this father do but take his Robbie's half dollar and buy some cherries, which he distributed among the boys. He did this without consulting Robbie, and the child naturally felt a great sense of wrong and injustice at the act. He could not taste the cherries, and wondered the fruit did not choke the others. When he went back home he sought a nook all by himself in the barn, and gave vent to his injured feelings in a good cry, and he never quite got over the insult, for insult it was, and always wished his father had been more thoughtful of his little son's money—all he then had in the world.

Nothing is gained by treating children as inferiors. Self-respect and self-dependence are important factors in the formation of good character. That which we would not like done to ourselvs we hav no right to do to another, certainly not to a child.

Prudence and economy are good traits to possess, but when carried to excess, they are harmful and injurious. Wise counsel is good; example is better. Parents should be themselvs what they would like to see their children become.

It is good to hav money to spend; better still is it to earn that which you spend.

S. H. W.

They Got the Scent.

There is a miserly old lady living in Oshkosh who, it is believed, judging from circumstances, has chests and chests of gold secreted in her house somewhere. She is so penurious and hates to part with her money so bad, that when she is compelled from absolute necessity to buy the necessaries of life she walks to the store farthest from her house so that she can keep in her possession the money that must be spent for food a little longer, and pays for her purchase with more reluctance than Isaac of York could command while parting with his gold.

It was told of this old lady that one day, while counting over some money, a five-cent piece dropped in a big wood-box filled with wood, shavings, etc. She searched for an hour in vain, and was almost distracted by the loss, when a bright thought struck her. She would hav a couple of little boys, who were playing near the house, seek it. Accordingly she called them in and told them if they would find the money which had dropped in the wood-box she would giv them each a cent. The youngsters, eager to earn the price of a stick of candy, went willingly to work, and after hunting for about two hours, gave a howl of delight when they discovered the missing coin.

The old woman eagerly snatched it from them, and, after carefully depositing it in her pocketbook, called them dear little children and said they well earned their reward. She then went into another room, brought out a bottle that had once been filled with perfume, and gave each one of the boys a scent of the lingering odor, after which she called them dear little darlings again and told them to run away now and play. The little fellows were so overwhelmed with gratitude at the old lady's munificence that they kindly thanked her in their abstraction.—Oshkosh Times.

Parallel Stories.

There is a touchingly beautiful story told of Maurice de Sully, afterward bishop of Paris, to the effect that shortly after he had been appointed canon and archdeacon an old woman, clothed in drugget, with a white staff in her hand, entered the city and inquired of any whom she met where she might find her son, Dr. Maurice. Some ladies, fearing that the new dignitary might feel humiliated if he fell in with his mother so shabbily dressed, attired her in rich habiliments, threw a costly mantle over her, and then conducted her to his residence.

But the archdeacon refused to recognize her in those borrowed plumes. "My mother," said he, "is a poor woman who never wears anything better than a gown of drugget." They were obliged to take her away and restore her original clothes, after which they returned to the house of Dr. Maurice, who, at the time, was the center of a brilliant assembly. The moment he caught sight of her he advanced with the greatest reverence, and embraced her, saying: "This is indeed my mother." But precisely the same story is told of Pope Sixtus V. and his sister Camilla, whom the cardinals had caused to be decked out in magnificent array, to be presented to the new pope after his exaltation.

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

A gentleman asked a little girl what it was that made one feel so funny when another tickled him. "I suppose it is the laugh creeping over him," was the instant reply.

Sunday-school teacher: "Now you may ask any question you like." (Little boy in the back row holds up his hand.) Teacher: "Well, Willie, what is it?" Willie: "Be we goin' to hav a picnic this year?"

"Why don't you wash the bottom of your feet, Johnny?" asked a grandmother of a boy who was performing the operation before retiring for the night. "Why, granny, ye doesn't think I'se going to stand up in bed, does-ye?" replied Johnny.

A little girl being sent to a store to purchase some dyestuff, and forgetting the name of the article, said to the clerk: "John, what do folks dye with?" "Die with? Why, cholera, sometimes," replied John. "Well, I believe that's the name. I want three cents' worth."

"You see, grandma, we perforate an aperture in the apex, and a corresponding aperture in the base; and by applying the egg to the lips and forcibly inhaling the breath, the shell is entirely discharged of its contents." "Bless my soul," cried the old lady, "what wonderful improvements they do make! Now, in my young days we just made a hole at each end and sucked."

Lighting a Pipe with Ice.

Last winter quite a little excitement was caused among a party of skaters on the Serpentine river, England, by one of the party making a lens of ice and lighting the pipes of the others. This reminds the writer that this curious experiment was first brought before the public by Dr. Scoresby, who, when in the polar regions, to the great astonishment of his companions, who did not understand why the ice did not freeze the solar rays, performed the same remarkable feat.

It may also be worthy of remark that Professor Tyndall, when a tutor in the Royal Institution, on several occasions set fire to little heaps of gunpowder with rays from an electric arc concentrated upon the powder by lens of ice. His explanation was that, although ice absorbs rays of certain waves of light and is gradually melted thereby, other waves are not absorbed, and these latter produce the heating effect at the focus of the lens. It is wholly a question of the relativ motions of the molecules of frozen water and the motions of the waves of light.

Correspondence.

COALING, ALA., May 26, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav never written to the Children's Corner. I am nine years old and hav never been to school. My sister teaches me at home. I love to read the Children's Corner and look at the pictures. I love to hear my sister read in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I study in the Third Reader and study spelling and arithmetic. I never go to church, for I get tired of hearing them pray and preach.

Your little friend, H. BRANTLY WARD.

COALING, ALA., May 26, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write to the Corner. I am seven years old. Papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like the pictures. They are so nice. I hav never been to school; I study at home. It is raining to-day. All the people here are Christians and they don't like us because we are Infidels. I wish that there were some Liberals living here. I liv on a farm and can help papa work some. I am going to study hard, and when I become a man I want to lecture for Freethought.

Your little Liberal friend, JOHN WARD.

FABIUS, N. Y., May 25, 1890.

EDITOR OF THE CORNER, Aunt Susan: I wrote a letter some months ago and invited the young people of our Corner to write to me, and I was made happy by receiving many excellent letters, most of whose writers I am still corresponding with.

I also received a number of beautiful autograph cards with my name stamped upon them from one of those new-found friends. As I never heard again from that correspondent, I fear my letter of thanks was never received. I hope it was, as I certainly wish to acknowledge such kindness.

I write now to say that I will send a pencil drawing, of my own work, on cards six by seven in size, of R. G. Ingersoll, Robert Burns, Susan H. Wixon, and J. E. Remsburg. I will send any one of the four for twenty-five cents in stamps and a stamp for mailing.

I had a number of birthday presents. Among them was "All in a Lifetime," and "Summer Days," by S. H. Wixon. I am delighted with them, and wish all the Liberal young people could read them.

I read the letter of Miss Daisy Suter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 3, 1890. She livs in Turkey, in that far-off land. I would like to correspond with Daisy. If she writes me a letter I will answer it.

I fear my letter is too long already.

Good-bye, ELDA S. BILLINGS.

P. S.—Your "Summer Days at Onset" is grand, and it makes me feel as though I must go to Onset. I hav been to Staten and Coney Islands. I shall always love the writer of such lovely books as "All in a Lifetime" and "Summer Days." Good-bye, ELDA.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 314 S. State st, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

IOWA.
M. L. D. Lansing, Madrid.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, Woodbine Cottage, Coit ave., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co.. 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau st., New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st.. Cleveland.
W. Smith, 329 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.
Emory P. Robinson, Sydney.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.
W. Wedeken, Portland, Ore.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

Please send stamp for copy of
PLAIN DEALER.
Address ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
4t*4

BIBLE OF TO-DAY.

By JOHN W. CHADWICK.

This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible.

Price, $1.50.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper. 8vo. 25 cents.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

FREETHOUGHT

IS IT

DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?

A SYMPOSIUM

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAMS,
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,	THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:

Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?

PRICE 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

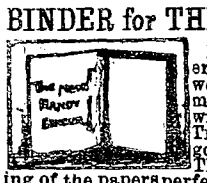
8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,



The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Charles Watts's Works.

The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of Mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.

A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.

Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.

The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.

Saints and Sinners—Which? 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Nature and the Supernatural; or, Belief and Knowledge. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3. Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.

NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.

Christianity: Defectiv and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,

OR, THE

Conflict between Reason and Superstition.

BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FESTIVAL OF ASHTAROTH.

A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews.

By A. C. MIDDLETON.

Price, ... 10 cents.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.—[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

ANTICHRIST.

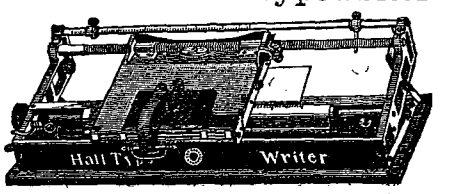
PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS.

AN ADDRESS

By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE



New York State Bar Association, at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1890.

The only Complete and Authorized Edition.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

New Model Hall Typewriter

The Best Standard Typewriter in the World. Cheap, Portable, No Ink Ribbon, Interchangeable Type in all Languages, Easiest to learn and rapid as any. Agents wanted everywhere. WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED. Address

National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. P. O. box 5159.

Send for catalog and specimens of work.

18t10

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies. For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, ... $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Every Liberal Should Read

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.

INTRODUCTION.

Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution; Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.

Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Poetry.

The Sea.

Dawn is dim on the dark, soft water,
  Soft and passionate, dark and sweet;
Love's own self was the deep sea's daughter,
  Fair and flawless from face to feet;
Hailed of all when the world was golden,
Loved of lovers whose names beholden
Thrill men's eyes as with light of olden
  Days more glad than their flight was fleet.

So they sang; but for men that love her,
  Souls that hear not her word in vain,
Earth beside her and heaven above her
  Seem but shadows that wax and wane.
Softer than sleep's are the sea's caresses,
Kinder than love's that betrays and blesses,
Blither than spring's when her flowerful tresses
  Shake forth sunlight and shine with rain.

All the strength of the waves that perish
  Swells beneath me and laughs and sighs,
Sighs for love of the life they cherish,
  Laughs to know that it lives and dies:
Dies for joy of its life, and lives
Thrilled with joy that its brief death gives,
Death whose laugh or whose breath forgives
  Change that bids it subside and rise.

—Algernon Charles Swinburne.

Why Should the Spirit of Mortal Be Proud?

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FAVORIT POEM.

Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
Like a swift-floating meteor, a fast flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
Man passeth from life to his rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak and the willow shall fade,
Be scattered around and together be laid;
And the young and the old, and the low and the high,
Shall molder to dust and together shall lie.

The infant and mother, attended and loved;
The mother that infant's affection who proved,
The husband that mother and infant who blessed,
Each, all are away to their dwellings of rest.

The maid on whose cheek, on whose brow, in whose eye,
Shone beauty and pleasure, her triumphs are by;
And the memory of those who loved her and praised,
Are alike from the minds of the living erased.

The hand of the king that the scepter hath borne;
The brow of the priest that the miter hath worn;
The eye of the sage and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost in the depths of the grave.

The peasant, whose lot was to sow and to reap;
The herdsman, who climbed with his goats up the steep;
The beggar who wandered in search for his bread,
Hav faded away like the grass that we tread.

The saint who enjoyed the communion of heaven,
The sinner who dared to remain unforgiven,
The wise and the foolish, the guilty and just,
Hav quietly mingled their bones in the dust.

So the multitude goes, like the flower or the weed,
That withers away to let others succeed;
So the multitude comes, even those we behold,
To repeat every tale that has often been told.

For we are the same our fathers hav been;
We see the same sights our fathers hav seen;
We drink the same stream and view the same sun,
And run the same course our fathers hav run.

The thoughts we are thinking our fathers would think;
From the death we are shrinking our fathers would shrink,
To the life we are clinging they also would cling;
But it speeds from us all like a bird on the wing.

They loved, but the story we cannot unfold;
They scorned, but the heart of the haughty is cold;
They grieved, but no wail from their slumber will come;
They joyed, but the tongue of their gladness is dumb.

They died; aye! they died; we things that are now,
That walk on the turf that lies over their brow,
And make in their dwellings a transient abode,
Meet the things that they met on their pilgrimage road.

Yea! hope and despondency, pleasure and pain,
We mingle together in sunshine and rain;
And the smile and the tear, the song and the dirge,
Still follow each other, like surge upon surge.

'Tis the wink of an eye, 'tis the draught of a breath,
From the blossom of health to the paleness of death,
From the gilded saloon to the bier and the shroud—
Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?

GIRARD'S WILL
AND
Girard College Theology.
AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 Cents.

BIBLE—WHENCE AND WHAT?
By R. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price, $1.

Socialism and Utilitarianism.
By JOHN STUART MILL.
Price, $1.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion.
By BENJAMIN OFFEN,
Formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York.
Price, $1.

APOCRYPHAL NEW TESTAMENT.
The Gospels, Epistles, etc., attributed to Jesus Christ and his Apostles, and not included in the New Testament.
Price, - - - - - - $1.

ASTRO-THEOLOGICAL LECTURES.
By REV. ROB'T TAYLOR.
Price, - - - - - $1.50.

THE SABBATH.
By M. FARRINGTON.
A Thorough Examination and Refutation of the Claims of the Sabbatarians.
Price, 10 cents.

RELIGION OF COMMON SENSE.
By PROF. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany.
Price, 25 cents.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.
A Historical and Critical Review. With Replies to an Objector.
By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D.
Price, 15 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.
By FRANCES WRIGHT.
Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author.
Price, 75 cents.

AN EYE-OPENER.
"Citateur, Par Pigault."
Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels.
By ZEPA.
Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World
By G. TOULMAN.
Price, - - - - - 20 cents.

ASTRONOMY AND WORSHIP OF THE ANCIENTS.
By GILBERT VALE.
Price, . . . 20 cents.

Autobiography of Robert Cooper.
Price, 15 cents.

BHAGAVAD-GITA.
A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna.
Translated by J. C. THOMPSON.
Price, $2.

BIBLE IN INDIA.
Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation.
By LOUIS JACOLLIOT.
Price, - - - - - - $2.

BIBLE IN THE BALANCE.
A Text-Book for Investigators.
By REV. J. G. FISH.
Price, ... $1.50.

BIBLE INQUIRER.
148 Striking Self-Contradictions of the Bible, and 152 Marvelous Occurrences.
By A. JACOBSON.
Price, - - 25 cents.

BIBLE MYTHS.
Their Parallels in Religions of Heathen Nations of Antiquity; Origin and Meaning. Copious Notes and Authorities. "Cyclopedia of Reference." Many Illustrations.
8vo, 600pp., . . . price, $2.50.

BIOGRAPHY OF SATAN.
Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains.
By KERSEY GRAVES.
Price, 35 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MATERIALISM AND CRIME.
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 5 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE
French Revolution
ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.
By W. S. BELL.
Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

MORTALITY OF THE SOUL.
IMMORTALITY OF ITS ELEMENTS.
By A. S. de Pellegrini.
Paper, - - 15 cents.

PHILOSOPHY of SPIRITUALISM
AND TREATMENT OF MEDIOMANIA.
By F. R. Marvin, M.D.
Cloth, . . . 50 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.
By VOLTAIRE.
Terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of theological terms.
Price, 25 cents.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY EXPOSED.
By REV. G. T. FOX, M.A.
15 cents.

PRO AND CON OF Supernatural Religion.
Have We a Supernatural, Inspired, Miraculous Religion?
By E. E. GUILD.
Paper, 20 cents; cloth, 30 cents.

PYRAMID OF GIZEH.
Ancient Egyptian Civilization and Hebrew Narrative in Genesis and Exodus.
By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D.
Price, 15 cents.

QUESTION SETTLED.
BIBLICAL and MODERN SPIRITUALISM.
By MOSES HULL.
Price, 60 cents.

Rational Communism.
THE PRESENT AND FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.
Advocates associate life and employment as a preventive of vice, crime, poverty, etc.
By A CAPITALIST.
Paper, 493pp., 50 cts.: clo., $1.

Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.
By A. C. LYALL.
Price, 10 cents.

Fruits of Philosophy.
POPULATION QUESTION.
By Dr. Knowlton. Edited by Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant.
25 cents.

TRUTH. A Poem. By E. N. Kingsley. 10 cents.

POVERTY: Its Cause and Cure.
How the Poor May Attain Comfort and Independence.
By M. G. H.
Price, . . 10 cents.

Religion of Inhumanity.
With a Glance at the Religion of Humanity.
BY FREDERIC HARRISON.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION:
The Gibraltar of the World, as Now Constituted.
By George T. Bondies.
With
Exceptions to the Character of Christ as a Gentleman.
By W. T. Purviance.
25 cents.

IMAGE BREAKER.
By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Six Lectures.
Decline of Faith.
Protestant Intolerance.
Washington an Unbeliever.
Jefferson an Unbeliever.
Paine and Wesley.
Christian Sabbath.
Each, 5 cents; bound, pap., 25 cents; per doz., 40.

SABBATH BREAKING.
By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

St. Matthew Before the Court
FOR THE CRIME OF FORGERY.
By SECULARIST.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

SEMITIC GODS AND THE BIBLE.
Including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, Bible.
By D. M. BENNETT.
(From Vol. II. "Gods and Religions.")
333pp., pap., 60 c.; clo., $1.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Brain and the Bible.
Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.
By EDGAR C. BEALL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.
Unanswerable. Price, $1.

Creed of Christendom.
Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.
By W. R. GREG.
Complete in 1 vol., 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

WHICH:
SPIRITUALISM OR CHRISTIANITY?
By MOSES HULL (Spir.) and REV. W. F. PARKER (Chris.).
Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

HEBREW MYTHOLOGY;
OR,
The Rationale of the Bible.
Holy Scriptures Treat of Natural Phenomena Only.
By MILTON WOOLEY, M.D.
8vo, 613pp., - - - - - $2.50.

Faith and Reason.
ACCOUNT OF THE
Christian and All Prominent Religions Before and Since Christ. Extract from Sacred Books of the East.
By H. R. STEVENS. Price, $1.50.

Nature's Revelations of Character.
Physiognomy Illustrated.
By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D.
Individual traits indicated by the temperaments and features.
260 woodcuts. 8vo, 650pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS.
His Character and Doctrines.
From the "Analysis of Religious Belief."
By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.
Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

REVELATIONS OF ANTICHRIST.
PROVING
Jesus Christ Did Not Exist in the Reign of Tiberius, but a Jesus was Hanged a Century before, and Peter and Paul died before the Christian Era.
Full index, 446pp., - - - $1.50.

THEOLOGY AND MYTHOLOGY.
AN
Inquiry into the Claims of Biblical Inspiration and the Supernatural Element in Religion.
By A. H. O'DONOGHUE.
Price, - - - $1.

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN.
A Radical Novel of Marked Ability.
BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.
404 pages. . Price reduced to $1.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT the DEVIL.
AND
OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.
By CHARLES BRADLAUGH.
With Portrait and Autobiography.
Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

MONKS, POPES, AND THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.
By J. ALBERGER.
376pp., $1. Soiled copies, 50 cts. and 75 cts.

POPES AND THEIR DOINGS.
ACCOUNT OF
Vicars of Christ and Vicegerents of God.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.
A Summary of the Arguments against Christianity.
Price, cloth, 50 cents.

NEW DISPENSATION.
By D. W. HULL (Spir.).
Price, - - - - - - 15 cents.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES:
A Compend of the Natural Laws of Industrial Production and Exchange.
By J. K. INGALLS.
Price, 25 cents.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GOD.
"The Jews and their God stood on the lowest plane."
Price, 10 cents.

LITERATURE OF THE INSANE.
By F. R. MARVIN.
Price, . . . 5 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Due Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No.2.Rev.Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps. 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Biblo-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell..... 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Capphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 5
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology..... 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
10 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
13 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth. By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid. for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER. tf

SPECIAL SALE
OF
WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2.50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4.50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.50; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $23.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels, $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart-shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can have their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association
Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Ingersoll Secular Society, Boston,
Meets every Sunday (from October to June) at 2:45 P.M., at Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street.

Chicago Secular Union
Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

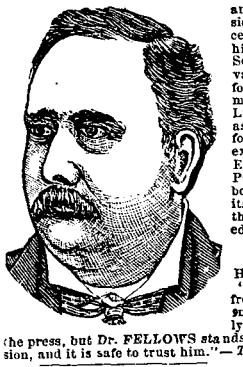
The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J.F. MACOMBER, Pres.; LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club
Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Milwaukee, Wis., Liberal Club
Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 216 Grand ave., (Fraternity Hall). Lecture followed by debates. The public cordially invited.



Brotherhood of Moralists, No. 903, Prairie City, Ia.,
Meets every Sunday in the Liberal reading-room hall at 2:30 P.M. All Liberals are cordially invited. F. V. DRAPER, Cor. Sec.

San Francisco, Cal., Freethought Society
Meets every Sunday evening at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Seats free.

Des Moines Secular Union
Holds regular meetings at Good Templar Hall, Flynn Block, S.E. corner 7th and Locust streets. Lectures followed by discussion. Friends from abroad heartily welcome.
FRANKLIN STEINER, Pres.

Portsmouth, O., Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7 P.M. in Grand Army Hall Lectures, discussions, readings, poems, music and songs. A cordial invitation is extended to all; especially to friends from abroad. Correspondence solicited. J. L. TRENTHART, President. WILL S. ANDRES, Secretary.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indescretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT.

"Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N.J.

Inquiries are frequently received asking what we know about Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, N. J., First, we know that he is a reliable gentleman of rare professional skill, who has earned success by good work. Second that he fulfills all has agreements to the letter. Third, that he has performed cures of hopeless cases that in the olden time his skill would have been called miraculous. Fourth, and last, we know him to be an honest man and a stanch Liberal.—The Better Way.

News of the Week.

A BUDDHIST congress is soon to be held in Paris, with delegates from all parts of the world. France alone has 30,000 Buddhists.

NEARLY every house in Bradshaw, Neb., was demolished by a cyclone on the 3d, and several persons were killed and many injured.

PROVIDENCE has enforced the Sunday law against all dealers.

LOVELAND, Ia., was wrecked on the 1st by a deluge sweeping down a gully above it, proceeding from a cloudburst.

FEW answer the census inquiries on disease and mortgage. Some who hav refused to answer the other questions will be prosecuted.

CAMILLE DREYFUS, the Radical deputy, has excited Paris with a pamphlet calling for immediate war for retaking Alsace Lorraine.

ON the 4th there were heavy storms and hurricanes in many states, especially Iowa and its neighbors, and in Ontario, Can. Many houses and bridges were ruined, and lives lost.

A FEW days ago a wagon party of ranchmen on the border of the Tongue River Reservation were fired at by ambushed Cheyennes, and several killed. Many settlers hav fled.

CARDINAL MANNING has written to Mr. O'Brien that "the Irish people, the most profoundly Christian on the face of the earth, hav been afflicted with every kind of sorrow for centuries." Perhaps their being so profoundly Christian is the cause of their affliction.

NEWFOUNDLAND fishermen are angry with England for non-interference with what they deem aggressions by the French.

A NORTHERN Pacific train was boarded by masked men near Salem, S. D., on the night of the 7th, and the mail car rifled.

THE Rochester Democrat and Chronicle announces the discontinuance of its Sunday edition in obedience to public sentiment as to the Sabbath.

IT is proposed to establish one-cent postage on local letters in cities having carriers, and it is believed that this rate will soon be adopted for all letters.

SECRETARY OF STATE BLAINE has sent out circulars to all consuls in Brazil requesting information in regard to the means of extending American trade in their localities.

GERMANY has constructed many railroads for the quick mobilization of her army on the French frontier, and much of her taxation arises from railways laid and operated for military rather than commercial purposes.

A NEW religious sect has risen on a reservation twenty miles southeast of Pierre, S. D. Their faith resembles the Mormon and also the old Jewish religion. The other day they made burnt offerings of calves. They call their town Moab.

LOCUSTS hav appeared in large districts of the Caucasus in vast numbers, and will entail, besides loss of crops, the expense of employing 150,000 men to destroy them, and of maintaining troops to keep these undisciplined men at work and at peace.

SECRETARY BLAINE has sent gunboats to Behring sea to exclude Canadian fishers. The English say that this peremptory action, before proper resort to international diplomatic settlement, is designed to catch the Irish-Americans. They say that British gunboats should follow.

SOME months ago capitalists interested in Lower California lands and mines conspired to throw off the authority of Mexico over that peninsula and set up an independent republic by force of arms, with a view to annexation to the United States. Arrangements were made to capture Mexican ships and garrisons, and take possession of railroad and telegraph lines. Secretary Blaine learned of the movement and vigorously suppressed it, and the public has just got the news.

INTERNATIONAL copyright has been defeated again in Congress, from causes which Max O'Rell describes thus: "There was not an educated person that did not cry out for it, not a newspaper or magazine that did not advocate it; but saloon-keepers and Western cowboys carry the day over the cultivated class." This distinguished observer adds that "public opinion has no influence" in America, and that Europeans do not "look upon America as a free nation."

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

28 Lafayette Place, N.Y.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Givs a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Gems of Thought.

POOR creatures that we are! how many ages hav passed away in acquiring a little reason.—Voltaire.

THE thousand years' perversion of our moral instincts has not been wholly redeemed by the educational influences of a short century.—Oswald.

ADDED to their reasoning faculties, Darwin endeavors to trace, especially in the higher animals, the commencement of the moral sentiment, which he connects with their social instincts. A certain sense of honor, of conscience, can scarcely be denied to the nobler and better-kept kinds of horses and dogs. And if the dog's conscience is, not quite unjustly, traced back to the stick, we may ask, in return, whether the same holds not good of the ruder sorts of man also?—Strauss.

THE animal is led and guided in its daily life neither by a blind, involuntary impulse, nor by the influence of a higher power, but by reflection, arising from comparison, judgment, and conclusions, in all of which an essential part is played by the organization and mental tendency inherited from parents. Even the process of thought through which this is done, is essentially the same as in the case of men, although the power of judgment is very much weaker, and the inherited mental tendency, owing to this lesser power of judgment, comes forward much more conspicuously than it does in man. We might therefore with just as good a right contend that man works only by the impulse of instinct, as trace the actions of animals to that source. But the one is as much a mistake as the other. Both act by understanding or reason and by what may be termed instinct, if it be desired to preserve this word as the equivalent of the inherited mental tendencies or faculties of the nervous system; the only difference is that the animal acts more by instinct, and man more by reflection.—Buchner.

WHAT wealth it is to hav such friends that we cannot think of them without elevation! And we can think of them any time and anywhere, and it costs nothing but the lofty disposition. I cannot tell you the joy your letter givs me, which will not quite cease until the latest time. Let me accompany your finest thought.—Thoreau.

THE blessing of friendship, "doubling the joys of life and lessening its sorrows," could not fail to be specially obnoxious to the moralists of a creed that seeks to lure its converts from earth to ghostland, and depreciates the natural affections of the human heart. The phil'adelphia, or "brother-love," of the New Testament, is, in fact, merely a "fellowship in Christ"—the spiritual communion and mutual indoctrination of earth-renouncing bigots. With the joys and sorrows of natural friendship their prophet evinces no sympathy whatever. "I am come," says he, "to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, . . . and a man's foes shall be those of his own household." "He who hates not his father and mother, his brothers and sisters, cannot be my disciple." "And the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son."—Professor Oswald.

ABIGAIL'S FIRST MEETING WITH DAVID.

And when Abigail saw David, she hasted and lighted off the ass, and fell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground.—1 Sam. xxv, 23.

Odds and Ends.

REV. GILMORE BUGG'S EXPERIENCE WITH A REFRACTORY CHURCH-MEMBER.

The Rev. Gilmore Bugg had nearly reached the end of his long harang when he discovered that Brother John Fry was sound asleep. But he did not continue to preach, as many white ministers would hav done; he stepped down from the pulpit and approaching the sleeper, said:

"Wharfo dis snorin' in de sanctified synygog o' de Lawd?"

Mr. Fry looked up with a start, and rubbing his eyes, replied:

"Anybody 'sturbin' de worship o' de ercasion, bruder?"

"Yas, yo'se'f is a doin' o' dat fack."

"Who, me?"

"Yas, you."

"I doan see how dat come."

"I does. It comes from you goin' ter sleep, dat's how it come."

"Look yere, you ain't cusin' me o' sleepin' in de house o' de Lawd, is you?"

"Now, you look yere," said the preacher, "doan come er makin' o' er mouf, fur didn' I see you ersleep—see you wid deze eyes dat de Lawd dun gib me fur sich pupposes?"

"What, you stan' dar an' try ter tell dis yere congergation dat you seed me ersleep?"

"Come, dar ain't no use in no sich talk ez dis yere," said the preacher. "You wuz fas' ersleep an' dar ain't no use'n denyin' de fack; an' I wants ter gib you de procklermation right yere dat I ain't called on by de sperit o' de truth an' de bride dat say come ter preach ter no sleepin' sinners."

"Look yere, ole pusson," said Mr. Fry, getting up, and through habit dusting off the seat of his trousers, "who you callin' er sinner? I mout'er dozed off ter sleep—an' Peter done dat—but I doan want you ter come roun' yere a gittin' in the habit o' callin' me a sinner, fur you mout git your mouf set dat ter way, an' it would be sorter 'barrassin' ter you one dese days. Yere me?"

"Neber mine what I yeres, an' neber mine what I harkens ter. I yered you er snorin' ober yere, an' er man doan' snore lessen he asleep, an' er man doan' sleep in church lessen he is er sinner. Yere me?"

"Now, yere," said Mr. Fry, "I has been strivin' to git erlong wid dis congergation widout no trouble, but yere you comes erlong an' calls me er sinner."

"Wall, ef you wan't er sinner you wouldn't hafter strive ter get erlong in de house o' de Lawd. De Christian gits erlong all right in de house o' de Lawd widout puttin' hisse'f ter so much trouble."

"Bruder Bugg, you sorter put it on me in argyment right dar, an' I gibs you credit fur it, I does, sah, but we sometimes 'mires er man's argyment when we knows dat de truth ain't one o' his artickles o' furniture."

"Does you mean ter say, sah, dat I ain't furnished wid de truf?"

"'Strue it any way dat's de handiest; jes any way dat suits you de bes'."

During this time the congregation had sat in silence. It was evident that the controversy was more interesting than the sermon had been, for other brothers who had been inclined to sleep were wide awake now. The preacher turned to his congregation and said:

"Bruders, er certain erfair is erbout to come ter er head in yo' presence dis ebenin'. Dis bruder," pointing at Mr. Fry, "jest becaze he wa'nt called ter preach, has allus had er sort o' jealousness o' me. Now dat ain't my fault, but de fault o' de sperit dat called me."

"De sperits dat called you would make er man pretty blame drunk," Mr. Fry broke in. "'Bout fo' fingers o' dem sorter sperits would take de har offen er bench laig dog, an' I doan know o' nuthin' dat fits tighter den er bench laig dog's ha'r."

"Bredrin," said the preacher, "doan you see how he tryin' ter 'sult me right yere? Tryin' ter 'sult me an' he knows dat he dun borrid $10 frum me las' week."

Old Fry laughed with that heavy jolt so characteristic of a negro's sarcasm. "Dun lent me $10, is yer? Lissun at dot, bruders. Er preacher dun lent er man $10. Did you ever year o'er preacher befo' dat went erbout lendin' money? Did you eber know er nigger preacher ter stop borrin' long ernuff ter lend any?"

"This has went fer enuff," the preacher exclaimed. "I wa'nt called yere ter be 'sulted by dis haug stealer."

"Ah, hah!" Fry grunted, "er haug stealer is I? Wall, ef you'll jest send back de forty pounds o' meat you got at my house de uder day, I'll tell you who I stole it frum. I'll do dis case de man is er enemy o' mine."

"Bruders," the preacher remarked when, with a great effort, he had calmed himself, "dis is de 'sultinist pusson I eber seed, an' I'd like ter know whut we is gwine ter do wid him."

"Dat ain' no question ter put to us," answered a bow-legged old fellow who was yearning for a fight. "Jes settle it wid him right yere, sah."

"I would, but I doan know how."

"Whup him, sah; dat's de way. Ole Steve dat de Lawd called ter preach fur us once woulder dun whupped him long fo' now."

"I uster be er gre't fighter befo' de sperit called me," the preacher responded, glancing uneasily at Mr. Fry's powerful arms, "but I had done hoped dat de Lawd wa'nt gwine let me fight no mo. Mr. Fry."

"Dat's my name, sah."

"Is you gwine pollygise?"

"Whut fur?"

"Fur 'sultin' me."

"Dar's only one way dat I eber does pollygise ter er man."

"An' whut way is dat, Mr. Fry?"

"It's ter fling him on de groun' an' pollygise ez I he'ps him up. Dat way suit you?"

The preacher reflected a moment and thus answered: "Ef no uder way will do, sah, we'll try dat."

"Any particular holt you want?" Fry asked.

"No, jes take er holt o' me in yo' own way an' fling me ter suit yose'f. All I'se atter is de 'pology made in de presence o' de congregation."

They went outside. Fry seized the preacher and gave him an awful slam against the ground, and, as he bent over the parson, began to mutter an apology, but the preacher rose with a razor in his hand. He had time to make but two swipes. One removed Mr. Fry's ear, and the other took off his nose.

"Brederen," said the preacher, as he wiped his razor, "we'll now go back an' 'lissen ter de rest o' dat interesting sermon."

They went in and there was not one among them who failed to lend an attentiv ear, thinking, of course, of an ear that lay outside among the dry leaves.—Opie P. Read.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 17. No. 25. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. { New York, Saturday, June 21, 1890. } 28 LAFAYETTE PL. } $3.00 per year.

WHAT PRIESTCRAFT DID FOR MEXICO.

Notes and Clippings.

In New Zealand a Mormon convention has just closed its sittings, at which it was officially reported that there are three thousand Mormons in that colony, and that five hundred converts were made during the past year.

According to the latest report of the minister of education, there are forty thousand primary schools in Russia. Twenty-two thousand are public schools under the authority of the ministers of education, and eighteen thousand are parish schools under the management of the "Holy Synod." Religious instruction is given in the secular schools by clergymen, who hav to render an account of their doings to the government.

Mr. Bradlaugh, it appears, has been fishing, and caught some good health as well as fish. He says in the National Reformer: "Some folks like to know the results of my week's holiday on the Clyde lochs. First, I hav to report cheeks, nose, and hands all sunburnt and blistered; and next a catch of 338 fish weighing in all 223 pounds; last, and most important, health certainly better. On the whole I think my old self is coming back again, and I thank the many kindly inquirers."

Citizen George Francis Train, since his record-breaking trip around the world, has quietly settled down on the shores of Puget sound, near Tacoma. He is communing with the birds, cultivating psychic force, and breathing pure air. He livs alone, never goes to Tacoma, which is only three miles distant, and cooks his cocoa on a $3 stove. He has his books and manuscripts, and as he wanders through the primeval forest his magnificent crop of white hair is occasionally anointed by the falling gum from the lofty pines. His quiet retreat is now and again broken in upon by delegations of school-children who come to sit at the feet of the philosopher.

The Irish Catholic, Dublin, states that the pope, in replying to the congratulations of visitors at the Vatican, expressed himself as strongly of the belief that great punishment was impending on society for its disregard of and indifference to the church. "The Lord," he said, "will come no longer with a sweet and peaceful face, but with an angry one to strike and purify his church. I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I feel in my heart sorrowful presentiments. A sea of evil is about to beat against the rock on which the church is founded, and will leave nothing to be seen on the horizon but the threat of the anger of God. Prayer will not suffice to appease the almighty." The pope probably thinks that a crusade to restore his temporal power, or an increase in financial gifts to himself, would be about what the Lord wants.

On September 1st the new law relating to trial jurors in the city of New York goes into effect. It was approved by Governor Hill on June 5th, and adds to the list of those relieved from the jury service hereafter the following: "A professor or teacher in a college, academy, or public school, not following any other calling, or an editor, editorial writer, or reporter of a daily newspaper, regularly employed as such and not following any other vocation." This does not relieve the editors of weekly journals, and The Truth Seeker Editor expects to spend two weeks of every year hanging around the courts, parting with his substance to horse railroads and receiving about two dollars for his two weeks' service to his country. The editors and reporters of daily journals ought not to hav been so selfish when getting their bill passed.

This is the way the Catholic Review feels: "In Boston the public schools hav all at once become openly Protestant. The school histories, against which Judge Fallon fought so strenuously, were adopted by the board almost to a man. The minority report against them had only two supporters. The significance of this incident is delightful to Catholics. One-half Boston is Catholic, yet the board of education has the audacity to introduce Protestant text-books into schools chiefly supported by Catholic taxpayers. The histories against whose introduction Judge Fallon struggled are Protestant histories, designed to keep alive the lying Protestant tradition, and to make Catholic children ashamed of their faith. The public schools of Boston, with or without these histories, are Protestant, and will remain so a few more decades. They are not the place for Catholic children. But Boston Catholics hav been slow or unwilling to admit the fact, and as a consequence their faith has suffered more than they know. The incident of the histories will do much for them. We pray that the present Boston board of education may long preserve its present spirit, nail its flag to the mast as it were, and so behave in the future that within ten years their schools will hold no Catholic child save those whose parents hav always secretly grieved over the sad fate which made them Catholics."

An editorial writer signing himself the "Genial Observer" says in the London Herald: "I hope the severe correspondent who has written to the Sunday editor protesting against the publication of Sunday papers, except such as are devoted to religious labors and Sunday anecdotes, will not think the 'Genial Observer' profane in referring to the possibilities of the future of the London sandwich men, more especially in regard to St. Peter's reception of such company. In case he should do so I will now lift from the columns of one of those religious papers a little story: The bishop was examining for holy orders a candidate who was more deficient in theology than brains. Among other questions the bishop asked him, 'If you were in company with persons who impugned the doctrin of the holy trinity, how would you defend it?' 'My Lord, I feel hurt by your supposing I keep such company.' 'If, however, you were accidentally to find yourself in the company of Unitarians, and they were to attack you, what course would you pursue?' 'Can you doubt, my lord, what I should do? I should, of course, leave the room instantly.' And I commend to that anonymous postcarder, who pesters the Herald with texts and profane postcard prayers for the publisher's salvation, to take the hint. The Herald does not desire to print a single copy more than it can sell nor to hav among its subscribers one reader who does not feel that he can be on friendly terms, at least in an epistolary way, with its directors."

Communications.

Is It True That the Catholic Church Is the Enemy of Progress?

If my friend in Ohio had carefully read the paper through which he sent to me, he would hav found a sufficient refutation to the article to which he called my attention. It appears from the pope's late encyclical that the church is indifferent to the form of government of any nation. It only asks to hav its own way. There is the rub. Let the church manage the schools and teach children just enough to be gulled by the priesthood, own all the land that it wants, build as many costly churches as it pleases and hav somebody else pay the taxes, control the press and the speech and thoughts of the people, and then it is indifferent about the government.

Church Progress, commenting upon the holy father's letter, says: "When the state encroaches upon the domain of religion it is the duty of the church, enjoined by God, to make resistance." Here is the whole thing in a nutshell. Before I am through it will be made to appear that free schools, free books, free press, free speech, and free thought all "encroach upon the domain of religion," and that the church is "enjoined by God" to resist them. Just let the church hav her own way in everything, and then she will be quiet and find no fault with the government. Is not that a grand element to cherish in this country?

The same paper advises the Catholics at the forthcoming elections of the German Reichstag to "support the candidate who is least hostil to the church."

This shows that the Catholic element cares nothing for the welfare of the state. That it is always wielded solid for the interest of the church, and the church is under the influence of the one-man power, and that man a tyrant in a foreign land.

It is plain that the one-man power is incompatible with the principles of republicanism. How long will the American people continue to cherish an element which in the very nature of things is hostil to the government they hav adopted? Whenever an act of Congress conflicts with a dictate of the pontiff, according to the principles which he himself has declared, every Catholic will obey the foreign mandate, and set the act of Congress at naught whenever it is policy to do so.

In the day of Bishop Hughes this question was squarely put to him: "If the pope should interdict an article which you had prepared and believed to be right, would you then dare to publish it?" The answer was quick and emphatic, "No."

If Bishop Hughes dare not disobey the pope, how would it be with the common herd? Could Bishop Hughes be a good American citizen when he was under the control of a foreign power? Can a man serve two masters?

Our government rests upon the broad principles of equality. The vote of the humblest individual has as much weight as that of the greatest man in the nation. Catholicism rests upon the idea that all are subject to the will of one man.

The political prophets declared that slavery and freedom could not exist together—that the country must be all slave or all free. Neither can a free government, resting upon the equality of the people, ever be harmonized with the principle that all owe allegiance to, and are subject to, one head.

How will it fare with the American idea in this country when the Catholics equal us in numbers? And if their numbers increase in proportion to ours as they hav for the last fifty years, how long before that day will arrive? These are grave questions which the American people sooner or later will be called to solve. Every thoughtful American ought to be asking himself, "What is to be done with the Catholic element?"

I hav settled one principle in my own mind. No Catholic should ever be naturalized or allowed to vote in this country. For whatever he may say or swear to, he will always be true to the pope and the church. I would never debar a man from the rights of citizenship who is in love with our institutions, and will in good faith defend and support the government. But I would distinctly draw the line when a man proposes to wield the electiv franchise and in principle ignores the duties and obligations which citizenship implies and imposes. What would be thought of the idea of conferring the rights of citizenship upon an indefinit number of Russians if it were known that every one, notwithstanding his oath of allegiance to this government, was still in love with the despotic power of Russia, and all the time true to the interests of the czar?

If my friend in Ohio had taken extracts from other articles in Church Progress, he would in a great measure hav not only shown the secret working of the church, but would hav found a sufficient answer to the lying pretenses of the particular article referred to.

This paper claims that a "Catholic school can only be fit for a Catholic child," which means that a Catholic school is the only one fit for any child. And before I get through it will be made to appear that Catholics tolerate no other where they hav the power.

Church Progress urges the "Catholic press everywhere to do all in its power to inculcate Catholic doctrin." Had the church the power in this country, the Catholic press would be the only one tolerated. This paper further states that "free books in the public schools is the first step in Socialism;" in other words, the first step out of Catholicism. I would not giv a fig for the freedom of the mind where there is no freedom of schools, no freedom of books, no freedom of the press. These Catholic claims are un-American, and if carried to their legitimate results, will subvert the free institutions of the country.

In an article on the heresy of John Huss, Church Progress says: "The various codes of the times in which these sentences were pronounced looked upon heresy not only as an offense religiously, but as a capital offense civilly."

And in these times was not the state entirely held in the clutches of the church? Was not the will of the church the will of the state? In all times and in all countries where the church has had the power it has controled the state. And as the church cannot err, it cannot change, and so it must follow that if the church ever gets the power in this country, an offense against the church will be an offense against the state. Again we quote:

> In the church and state a heretic was considered a most dangerous enemy.

Church Progress claims that John Huss was burnt by the state, but was his offense against the state? Not at all. His offense was against the church. He had the same right to express and promulgate his opinion that the pope had to express and promulgate his. The equality of man is a doctrin which never can be indorsed by the church, but it is the very foundation of a free government. Again: "It is only since the peace of Westphalia that the civil governments hav ceased to consider heresy as a capital crime. Ecclesiastically its nature and the mode of procedure in regard to it are the same." Here is expressed in unmistakable language from an undoubted Catholic source just what I hav claimed—that the church is just as ready to burn a heretic as it ever was—just as ready to control the state as it was before the peace of Westphalia, when it controled not only the fortunes but the lives of its subjects. To my certain knowledge the church already levies taxes on its subjects and compels them to pay, and indirectly it lays taxes on the community and compels even outsiders to pay.

The crime of John Huss was teaching doctrins which the church did not approve, and the church burnt him, and this shows how it deals with free thought and free speech. And according to Church Progress, it has the right to burn such books as it does not like as well.

> The council turned him [Huss] over to the secular power, expressing the time-honored request that the unfortunate man's life be spared.

This language was intended to cover up hypocrisy and deceit, if not a downright lie. At the time Huss was burnt, 1415, no man could hold an office who was not a Catholic. It was simply one body of Catholics handing a man over to another body of Catholics, well knowing that he would be murdered when they did so.

> In no instance in her [the church's] history, in which she has so acted, is there a case in which any government would not be found, as the protector of religious liberty, to come to her deliverance.

Here is religious liberty with a vengeance. Here we get an idea of the construction that the church puts upon religious liberty. Liberty to think as ecclesiastics dictate, and liberty to be racked or burnt if you do not. Just such liberty as the vilest despot on earth givs to his subjects, but never the liberty of being your own judge of what is right and wrong; never the liberty of books or the press or speech or thought. Never the liberty of choosing your own rulers or calling them to account. In short, the principles of Roman Catholicism are as antagonistic to the principles of republicanism as death is to life. Some day the American people will find that they hav been cherishing a serpent which will sting them to death. As the power of the church strengthens the love of republican principles will weaken. When Catholicism obtains the mastery in this country, as it certainly will, the world will hear the death knell of American liberty. Listen:

> In those days heresy was considered treason against the state and a capital offense. Ecclesiastically its nature and the mode of procedure in regard to it is still the same.

Has the church reformed? If so, when did she bring forth fruit meet for repentance? This ought to convince every thinking person that the Catholic church is the same persecuting, tyrannical hog that she always has been, and that she will return to her murderous old tricks whenever she can get the power.

After stating flatly that the "procedure of the church is ever the same," the author of the Huss article doubles back on his own statement and says:

> That John Huss was burnt at the stake was not her [the church's] responsibility.

This proves that Catholics will lie for the church when it is their interest to do so. Those who liv to see the triumph of the Catholic church will see our free institutions involved in ruin.

One quotation more will close the Huss article:

> Heretics were looked upon as enemies of the state.

Jefferson, Washington, Adams, Franklin, and all the great and good men that the country has ever produced, would hav been "looked upon as enemies of the state," and condemned to death.

The spirit of Catholicism and of republicanism will ever hav divergent aims and purposes. As the one triumphs the other must decline. The noonday of the power of the church was the midnight of mental darkness and of poverty and savagery. It is for the American people to decide between the two.

While it was the intention of the founders of the government to giv free toleration to every system of religion, and to interfere with none, no system of religion must be allowed to interfere with the government if our liberties are to be preserved.

Now I propose to show, first that a free government never did and never can exist under Catholic rule, and second, that unless there is something done, in less than one hundred years Catholicism will put out the fires of liberty in this country.

One pope has said: "America is the hope of Rome." Gregory XVI. said: "The salvation of the church will come from America."

Father Hecker said: "The man is living to-day who will see a majority of the people of the American continent Roman Catholic." And further: "There is to be a state religion in this country and that religion is to be Roman Catholic." Cardinal Manning declares that the pope is the supreme judge of what is right and wrong, and again that "it is necessary for every human being to be subject to the Roman pontiff."

Bishop Gilman said: "God is above man and the church above the state." Cardinal McCloskey said: "Catholics are as strongly devoted to the temporal power of the holy father in this country [the United States] as in any part of the world, and if it should be necessary to prove it by acts they are ready to do so."

Hon. R. W. Thompson says: "Catholics are inimical to the government and political institutions of the country, and their oath of allegiance is worth no more than the paper upon which it is written. . . . Every ecclesiastic has to swear political as well as religious allegiance to the pope."

The pope declares that "ecclesiastics hav a right to immunity from the civil law," and again, "In case of conflict between the ecclesiastical and civil powers, the ecclesiastical ought to prevail."

In 1864 the pope anathematized all who "maintain the liberty of the press, and all advocates of the liberty of speech."

An encyclical says: "Public schools should be under the control of the Romish church, and should not be subject to the civil power, nor made to conform to the opinions of the age."

The Rambler, a Catholic paper, says: "No man has a right to choose his religion. No one, but an Atheist, can uphold the principles of religious liberty."

Says the Boston Pilot: "There can be no religion without an inquisition for the promotion of the true faith."

The archbishop of St. Louis said: "Heresy and unbelief are crimes, and in Catholic countries are punished like other crimes."

Bishop O'Connor declared that "religious liberty is merely endured until the opposit can be carried into effect without peril to the Catholic world."

An encyclical of 1864 anathematizes "those who assert the liberty of conscience and all such as maintain that the church may not use force."

In 1854, the same pope said: "The absurd doctrins in defense of liberty of conscience are a pestilential error." Every church ecclesiastic takes an oath of allegiance to the pope to "persecute and oppose heretics, schismatics, and rebels to the pope and his successors, to his utmost."

Now, these quotations from the most undoubted Catholic authorities show, without comment, that whenever the Catholics gain the ascendency in this country the sun of our liberty is set. The most stupid must understand that Catholics will carry out these measures whenever and wherever they hav the power, and that a free government is an utter impossibility where these measures prevail.

It remains only to show that the day of doom is not as far distant as some may imagin.

The Catholic church has always understood the power of wealth. And no church organization knows better how to accumulate it, or use it to the best advantage.

According to Father Hecker, the aggregate wealth of the church in this country was in 1850 $9,000 000. In 1860 it had increased to $26,000,000; in 1870 to $60,000,000. According to this increase what will be the wealth of the church fifty years from now?

In a little more than ten years next preceding the year 1880, the city of New York gave the church in real estate $3,500,000, and in money $5,827,471—an aggregate of more than $9,000,000. If we could get at the secret of these bequests it would probably be found that they were given for Catholic votes.

Other cities hav given proportionate amounts. These phenomenal gifts will be increased as the church gains power. There are thousands of people who do not see that these vast accumulations of wealth are the first step in usurping the power of the state.

From this increase of wealth let us turn to the increase of numbers.

In 1800 the Catholics numbered 100,000. In eighty-four years they had increased to 6,628,176. In 1800 there was 1 Catholic to 53 of the whole population. In 1850, 1 to every 14 3. In 1870, 1 to every 8 3. In 1880, 1 to every 7.7.

In thirty years prior to 1850 the population increased 116 per cent; the Catholic population, 294 per cent. Catholics never allow heretics to be buried in consecrated ground. With this increase of wealth and population, how long will it be before we shall be begging of our Catholic masters the poor privilege of being buried in the country of Washington and Jefferson?

Every reflecting mind must see that these principles, as laid down by the highest dignitaries in the church, are subversiv of every principle of free government, and that when we giv them full power with ourselvs we let a wolf into the door that will devour the children of liberty.

And now I want to ask why we should confer citizenship upon Catholics who owe allegiance to a despot in a foreign country any more than we should confer citizenship upon those who owe allegiance to the czar of Russia. Let everyone reflect that the pope of Rome can command every Catholic vote in this country. They regard him as holy, supreme, and verily believe that the will of the pope is the will of God. He exercises a censorship over the books which may be read, the papers which may be published. He directs the thoughts and consciences of men, and virtually controls all they possess. He directs the manner of conducting the schools, virtually selects the teachers, and wields the power of a despot. Many hav realized the barbarous severity of the Comstock law, but with Romanism triumphant in this country nothing would be allowed to pass through the mails which the church does not approve.

Now the humblest individual may publicly tell what he thinks of any law, he may criticise any act of the president—in short, according to the genius of our government, he is the real sovereign. But nobody must criticise the pope or his religion. He is perfect, and the Catholic religion was instituted by God himself. It will be a sorry day when we hav a religion which is not only above the government, but which shall constitute the government, and which no one shall be allowed to criticise.

Would it not spread alarm if it were known that the next presidential term would find a Catholic in the presidential chair, and a majority of Catholics in the Senate and House of Representativs?

When that day comes, as it surely will, and the people begin to be taxed to support Catholic schools, and to build churches and cathedrals, they will begin to wonder how it happened that they were caught napping while the enemy passed the outer guard and took possession of the country.

To be forewarned is to be forearmed. When a storm is gathering is it not wisdom to make preparation for it if in our power to do so?

The battle is already joined in regard to the common schools, and through strategy and the duplicity of political file leaders they will carry one point after another, always assailing the weakest point, until there will be nothing left which a freeman will feel proud of.

To-day we can say "thus far and no farther;" tomorrow we may be driven to the wall by an enemy who acknowledges no known rule of civilized warfare. If we allow the enemy to bind us hand and foot we may blame ourselvs for the chains which we are compelled to wear.

JOHN PECK.

The True Democracy.

It is said, "A government is a necessary evil;" but I deem a righteous one a blessing and hold that some form of government is necessary and inevitable. We are controled by the same laws of causation that govern the other forms of so-called matter, and these laws, their advantages and penalties, are immutable; so must man always be governed to some extent by his ever changing environment, which can never become perfectly adapted to his progressiv needs. A natural government is an arbitrary one, and were we without a civil law we should experience the injustice and confusion incidental to the general orders of nature, who creates myriads of each species that must perish in infancy, and other myriads that must survive this stage to find life is a state of free conflict in which each individual may get along as he can, and liv as long as he can on those that must perish in his behalf.

This assures the survival; therefore the reproduction of the more selfish, politic, and powerful of every species, and these are commonly called "the fittest." It is stated as an axiom, in the Declaration of Independence, that all persons are created equal. This, obviously, is an error. Congenital differences oft-times render men ingenious or idiotic, sane or insane, moral or immoral, well formed or deformed, healthy or invalid, useful or otherwise. These conditions are as inequitable as they are dissimilar; it is beyond the power of an alleged providence to equalize them; but it is man's province to harmonize them as much as possible, and to maintain the rights of all so far as he can control them. Nature bestows on men their various characters and endows them with unequal and diversified abilities, but justice acknowledges their equal rights. I consider it an axiom that each individual is entitled equitably to the condition life, which is forced unconditionally on all, and to the greatest common facilities for preserving, sustaining, and enjoying it. Men are also entitled to exercise the fullest personal liberty that can be shared in common, and this demands that "the liberties of one individual must cease where another's rights begin" and the liberties of each individual shall be sustained so long as these do not conflict with the rights of others. Moreover, it is the right of every individual to be perfectly adapted to his environment; to be born so and to liv so. I conclude that all animals, including man, hav the same natural rights for the same general reasons.

> The sum is this, if man's convenience, health,
> Or safety interfere, his rights and claims
> Are paramount and must extinguish theirs,
> Else they are all—the meanest things that are—
> As free to liv and to enjoy that life
> As God [nature] was free to form them at the first.
> —Cowper.

We cannot, in all cases, compensate for the injustice of nature, nor can we hope that anyone born in this age will inherit the perfect organism which should be his by right; but man may yet subvert the usual order of nature sufficiently to at least treat the members of his own species with justice—that he will do so is our hope. The natural physical government which we must submit to is a prototype of the civil moral one that might be founded on the equal rights of men, "derive its just powers from the consent of the governed," be a mutual government in every respect, and become eventually a nominal one. Let us consider morality. It is moral to refrain from evil and it is righteous to do good. I assume that on the whole happiness is the greatest good and misery the greatest evil. I hold that each of these factors is the negation of the other, the inverse of that other, and mathematically its reciprocal. I also believe that it is the duty of every person to do all he can to promote the happiness of his own species and that the rightful pleasure of one individual is as great a desideratum as that of any other one; that the greatest desideratum is to protect the rights of each individual and the "next greatest" one is to do the most good to the largest number. All things are good to the extent they promote happiness and evil in the degree that they oppose it. I know of nothing that is wholly good or entirely evil. Moreover, an action may bring pleasure to one and sorrow to another irrespectiv of merit or equity. In this sense happiness is truly a commodity, and like the money on which it is so largely dependent it may be earned, inherited, begged, borrowed, stolen, or obtained otherwise. Money is a transferable receipt for labor performed; a certificate of value created; an exchangeable commodity of fluctuating value. Let us assume it has a constant value and use the "almighty dollar" as the symbol of a system of morality that may be compared to what the world considers financial equity, and be illustrated best by a pecuniary comparison. Actions may be properly classed in three general divisions. 1. Let us consider such actions as solely affect the doer (if there be such actions). These must be good if they bring him more pleasure than sorrow, and evil if otherwise. Then he who does an act that solely affects himself and produces on the whole three times as much sorrow as pleasure, is like a person who givs one dollar for twenty-five cents, and cheats himself to the extent of seventy-five cents; but if the act in question produces sorrow and givs him no pleasure, he is like one who throws a dollar away; and on the other hand if the act brings him three times as much happiness as displeasure, he is like one who has obtained the value of one dollar for twenty-five cents; and if it occasions him no inconvenience he is like a New Yorker that has found a dollar and is that much ahead; assuredly. One who saves in youth that he may invest in manhood, or toils in manhood to provide for age, or practices denial in anticipation of a later indulgence, is like a person who invests his money with judgment, fully comprehending the attendant probabilities and uncertainty. The adage that a high rate of interest means very poor security, is one that those who sacrifice this life to futurity by investing their legitimate pleasures in the "wild-cat securities" of religion, would do well to remember.

2. There is a class of acts that are not supposed to affect the doer, but are thought to help or injure others. To diminish the rightful happiness of another is wrong and as unjust as it is to rob him of money, for the latter is only useful to the extent it promotes the ends of pleasure; therefore he whose action solely affects another and does that other three times as much harm as good, is like one who steals the value of $1 and returns twenty-five cents; but if the act produces no pleasure he returns nothing, and he is in either case like one who has feloniously deprived another of something that will not benefit himself. On the other hand, if the deed does not affect the doer and it benefits another the former may be likened to a benevolent financier who suggests a profitable investment for the funds of another. His advice is the result of financial knowledge that he has acquired in his own behalf, its value is determined by the loss and gain resulting from the investment, and if there be no loss, the act involved is one hundred per cent good, or wholly so.

3. There is a class of deeds which affect the happiness of both the doer and others. Some doubtlessly will insist that all acts are of this description, but I hav admitted the possibility of two other classes of deeds, which I hav considered with special reference to the rights of man, and disposed of the rights of all the other species by a poetical quotation that appears elsewhere in this article. These actions of the third class which promote the happiness of both parties and increase the sorrow of no one, are wholly good.

These deeds may be compared to the action of a person who, lacking sufficient money to make a desirable investment, borrows the remainder and invests the whole successfully to the advantage of all concerned; but if the supposed investment is a failure that brings pleasure to no one, the action involved is wholly evil. He who incommodes himself to oblige another promotes the pleasure of the latter at the expense of his own enjoyment, if the deed is a sacrifice, and if it be so the act is neither good nor evil, for it does not increase happiness nor diminish it.

The action is simply charitable, and charity is an equitable distribution of good in a manner optional to the beneficiary, whose personal happiness is of the same importance as is that of the one he benefits.

I include with charity all voluntary gifts and benefits which involve a sacrifice to the giver, and I exclude from it such gifts and benefits as afford the donor as much pleasure as he could obtain otherwise from the expenditure of the same amount of labor, money, or value. All acts (save those of charity and necessity) are wrong if they promote the happiness of any person (or of all individuals) at the expense of the rightful pleasure of any other individual. This is true whatever be the ratios of the good and evil involved, and whatever be the attendant circumstances.

If an action benefits another in the same degree that it injures his victim, the former is like one who having stolen money from the latter spends it at par; if it benefits him more than it injures his victim, the former may be said to spend the money to a better advantage than the owner could, but if it benefits him less than it injures the latter, he does not spend it so well; and if it benefits a third party, it is like a stolen fund spent in charity. The transgressor is a thief in any case. If he accomplishes his purpose by force he is like a robber, if by deception he is a fraud, and this is true whether he wrongs an accomplice or a stranger. The comparisons I hav made are presented as illustrations, not as arguments. They are designed to interest the "financial" mind (which is very much the only one). They may be recapitulated in a single sentence that will state their moral. It is right to promote the rights of man and it is wrong to oppose them; to violate them is crime; to observe them is morality. I class all actions as good or bad according to their sequences, irrespectiv of the motivs that inspire them. Motivs must practically be nothing, because effects are practically everything; but like motivs, nevertheless, generally result in like effects. Good motivs are inspired by conscientiousness, a blind impulse that impels the individual to do what he believes is right. The most atrocious crimes recorded in history were committed under the influence of this faculty, by persons who believed they were saving souls and appeasing the gods. To many "there is nothing so certain as uncertainty." These seem to attribute all phenomena to the operation of supernatural chance. They speak of the "laws of chance" (which hav a practical value), but they ascribe no phenomena to the inevitable operation of the law of causation. The farmer, the seaman, and the criminal are dependent on agencies they cannot control; so they trust their luck and take their chances, hoping that their gods will favor them, and can rarely be convinced that like causes invariably produce like effects. This observation applies to people in general, but in a lesser degree. A really intelligent New Yorker once said to me that he had seen a foundryman take molten iron in his hand and throw it away. I asked him if he did likewise. He replied that he was not a fool and that his clothing was responsible for any appearance to the contrary. He said he supposed if I had done so, it would hav been just my luck to get burnt, but the foundryman happened to escape injury and this is ascribable to his good luck. In this case, said he, the same cause would hav produced very different effects.

I tried to explain to him that were his hands as tough as those of the foundryman, he could perform the same feat the latter did by taking the same precautions in preparing his hand—by dipping it in water, anointing it with storax, or protecting it otherwise. He declined to listen to me, saying he knew all that I could teach him. I giv this incident in my own words, as an illustration of a prevalent opinion. One who can trace the operations of causation may foretell the future. It is not impossible that all past causes are involved to some extent in each effect, and that the latter is a factor to the same degree in all effects to follow. I giv this conjecture for what it is worth. Be it as it may, the relations of general phenomena are so intricate that although we may decide on a standard of good, we cannot determin in all cases what acts will promote this end. Therefore there will be differences of opinion concerning these actions so long as men differ at all, and I propose that each individual ought to judge for himself such acts as primarily affect himself and secondarily affect society; and that the majority should decide those acts that primarily affect society and secondarily affect the individual. My remedy for such acts as injure the doer by his consent—the acts of charity excepted—is to educate him so far as practicable, that he may see his own errors and avoid those of others. I do not, however, advocate the general education of those who are incorrigibly vicious.

Education is the acquirement of knowledge, and knowledge is power. Power is as good or bad as the mind which directs it; accidents excepted. A learned rascal can do more harm than an ignorant one; and the more his moral education exceeds his mental and physical education, the better.

A government is needed to fulfill the following purposes: 1. To protect the liberties of each individual to the extent that these do not conflict with the rights of another one; or, in other words, to restrain the liberties of anyone when these do conflict with the rights of another. 2. To sustain the sovereignty of the individual—the feeble-minded excepted—regarding those actions which affect himself directly and others indirectly, to sustain the sovereignty of the minority in those matters that mainly affect its peculiar interests, and to sustain the sovereignty of the majority in regulating those affairs that affect humanity directly and the individual indirectly. This restrains aggression but it guarantees to every individual the greatest liberty that can be enjoyed by each. 3. A government is needed to reform the erring. Let it protect these persons, whose characters, like those of others, are "the results of inherited temperaments and circumstances." Let them be reformed by kindness, and conceded every right and granted every liberty that is consistent with the welfare of society. 4. To facilitate the voluntary coöperation of its constituents for purposes of production, employment, education, and defense against a common enemy. Such a government must be the government of the individual by the individual in his personal issues, the government of the minority by itself in its peculiar issues, and the government of all by the majority in those issues that affect humanity at large.

This is a true democracy. Its benefits should be free to all. It is good because it restrains license; it is better because it sustains liberty; it is best because it does not govern. A law that forbids me to lift a ton would not govern me nor restrict my liberties, for obvious reasons. The system I hav suggested cannot govern those who concede to others the rights they are entitled to themselvs; and it becomes obsolete to all as fast as its restraints can be dispensed with. It is consistent with Nationalism, Socialism, Anarchy, Prohibition, Equal Rights, and labor. It is a platform on which all these may unite their strength and discard their differences. What can you do to promote this end? I can do nothing.

JULIAN MARCELLAS.

Mr. Harman's Monthly Letter.

KANSAS PENITENTIARY, FIFTH DIVISION, CELL NO. 27,
SUNDAY, JUNE 1, 1890.

DEAR FRIENDS, RELATIVS, FELLOW-WORKERS, AND READERS ALL: My first month of convict life having expired I am permitted to send you another friendly greeting. I am very glad to be able to report myself well and in usual spirits. That is to say, my health is no worse than it has been for several months past. I am glad to be able to say that I hav found my surroundings thus far less annoying and more endurable than I expected to find them. For two weeks or more I hav been employed in the kitchen—officer's kitchen. My work there is not hard, and the fare better adapted to the wants of chronic dyspepsia. My chief cause of mental worry now is the knowledge of the fact that my friends and relativs are worrying about me. One writes: "Is there anything I can do for you. I hav supposed that owing to your age and infirmities you would not be put to hard labor, or that an equivalent in money would be accepted by the officials instead of such labor. Hard work would soon kill you. Will they allow you to eat such food as your friends may send you?" Another writes urging me to order the discontinuance of Lucifer and advises the signing of a pledge on my part never to engage in the publication of a similar paper again. By so doing he thinks the judge, the prosecuting attorney, and in fact all who know anything of the case, would sign a petition to President Harrison asking for my release from prison. This plan he thinks the only hope. The present sentence of five years, with another indictment hanging over me, he says, simply means, in my case, imprisonment for life. He then adds: "You can help no one by dying in the penitentiary. Your being where you are is causing your dearest friends the deepest sorrow of their lives. Were you dead they would know that you were out of misery, but to know every day that you are suffering mentally and perhaps physically is simply madness. I cannot rest knowing you are where you are and that I cannot help you. I do not believe you can know how I suffered when I saw you disappear through that door Saturday evening with that gang of low, depraved criminals."

That these letters and others of similar tone hav moved me deeply, that they hav brought my heart into my throat, so to speak, and caused unmanly tears to flow, I will not pretend to deny. But while sincerely thanking all who hav thus spoken for their sympathetic interest in my welfare, I wish to say very briefly in reply: First, Do not lose any sleep or rest because you think me "suffering physically or mentally," for such—except to a very limited extent—is not the case. True, there are many privations, discomforts, annoyances, and chagrins incident to and inseparable from prison life that are not usually met with elsewhere, but I hav long since learned that to "devour the chagrins of one's lot" is the true philosophy of life. I do not mean to say that I am able, by a single effort, to gulp down the chagrins of my lot and think no more of them. I mean rather that by my persistent effort I am generally able, as in the present instance, to rise superior to my surroundings, and to enjoy the calm satisfaction and peace of mind that is not born of circumstance, and that is largely, if not wholly, independent of circumstance.

Secondly, I wish to say in regard to making pledges for the future in order to secure release that while I cannot foresee what I may be willing to do a year or two from now, for the present I must regretfully decline to comply with the well-meant proposal of my friend quoted above. While estimating freedom of the body at its full value I prize mental or intellectual freedom still more highly. If ever these prison doors open to let me out I want to walk forth a free man! Not hampered or handicapped with embarrassing pledges or promises. Just now I feel much as I suppose Emerson felt when he wrote: "Let it not be recorded in our own memories, that in this moment of the eternity, when we who were named by our names, flitted across the light, we were afraid of any fact, or disgraced the fair day by a pusillanimous preference of our bread to our freedom" (vol. i, p. 158).

My single sheet is about full. I wish, in closing, to return heartfelt thanks to all who hav written to me here, and to say to all who may intend to write: Please be careful what you write, if you do not wish me to be deprived of the privilege of receiving letters from the outside; and to all who, whether writing or not, believe that "thoughts are things" I would say, please send some of your best thoughts hitherward; and for mottoes or targets upon which to focalize those hitherward thoughts, I suggest the following words: Patience, endurance, self-control, cheerfulness, hopefulness, aspiration, inspiration. Yours for Truth, Right, and Justice,

MOSES HARMAN.

Mr. Heywood's Trial.

From the Boston Herald, June 11th and 12th.

It was just 10:30 o'clock when the rustling of Judge Carpenter's long black silk robe was heard, as he emerged from the little retiring-room in the United States district court this morning and took his seat behind the high, plain-looking desk, preparatory to beginning the second day's proceedings in the case of the government against Ezra H. Heywood, of Princeton, charged with sending obscene, lewd, and corrupting documents through the mails.

Mr. Charles H. Howard was on the stand. He said he was a clerk in a Princeton store, and was also a deputy postmaster in his little town. Saw Mr. Heywood at the post-office on the 28th of April, when he brought a number of copies of the Word in a basket to be mailed. When Mr. Heywood brought the papers in he said he wanted them to go that night. The next morning Mr. Heywood came around and wanted to know what Postmaster Gregory had decided in regard to allowing his papers to be forwarded, and the witness said to him that the papers had been declared unmailable.

John H. Barlo, a post-office inspector, identified certain papers he had taken from the mail containing the article complained of. District-Attorney Allen rolled two big leather mail pouches in front of the witness and asked him to open them, which he proceeded to do. When the contents were dumped upon the floor there was a variegated pyramid of little packages, and the inspector began to pull it over and select the various issues of Mr. Heywood's publication.

A great deal of the court's time was occupied by the inspector's disintegration of the stock of papers which came from the mail bags. When the papers came into the possession of the inspector he had them taken to the train and brought to Boston, where they hav been ever since.

Lawyer Chamberlain thereupon filed a number of objections relating to the violation of certain postal rights which are guaranteed by the Constitution, claiming that the seizure of the papers was unreasonable and unauthorized, and an invasion of the sanctity of personal liberty. The motion was overruled, and counsel noted an exception.

Postmaster Gregory was recalled and identified the superscription on a number of the mail packages as being in the handwriting of Mr. Heywood.

Re-cross-examined: Mr. Heywood brought the papers to the office and expected them to go out as others had. The clerk made the entry of the weights.

Counsel Searle then read portions of the indictment, showing that a number of errors were contained in that instrument, and he proceeded to address the judge, claiming that the charge in the indictment was not descriptiv of the offense. Counsel went on at great length in his comments on the weakness of the government's case, as it had not been shown that the defendant was guilty of knowingly depositing in the mails matter which was lewd, obscene, and lascivious, and Mr. Searle, therefore, asked that the judge instruct the jury to acquit the defendant. He also made a point that the papers were not, in fact, mailed, as no stamps had been placed on the wrappers, while the law provides that postage must be prepaid, unless otherwise provided for.

In answer the district attorney went out for a decision he had in his mind bearing on these points, but he was gone so long the court took a recess. When court came in the district attorney's arms were burdened with heavy legal volumes, and he proceeded to combat the point raised by Mr. Searle, in that the indictment was defectiv because the names contained in that instrument were not the same as on the wrappers of the papers introduced as a part of the evidence. The authorities quoted very emphatically declared that the difference in an initial was immaterial.

The judge in his reply said that the first count of the indictment [the O'Neil letter] would be thrown out, but that he should refuse to instruct the jury in accordance with Lawyer Searle's request.

The lawyer then asked that the indictment be read to the jury, but again the judge interposed his objections.

Mr. Searle then took up a position immediately in front of the twelve men good and true, and, with his thumbs in the tops of his trousers pockets, proceeded to open the case for the defendant. He placed himself in close touch with the jurymen by alluding to their intellectual and pleasant faces, and then proceeded to explain certain cabalistic figures and letters which appeared on the first page of the Word. "Y. L.," he said, meant "Year of Love." The two material questions presented by the case were whether the defendant deposited any or all of these packages in the United States mail, and whether these documents were unmailable by reason of their being obscene, lewd, or lascivious. Mr. Searle then read from the Word certain articles coming within the indictment and relating to sex ethics. We shall show, he said, that Mr. Heywood is a graduate from one of our leading colleges, a journalist of long standing, and a man of superior education. He has been an advocate of certain reforms during his life, always taking advanced ground, and his character at all times has been unimpeachable. The latter years of his life hav been devoted to bringing about an improvement in the home, and to trying to make of it paradise on earth, or as near that as can be accomplished.

The first witness called by the defense was Jerome Manning, a lawyer, who at one time resided in Worcester. He had known Mr. Heywood upward of twenty years, and his reputation was all right so far as the witness knew.

Dr. E. C. Hebbard said he had known the defendant for twenty-five years, and that his reputation was good. He had never, in fact, heard a word against him.

Mrs. Heywood was next called to the witness-stand. A judicial storm gathered immediately after Mr. Chamberlain's first question, which was: "What were the circumstances which impelled you to write the article in question?" (This referred to one of the extracts read by Mr. Searle in his opening.)

The judge said: "The only thing for you to prove is whether the matter complained of was not obscene." But this did not satisfy Mr. Chamberlain, who was conducting the direct examination, and he attempted to make Judge Carpenter recede from his position.

"You don't seem to understand what the issue is," remarked the judge. "All this talk is totally irrelevant. The purpose of this man in sending out these papers has nothing to do with this cause."

"If evidence of this nature is going to be excluded, we might as well hav no trial at all."

"I shall not allow those questions. I am sorry to say it in that way, but I am compelled to," replied the judge.

Mrs. Heywood here attempted to address the court, but the judge held up his hand in admonition, but he did not succeed in stopping the witness until he gave her an imperativ order to cease her remarks.

Judge Carpenter added to his ruling that the statute prohibits the sending of certain matter through the mails, and declares it to be equally bad to forward documents of an obscene character, whether they are designed for the enlightenment or the debasement of the world.

Mr. Chamberlain continued to insist upon introducing the motiv for the publication, when the judge ordered him to take his seat.

"Of course, I must yield," said the attorney.

"What is Mr. Heywood's reputation as a man of high moral principles?" asked Mr. Chamberlain.

"I object," said the district attorney.

The question was ruled out, and the defense noted an exception.

"From your association with Mr. Heywood, what can you say as to his sobriety and personal integrity?"

An objection was sustained and another exception filed.

"Do you practice the principles set forth in the articles published in these papers, Mrs. Heywood?"

Objected to, and a third exception recorded.

"I would like to get something before the jury bearing on this phase of the case," urged Mr. Chamberlain.

But the judge was inexorable, and in despair Mr. Chamberlain remarked: "That is the end of our case. That is all, Mrs. Heywood."

She was followed by Mr. Heywood, who tightly grasped in his left hand a document which proved later to be a copy of certain decisions bearing on cases similar to the one he was interested in. He testified that he had been editor of the Word for the past eighteen years.

"To what purpose is the paper devoted?" was Mr. Chamberlain's question.

The district attorney objected, and Mr. Chamberlain, pressing his point, said he wished to show that the publication was devoted to the furtherance of a scientific subject. The judge would not allow the witness to answer.

"Has there been a promiscuous circulation of your paper?"

"Only by decoys and spotters."

"Are you under indictment in the state court?"

Upon the judge ruling this question out, Mr. Chamberlain remarked, sotto voce, "It seems to me that this man is the victim of the most rascally persecution ever coming under my notice."

"One more remark like that, Mr. Chamberlain, and I will rule you out of this case," said the judge, calmly.

Witness went on to state that he had published his paper eighteen years, and it was not his purpose to run counter to the laws of the government. When he learned from the postmaster of Princeton that his papers had been withheld he asked him the reason, and he replied that it was because of the "Mother" article; he believed it was the department's ruling that the sentiment of the article was wrong and objectionable. Witness asked the postmaster how he was to know what mailable matter was until after he had submitted it to the office. He gave no satisfactory reply and refused to giv the papers back.

On cross-examination there were a number of tilts between the judge and counsel, and the lawyers were given much valuable advice as to the merits of many of their interrogatories.

"Did you direct that wrapper?" asked District-Attorney Allen of the witness, as he held up a sealed copy of the Word.

"I decline to answer," replied Mr. Heywood. "I am not called upon to incriminate myself."

"Had you ever mailed your paper at any other place than Princeton?"

"I decline to answer."

"Did you say anything to the postmaster about the papers going out the night you mailed them?"

"I don't remember that I did."

"Did you make inquiry the next morning if they had been dispatched?"

"I did."

"What was said in response?"

"He said he held them in accordance with a decision of the department."

"Don't you know that you can get an opinion before mailing whether or not certain matter is objectionable to the post-office authorities?"

"I never knew it until this trap was sprung on me."

The Boston Globe's Report of the Last Day.

Ezra H. Heywood, the noted Princeton publisher, made his appearance at the United States district court this morning for the third time this week, accompanied by a brown straw hat, a rather voluminous umbrella, a regular library of papers and documents, and several members of his interesting family.

The somewhat exciting tilts between Lawyer Chamberlain, one of his counsel, and Judge Carpenter yesterday had lent a new spice to the case, and the possibility of a renewal of the legal pyrotechnics to-day drew a new contingent of spectators, not a few of whom were equipped with copies of the naughty Word, into whose depth they dipped with evident interest from time to time.

After a brief colloquy between Mr. Heywood and the court as to certain evidence furnished the jury bearing upon the defendant's past record, the latter addressed the court and read an interesting argument in defense of his position from manuscript. He first quoted from the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and dwelt with some emphasis upon the fact that this well-known instrument is popularly supposed to guarantee that an accused person shall be confronted with his accusers.

He strongly contended that he had meant no harm—that there was not any such statutory offense as obscenity—it is more a physical than a mental disease. In fact, so confident had the defendant been that the purity of his motivs and the integrity of his work needed no vindication at the hands of any intelligent tribunal, that he had at first thought of declining legal assistance altogether.

There was not the slightest attempt on the part of Mr. Heywood to veil the words and terms he used, but he made them stand out in as forcible relief as a collection of ancient statuary under the blaze of an electric light.

Judge Carpenter gave close attention, but indulged in a judicial yawn occasionally, and District-Attorney Allen gazed intently at the orator's back, while Lawyer Chamberlain, doubtless ruminating upon the rather discouraging outcome of his little "circus" with the judge the day before, followed more or less closely the drift of his client's argument.

As for Mrs. Heywood, who sat with one of her rather pretty children on her lap, her gaze never wandered from the face of her better half, and she unconsciously nodded approval when her husband declared that not enough attention is being paid to the teaching of physiology in our schools, and that if a bad book was published he wanted his children to read it, so that they could learn the harm that was in it.

In reading certain extracts from copies of the Word, Mr. Heywood asked the court if those papers could go to the jury, so that they could see what the general tenor of the publication was.

"All the papers will go to the jury," replied the court.

Once or twice the judge was compelled to invite Mr. Heywood to hew more closely to the line, and he obeyed with more alacrity than did his counsel yesterday.

Anthony Comstock, as pictured from time to time by the defendant, was a veritable monster and the natural enemy of all free and independent women in the country, and more than once did he figure prominently in the orator's remarks.

Referring to the origin of the prosecution, Mr. Heywood said that it was "undoubtedly the voice of the devout Wanamaker, but the hand of Comstock," that is responsible for it.

After speaking for about two hours Mr. Heywood closed with an eloquent peroration that would hav done credit to many a brilliant lawyer.

A recess was then taken.

When the court came in again, District-Attorney Frederick D. Allen got up and opened his argument for the prosecution. Postmaster-General Wanamaker, addressing his Philadelphia Sunday-school, could not hav talked more familiarly than did Mr. Allen to the jury, as, striding up and down before them, he told them that this was not a question of free speech or freedom of the press, but a question of morals.

He told them where they must draw the line between liberty and license, and said that while a man has a perfect right to teach his children what he pleases, that does not giv him the right to put these teachings in black and white and send them through the mighty enginery of the mails to other people's children.

As to the copies of the Word that were detained by the post-office authorities, he claimed that they were held in accordance with law, and that there was no personal animus or malice whatever behind the prosecution.

When Mr. Allen had finished, Lawyer Chamberlain made an unsuccessful attempt to get in a correction of some of the district attorney's statements, and Judge Carpenter then charged the jury briefly.

At the close of the charge the long-expected collision between Lawyer Chamberlain and the court occurred.

The charge had apparently not been very satisfactory to the lawyer, for he entered a long list of exceptions to certain statements in it, winding up by excepting to the charge in toto.

Judge Carpenter could hardly repress a smile as he replied that he had not made the statements alleged by the New Yorker, and said that the latter must hav been suffering from mental introspection.

He took some of the exceptions under consideration, however, and then the jury retired to deliberate.

Mr. Heywood's View of the Matter.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir:

Some days ago I sent you newspaper reports of the so-called "trial," which indicated somewhat of what was said and done. With Nelson on the bench or any other impartial judge we could hav won the case easily. The lawyers, Messrs. Searle and Chamberlain, did everything possible, and I made the best appeal I could to the jury in the two hours allowed me; but "conviction" was inevitable under the adverse pressure upon us. Facts against me in my record in previous cases were admitted in evidence, but no facts stating that, in all previous cases, the government yielded the issue ultimately, were allowed in evidence or in my address to the jury. As to alleged "obscenity," we were not permitted to compare the indicted matter with the Bible, "Cupid's Yokes," "Leaves of Grass," "Illustrated Physiology," Trall's "Sexual Physiology," for instance, or with other scientific medical or literary works. The articles in the indictment were not allowed to be read to the jury, so that they did not know what matter was in consideration until after they retired to their room. There was really no "public trial," which the Constitution guarantees every accused person.

No complainant, not even as "decoy," materialized; but "instructions from Washington," saying, "Push Heywood," indicated, "bodied forth" the plaintiff as John Wanamaker, alias Anthony Comstock. Postmaster Deacon Gregory at Princeton is "ordered" from Washington, so he says, to require anyone representing our publishing business to deposit for mailing printed matter, before he will say whether said matter is mailable or not; that is, he requires one to commit an "offense" liable to ten years' imprisonment, before he can know whether a given paper or book is mailable. Such is the trap which has been set for us in the Princeton post-office since April 15th, and the jaws of said trap there are still wide open, hungry for victims. Deacon Gregory pronounced May Word mailable, but "orders" from Washington require us to reënter the Word newspaper for re-registration. So May Words hav been held back three weeks on this last trick to "push Heywood." There is no law to justify this outrage, but it is done all the same. This base assault on the rights of publishers and subscribers is impersonal; yet, plainly enough, it is the devout voice of Jacob Wanamaker, but the crafty hand of Esau Comstock. Among others coming to the front to denounce the outrage is Prof. N. S. Shaler, of Harvard College, a reader of our publications, and from home I hav hearty assurance of coöperativ effort to help us assert free speech, now again savagely assailed in my person.

Truly yours, E. H. Heywood.

Boston, June 15th.

It appears then that Bayle should rather hav examined whether Atheism or fanaticism is the most dangerous. Fanaticism is certainly a thousand times the most to be dreaded; for Atheism inspires no sanguinary passion, but fanaticism does. . . . Let us suppose, with the author of the Commentarium Rerum Gallicarum, that the high-chancellor De l'Hopital was an Atheist: he made none but wise laws; he recommended only moderation and concord. The massacres of St. Bartholomew were committed by fanatics. Hobbes passed for an Atheist; yet he led a life of innocence and quiet, while the fanatics of his time deluged England, Scotland, and Ireland with blood. Spinosa was not only an Atheist, he taught Atheism: but assuredly he had no part in the juridical assassination of Barneveldt; nor was it he who tore in pieces the two brothers DeWitt, and ate them off the gridiron. . . . They who hav maintained that a society of Atheists may exist, hav then been right; for it is laws that form society; and these Atheists, being moreover philosophers, may lead a very wise and very happy life under the shade of those laws. They will certainly liv in society more easily than superstitious fanatics. People one town with Epicureans such as Simonides, Protagoras, Des Barreaux, Spinosa; and another with Jansenists and Molinists—in which do you think there will be the most quarrels and tumults?—Voltaire.

Communications.

Fear of Gods.

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.—Bible.

The love of life, the instinct of self-preservation, is an element or impulse of all sentient beings that hav a consciousness of existence as physical organisms. This is from necessity a condition of life; as much so as dimensions, attraction, and gravitation are conditions of inorganic matter. We cannot conceive of matter as existing without these conditions, properties, or qualities. Neither can we conceive of organic life, high enough in the scale of being to be endowed with sensation and power to respond to nervous stimuli, as existing without this instinct of self-preservation.

From this root or basic point common to sensuous organized life, springs all moral and intellectual consciousness; all the passions, impulses, and propensities. To flee or shrink from whatever disturbs, distresses, or threatens to destroy the life of the creature, and to seek safety elsewhere, is as natural to animated beings, is as much a condition of their existence as light, heat, and moisture are a part of, essential to, and inseparable from vegetable life, or as the properties of inorganic matter are inseparable from it.

We talk about the designs of God when we contemplate the system of nature and we say "he willed to create things as they are," as though he or it were arbitrary, and had a choice in dividing creation into inorganic, vegetable, and animal life, and subdividing into infinit variety the forms which this life should take. We are generally too blind, indolent, or superstitious to look into the secrets of nature, which are entirely within the reach of our vision, and see that matter could not exist under the circumstances in any other way than that in which we find it—that it is no more within the scope or functions of God's power to change it than it is within our own. Light, heat, and moisture, or their conservation in more subtil forms or forces, hav produced all the degrees and qualities of life found in the habitable earth.

All are the product of fixed laws and principles inherent in matter, and no arbitrary or capricious will of God can change them. The instincts of animals and man are as much the product of these forces acting on the nervous system as are the physical forms of life. It is all evolution and progression. By a gradual process, change, advancement from the lower to the higher, is ever proceeding. Each generation transmits its acquisitions or increased capacities to the next. This may not be generally observed or believed, yet it has been proved and demonstrated to be a fact.

Many animals through this process hav become endowed with a high degree of sagacity and power of self-preservation.

Man stands at the head of animated beings in this cerebral or intellectual development.

As there are grades of life among animals, so there are grades of life among men. As the species multiplied, some were necessarily crowded out of the best environment and obliged to find quarters in inferior localities, where climate, food, and surroundings were less auspicious, and their development was thus partially arrested. These unfortunates are still remaining in a state of savagery or barbarism.

In other instances multiplication has exceeded the supplies of life so far as to stint and starve the masses, so as to suppress or retard mental or moral growth and prevent progress. Some of the older populations remain in this condition.

Even in intelligent communities there are causes operating often to keep a large proportion of the people in a low and feeble state of moral and mental development. Hereditary habits and restricted opportunities seem to fasten themselvs on families, clans, and localities, with a tenacity that it is often difficult to break up or reform. If any portion of society remains in this condition, it operates as a continual drawback on the prosperity of the more fortunate. They add to the burdens of the self-supporting and tend to keep society more barbaric by the debasing influence of their ignorance, superstition, and attachment to their inherited lower thoughts and modes of living. The religious views of this class react largely on society.

The more enlightened and progressiv classes are tethered to them and are kept back in the work of progress and mental freedom. "Evil communications corrupt good manners and good morals."

The upright in motiv lose their integrity by mingling with and adapting their thoughts and teachings to the condition of the immoral, ignorant, and superstitious.

We may not be conscious of it, but the virus of the vulgar secretly poisons the channels of all moral life, and keeps alive in the public mind many of the barbaric sentiments, motivs, and instincts that belonged to more primitiv ages. Among these are fear and the awe and veneration that hav grown out of it. Emotions, if they were once useful, are now among the greatest impediments to progress.

Until they are eliminated from the body politic, our progress must be extremely slow.

After animals had advanced so far as to become endowed with the special senses, perhaps there was no one impersonal phenomenon that so affected the higher order of life with fear and learned it to shrink from danger, as the thunder storm. Earthquakes, violent winds, and floods of rain would each startle the emotion, and prompt the animal to seek shelter from the threatening danger. With these accompanied with brilliant or lurid flashes of lightning and sharp, terrific explosions of thunder, affecting the three senses of sight, sound, and feeling so forcibly, the animal could not fail to be impressed painfully, and its sense of fear aroused to activity in making efforts to escape from the causes producing the shock on its nervous system. In certain stages of animal life, fear has been an indispensable auxiliary to advance its development and to save it from destruction. It has had much to do in originating and evolving the moral sense in man. His feeble reasoning powers were early excited into activity by the thunder storm. Awed by its presence, he wanted to account for it. His first impulses at explanation prompted him to ascribe it to a personality residing in the heavens.

An impalpable, invisible, but mighty personality, the creator of matter and of man, was traveling in, or by his omnipresence was occupying, different parts of the heavens, manifesting his power in a threatening way to awe and humble man into submission, or otherwise he was in danger of feeling his vengeance. It was from this prompting fear, and this kind of reasoning, that the moral and religious emotions had their beginning and hav gradually grown into such a mighty force in controling human society. Every child born, that livs to adult life, must go through the same emotional and mental processes that were incident to the earlier stages of the race. The example of the parent or of older companions, with their explanations, lead the child into the mental and moral path of its ancestors.

The terrific being who rides in the thunder storm haunts the imagination and impresses with awe. Men are taught that the "fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom;" that "to fear God and keep his commandments is the whole duty of man." Lessons that originated in a state of semi-barbarism are strenuously pressed upon us as the ultimatum of divine truth and of unimpeachable authority. Appeals to fear as a means of restraint are characteristic lessons of the Hebrew scriptures. The period to which they refer and purport to be a history of was one in which man was governed more through fear than from any higher or better motiv. Fear makes the savage a natural coward and cruel to the enemy he has in his power. Cowardice and cruelty go together.

The savage reverences the chief that is in power. He reverences and stands aghast before power everywhere. This sense of reverence keeps him in subjection. It paralyzes his energies, suppresses his ambition, prevents aspiration; it cows, and intimidates from enlightenment. Fear and reverence are elements of savage life, and wherever they prevail man is in bondage, a victim to their low impulses, and is afraid of the light, the intelligence, that might tend to discredit or destroy his faith in them.

Wherever we find fear and reverence they are too often accompanied by meanness, intolerance, and injustice. "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment." "He that feareth is not made perfect in love." Fear and reverence unmans, prostrates, subjugates, and retards man's progress from barbarism.

In religious associations and communities these fearing, reverent Christians, with all their professions of piety, are the most serious and stubborn obstacles to intellectual growth that society has to contend with. They believe in a religion of fear and not in one of light. They believe in subserviency and submission, and not in intelligent independence. They believe in placating the unseen powers and surrendering to them, rather than in unmasking them of their terrors, their threatened severe treatment of those who do not properly reverence and obey them. In their estimation it is a greater virtue to submit with superstitious awe to the restrictions imposed by a blind reverence for the ignorance and barbarisms of the past, and suffer the evils it entails, and call them a visitation from God, than to fearlessly and irreverently subject the whole theory and system of faith founded on it to the severest tests, in order to get at the truth. These reverent, fearing believers and worshipers will oppose and stifle any inquiry, if they can, that might expose the fallacy and weakness of their cherished delusion.

They profess to be friends of education, of intelligence and culture, but they frown upon and forbid, as far as they can, their uses in exploding and dissipating the mists and mockeries of ancient error, because they cherish them as precious, both from their antiquity and for the affection they hav acquired for them. Such is the weakness of human beings that this class, trammeled with a blind reverence for theories and beliefs and by their effect on their feelings, is put forward to lead and giv direction to the thoughts of the young.

Fear of men, reverence for institutions, opinions, and usages, moral cowardice, are the bane and scandal of society. Evils and follies continue among us unchallenged, yet meekly tolerated and countenanced, lest in opposing them some one might be offended, displeased, or some prejudices or feelings be wounded. Yes, most of us are afraid to tell the truth and be honest. If we hav a judgment or opinion we are afraid to reveal it if it should be unwelcome to those in authority, out of a reverence for their positions, and a fear of a reaction against our own prospects.

We expose ourselvs to deserved ridicule and contempt, and curtail our usefulness, by our cowardice, the product of our fear and reverence. We stand apart and keep our thoughts from one another, and let things drift, or be managed and mangled by the bigoted, the incompetent, and vicious, because our superstitious terrors hav deprived us of the proper courage.

We fall in with the forms and follies we hav inherited, rather than allow ourselvs the right to doubt or to test them by the light of truth, for fear of the feelings of some one being disturbed. We speak of our principles and convictions, but we know them only by name, and carry them out in routine performances, with obsequious precision, according to our traditions.

The few look upon the masses as their followers, and the many look to the few as their leaders. The habit of reverent submission has stifled and forbidden, has obviated the necessity and suppressed the ambition or aspiration for, independent thought or inquiry.

Reverence and fear quench the vigorous life and true intellectual courage of the mind, and reduce the individual to a state of acquiescent dependence on the will of others.

Because the world was governed by fear during the dark and dreary centuries of the past, when human beings were in a state of barbarism, when the passions and emotions were strong, and furnished the chief motivs which appeals could be made to and control exercised by, it does not follow that it must always continue so. If the childhood of the race requires the treatment of the individual child, it does not follow that either the race or the individual should always remain in its infantil or adolescent state. Paul said he put away his childish things when he became a man.

It is just as essential and indispensable that an adult, cultivated, intelligent society should put away all these ancient, childish lessons and practices, as it is that the adult, intelligent man should do so. We never can become what we should and what it is our right to be, while we teach or countenance the barbarian precepts and proverbs of our benighted and enslaved ancestors. They do not belong to us, and they are a burden, a gloom, an overshadowing and oppressiv nightmare to all who giv them credence or heed them. We are told that "love is the fulfilling of the law." "God is love," so we hav no longer any occasion for fear even in our religion, or the law by which we are governed, and if we will remain so stupid, so enslaved and degraded, by the superstitions of the past as to giv any countenance to the faith and lessons of barbarism, we deserve the ignominy and infamy we are entitled to and fairly earn.

Philadelphia, June, 1890. T. E. Longshore.

Mr. J. B. Holgate and His True Theology.

A few weeks ago a Liberal friend of mine forwarded to my address a pamphlet written by Jerome B. Holgate and entitled, "The True Theology," asking me to review the same. Having been informed that copies of "The True Theology" hav been distributed or sold all over the Union and are therefore likely to be handed to Freethinkers by zealous Christian friends, I thought that the following criticism of mine might perhaps prove useful.

According to the title of Mr. Holgate's pamphlet his "true theology" is capable of "harmonizing revelation, reason, science, the evolutions of history, and furnishing a basis for a common faith." To giv his readers an idea of his vast stores of information and his varied knowledge, he at first proceeds to giv a short synopsis of ancient religions—a synopsis full of misrepresentations. He says that all religions are developed out of one common religion which prevailed on the great plateau in upper Asia, the inhabitants of which originally worshiped a supreme being, and another being, a god of evil, who was subordinate to the former. I am at a loss to know where the writer, who is very careful not to mention the authorities for his extraordinary statements, received this surprising information. We do not know where stood the cradle of the human family—both tropic and arctic regions hav been assigned—but we do not know, judging from now living savage tribes, that primitiv man could not hav possessed words for low generalities and abstractions, hence still less for an idea like supreme being, which combines high generality with highest abstractness.

Thousands of years must hav rolled by before man reached that point of mental development, and if Mr. Holgate had consulted the early hymns of Rig Veda in place of the latter ones, he would hav perceived that his supreme being, Varuna, is none but the heaven which covers Prethivî (earth) and hence identical with the Greek's Ouranus, who originally was termed koilon (vault, hollow), a term retained in the Latin cœlum. Later in time Varuna becomes an unseen almighty being, a father of men, but even then there is nothing spiritual or moral in his battles with Vitra, the demon of darkness, whose name is built up on the same root as Varuna. It is simply a battle of physical forces.

Next Mr. Holgate informs us that this "high God," Varuna, was revealed to the Hebrews under the name Jehovah—Ja or Je (Lord), ho or hoa (high), veh or vah (unborn, unchangeable, eternal). Not being the owner of a dictionary of Vedic Sanscrit, I cannot at present state whether the interpretation of the word Jehovah—allowing this to be a Sanscrit derivation composed of three roots—is true, but I may suggest that great care should be taken in the translation of Sanscrit, which as a language is even more flexible than the text of the Bible when interpreted by ecclesiastics to harmonize revelation and science. There are twenty-one Vedic names for earth, and the word arha, for instance, can mean ray, sun, hymn, food, learned man, copper, etc.

Letting Sanscrit alone, we will turn to Egyptian, and we find here that the name Jehovah was known to the inhabitants of the Nile valley, who called it Y-ha-ho or Y-ar-weh (Lord), and it was probably known to the worshipers of Serapis, who called it J-ha-ho. In Ex. ii, Jehovah styles himself "I am that I am," and this Hebrew "I am" is exactly identical with the "I am" found in the Egyptian name for God, "Nuk-Pa-Nuk" (I am that I am). As for the name El Shaddai, this too corresponds to an Egyptian name, to Nutar Nutra, and signifies "the mighty one," "the terrible one."

Like the surrounding nations, the Jews worshiped for a long time a plurality of gods, a fact indicated by the name Jehovah Elohim (Lord of gods), but this word Elohim is likewise applied to ghosts, kings, judges; in fact, to persons and things that are high or great. And the same is the case with the words Adonai (Lord) and El Shaddai, which also are applied to natural as well as supernatural beings.

It was, says Mr. Holgate, this Jehovah, or El Shaddai, who through the agencies of angels made a revelation to Moses on Mount Sinai. "This revelation was a historical event, as much so as was our Declaration of Independence, and there is nothing like it in all other literature of the ancient world."

I wish to state that here, as everywhere else where Mr. Holgate poses as a religious scholar, he is very much mistaken. It was not angels, but God himself, who wrote the Commandments (compare Ex. xx), and ancient literature does contain something very much like the famous Ten Commandments —which we, by the way, do not possess in their original form. For the present form of the Commandments I refer the reader to Ex. xx; originally they probably ran as follows: "I, Yahweh, am your God. Worship no other gods besides me. Make no image of a god. Commit no perjury. Remember to keep holy the Sabbath day. Honor your father and your mother. Commit no murder. Break not the marriage vow. Steal not. Bear no false witness. Covet not" (Dr. Oort in "Bible for Learners," vol. i, p. 18).

Better than these are the ten commandments of Buddha: 1. Not to kill. 2. Not to steal. 3. To be chaste. 4. Not to bear false witness. 5. Not to lie. 6. Not to swear. 7. To avoid impure words. 8. To be disinterested. 9. Not to avenge one's self. 10. Not to be superstitious. And compare then Ex. xx, 5, with the words of Christna: "Even they who worship other gods, worship me, although they know it not" (Bhagavat Gita, ix). Which god appears the "most high"—Jehovah, the Jew's and Christian's god, or Christna, the god incarnate of the miserable, superstitious Hindoos?

Centuries before Jehovah revealed his Ten Commandments to Moses, he must, in a fit of forgetfulness—we know he is of a story-telling and changeful disposition—hav whispered them in the ear of some Egyptian priest, for in "The Ritual of the Dead," or as the Egyptian title runs, "The Manifestation to Light," we hav the very same ten commandments (Birch. Bunsen's Egypt, vol. v, pp. 253–6. Lenormant: Manuel d'Histoire Ancienne, vol. i).

Mr. Holgate is right in asserting that there is nothing like the revelation on Mount Sinai in all other literature of the ancient world, and well it is; one testimony of human cruelty and foolishness is enough. And yet this "revelation" of cruelty and foolishness does Mr. Holgate want the world to accept as basis for all social, moral, and political relations!

Speaking of the religion of the ancient Greeks, our author tells us that they "allotted the lower atmosphere to Juno; the higher, the ether, to Jupiter; while Jehovah was placed in the spaces above these, that is, in the third heaven. Now, the Greeks did no such thing. They had no Juno nor Jupiter, but a Zeus and a Hera, and in the person of the former we hav a triple personage: 1. The Zeu-os, Zeus Pater (Vedic Dyaus Pitar), the Zeus to whom the people prayed, the one only God. 2. The Zeus of the Olympian hierarchy, unjust, pleasure-loving, changeable, and impure. 3. The Zeus of the visible heaven, the Zeus to whom the Athenians prayed when they said: "O dear Zeus, rain thou on the fields of the Athenians and on the plains." The spiritual, the Olympian (of early poetry), and the physical Zeus never were entirely separated. Like the Christian trinity, they remained, to some extent at least, "One God as trinity and trinity in unity."

Mr. Holgate believes in the garden of Eden myth; hence also in a live, activ Satan; in one with hoof, tail, and sting. And to make his own harmonizing scheme work, he does not giv even "the devil his due." He states that the Hindoos called their gods devas, and Siva (the destroyer and generator) was called Maha-Deva (great, strong god); that the Persians and Hebrews added the suffix ill or il, Deva-il, which has become our devil. In this particular instance Mr. Holgate gets mixed up in ante-Vedic, Vedic, and newer Hindoo theology. The Vedic dark spirit is Vitra; not Siva or Maha-Deva, and the conflict between him and Indra is of purely physical significance. It was the Persians who introduced a spiritual meaning; they named the evil spirit Ahriman or Angro-Mainyus, and made him the leader of the devas, who, from being the bright gods of the air in Vedic theology, become malignant, deceitful beings in Zoroastrian theology. The word devil, which contains the same root as the Latin divus, djavis, and the Teutonic words demon, djœvel, djôful, diuval, and djewful, is like those derived from the Sanscrit deva. The Hebrew Satan, or Shaytan, is equivalent to the Egyptian Pi-Tan; but the t in the Hebrew Shaytan is a teth, not a tau. Here the syllable tan is in no way related to Tan or Tanin, translated variously as whale, dragon, serpent. The serpent when used as a symbol signifies health and immortality; never, as Mr. Holgate indicates, dominion, power, or supremacy of mind over matter.

Yet the knowledge of Mr. Holgate in mythology is equaled if not surpassed by that in psychology, which is of the revealed kind, with an immortal soul and special divine interferences as supplements.

Says Mr. Holgate, "Human nature is made up of desires, understanding, reason, and judgment," and then he goes on, giving us as examples the duck and the chicken. He furnishes no rational explanation of any mental phenomena. Thus, speaking of instinct, he says, "It is the guidance of an inscrutable intelligence." In fact, his science is not even pseudo-science; it is but every-day ignorance in an emotional dress and standing on a metaphysical base.

Mr. Holgate may be a good and well-meaning man, but certainly he is no scholar. His acquaintance with the different sciences equals that of Moses with geology. The way he has studied history and sociology can be imagined when I state that he attributes all individual, social, and political evils, destruction of monarchies and democracies, to the violation of God's law (the revelation of Mt. Sinai). If he during his twenty-five years' study had used a pair of common-sense glasses instead of a Bible telescope, he would hav known that human society is a growth, not an article manufactured; that every radical change in political geography is caused by a disregard of the relationship of strategy to politics; that every internal revolution has been the result of political equality existing side by side with economical inequality. It was this that destroyed the Grecian democracy and killed ancient Rome. "Salifundia perdidere Italiam," says Pliny. Furthermore, it is neither the serf nor the baron, the slave nor the free, but it is the half-free, who raises the standard of rebellion. Crush a people to earth it will not rebel, but let the oppression be so strong only that it permits the oppressed to comprehend the existence of a better condition, and revolution will come. The pressure of the iron hand of Louis XIV. was tolerated, but the slightest touch of the gloved hand of Louis XVI. raised a storm that ended in the glorious French Revolution.

I will not begin any analysis of the theological part of the pamphlet. Every Freethinker knows that the Bible can be quoted in support of any scheme. The reason I hav dealt rather minutely with Mr. Holgate's work is, that it is a fair specimen of the many writings which appear every year, of which it is claimed that they can reconcile science and religion. No writing has ever yet appeared nor will ever appear that can accomplish this feat. Science and religion are as antagonistic as fire and water. The former deals with facts, the latter with suppositions. If mankind is to be saved, it will be through the agency of science, not by an adherence and obedience to the supposed commandments and will of a supposed God living somewhere in a supposed heaven. There is nothing above nature, and highest in nature stands man. We hav no use for a god; in the intellectual world Jehovah is known to hav joined the company of other gods, and behold! Man ascends the steps leading to the former's throne, and soon will resound the herald's cry, King Jehovah is dead! King Man he livs! G. N.

Forestport, N. Y.

The Wettstein Challenge.

The readers of Mr. Wettstein's challenge to mediums in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 31st were no doubt impressed at first with the idea that they were to receive some light on the much-discussed subject of slate-writing by disembodied spirits. But as they continued to read his article in connection with his challenge, they must hav concluded otherwise. For he demonstrates that he is a coward, afraid of that which he claims does not exist; that he would not trust himself, the four witnesses of his own selection, or the entire populace. He says he will accept a message that is written under his direction, as to conditions, as coming from spirits, and adds: "This simple test can be made by any witnessing the phenomena, proving conclusivly that what they behold on the slates is an illusion, unless produced by trickery." He tells us in very plain terms that if the fact be proved by his own rules and conditions he will crawl out of accepting the proof by claiming it to be trickery. And he imagins that the world will be convinced if he pays his hundred dollars and states the result. "A word to the wise" (especially the self-styled wise) should be sufficient. Mr. Wettstein does not hav to put up one hundred, no, not even one dollar, to find out whether there are disembodied spirits or not; the exercise of his reason, if carefully and judiciously used, so that it will hold out, will prove the fact beyond any question of doubt. Every human organism is sufficiently mediumistic to demonstrate the fact of the existence of disembodied spirits.

It is not necessary to go to others for proof. The subject, however, is one requiring caution and good judgment in pursuing an investigation; it is not a subject to approach with "fear and trembling;" the séance room is no place for a coward, a wise man (that is, a man that knows it all before he knows anything), or a fool. It is necessary to be willing to learn in order to learn. The subject is one that deals with humanity, in and out of the mortal form, and we find there are spirits in the flesh that are far above many of those who hav passed out both mentally and morally, and as the tendency is in human nature for those that are corrupt and degraded to want others brought down to their level, it requires caution lest the searcher after proof be led astray by those evil spirits, designated by many, on account of the results that sometimes follow, as the devil. While we hav spirits in the flesh we can handle them, tie them up as it were, but when they are liberated from mortal environments, look out. They feed upon the misfortunes of the careless ones left behind. The opposing influences are numerous on both sides, and must be guarded against. With the amount of literature published to day, giving full explanations of the different methods of proving the most stupendous fact of our lives, it is amusing to see so many people paying their money to others for proof. And all because they are afraid of spirits which they know do not exist. Mr. Wettstein thinks that to ignore his challenge would be admitting fraud by Spiritualists. Everyone knows there is fraud practiced in the name of Spiritualism, and the "fish" that are caught by such frauds are generally the self-styled "knowing ones" and cowards. The season in Marengo is unquestionably open for one of those fisher mediums, and if they read Mr. Wettstein's challenge some of them will no doubt board a whaler and sail thither. F. E. ORMSBY.

Chicago.

SEEING that man is essentially a social being, and can, without society, either not exist at all or only in the rank of a predatory animal, it becomes easy to understand that his living in social communion with others must hav saddled him with duties of reciprocity which in course of time developed into definit moral axioms. The beginnings of this are to be found in family life, which in the sequel developed into tribal and national life. Morality is, therefore, much older than religion, the latter being only a requirement of the individual, while the former is a requirement of society, and had its germ in the earliest beginnings of social existence. Thus, it stands to reason that morality cannot hav originated in religion, but is entirely independent of it. It was not until a comparativly recent period of civilization that the two became connected with each other, and by no means to the advantage of the former. For it may be averred without fear of contradiction that religion is injurious to morality, in so far as it assigns to it an aim based upon egotism and self-seeking, whereas pure morality finds, and ought to find, its reward in itself, so that it may subserve the objects of society at large and be at the same time a blessing to the individual, as a member thereof. The original object of religious institutions was not, as has been admirably shown by E. Bournouf in the history of creeds, to make moral or virtuous men, but merely to afford corroboration of the metaphysical or supernatural theories invented by our ancestors.—Buchner.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 21, 1890.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

IN PRESS.

The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book.

One Hundred and Eighty-five Pictorial Arguments Against the Church, and Nearly the same Number of Pages of Reading Matter.

Price, $2; advance orders solicited.

The Christianizing of the Land of Uganda.

At last the land of Uganda is Christian and a Christian king reigns thereover, and Christian missionaries are free to extend their work of conversion and trading. Gunpowder and New Testaments hav done their perfect work, and the principles of the Prince of Peace and the cartridge-makers now prevail in that part of African heathendom. The way the spirit of the Christian God got possession of the Uganda heathen is told in letters from the jubilant missionaries to their friends in London, and a correspondent of the Sun of this city has sent them to his journal.

The conversion occupied about six months of last year. During that time Bibles and bullets were generously distributed to the heathen, the proportion being a few thousand bullets to one Bible. There had previously been trouble in the royal family of Uganda, and King Mwanga, whom the missionaries had converted, had been deposed by his heathen brother Karema. Before he became a Christian Mwanga had burnt a good many of his brethren at the stake, but this was forgiven him by the missionaries when he repented, and they began a war to reinstate him upon his throne, believing, says the Sun correspondent, that if Mwanga again ruled they and their white friends would run the kingdom to suit themselvs and line their own pockets. So they determined, with the aid of the guns and ammunition supplied by the white trader, Mr. Stokes, who had gone to the country five years before as a missionary, to drive King Karema, the brother of Mwanga, and his Arab friends out of Uganda. They had plenty of opportunity to perfect their plans, for they were all exiles from Uganda, having been driven out when the Arabs and Karema came into power.

Before any of the exiles started for Uganda Stokes had supplied the party west of the lake Victoria Nyanza with ammunition. The plan was that while one force was marching up the west coast another party should cross in canoes and land on an island near their own home. Then the two parties, who numbered over two thousand guns and as many more spearmen, were to attack the capital of the heathen king simultaneously and hav Mwanga at hand ready to take the throne as soon as Karema had been driven out. The scheme worked to perfection, and the remarkable circumstance that the heathen king possessed no boats greatly aided the cause of the Christians.

Finally, so the account drawn from the missionaries' letters goes on, the approach of the land party was announced. It was attacked by Karema before Mwanga's little army crossed to the mainland, and Karema had rather the best of the fight. The next day, however, the allies united on the mainland and they sent word back that they were marching on the capital for the final contest. Then the missionaries and Mwanga went up to the top of a hill on the island, where, through their glasses, they could witness a part of the battle. The work of destruction had begun, and they saw great clouds of smoke rising to the west of Rubaga, the hill on which the royal palace stood. The Christians had set fire to hundreds of huts. Soon a great rattle of musketry began. The big battle was in progress in a marsh at the foot of Rubaga. The fight lasted several hours. Both armies were stubborn, but the Christians finally drove the enemy before them. Nightfall, however, prevented them from completing their victory. A fresh supply of ammunition was sent off to the Christians during the night, and they were ordered to make a general assault on the enemy's position at daybreak. Early next morning Karema's capital was stormed and taken, and he and his heathen forces, with their Arab allies, were hurrying north as fast as they could go, hotly pursued by the Christian army. The killed on both sides were estimated at about four hundred. Karema and his soldiers distanced their pursuers and took refuge on the borders of Unyoro. The Christian army returned to Rubaga, where two days after the big fight Mwanga was taken to the mainland and on the shoulders of his soldiers borne to the capital, where he was saluted as king amid general jubilation. But he found that his old-time power had not been restored to him. The Protestants and Catholics parceled out the offices among them and filled all the positions, high and low, without consulting Mwanga. This made him very angry, but he could not help himself. His royal mother also complained bitterly that she was not allowed to appoint even the petty officers in her establishment.

The restoration of Mwanga occurred on Oct. 12, last year. The government with its prime minister or katikoro, its cabinet of councillors, its army and civil list, was completely established, and peace would seem to hav been secured on a fairly permanent basis if Karema and his Arab friends had not been prowling around the northern frontier. The missionaries resumed their labors. Houses were built for them, and their converts worked in their gardens and supplied them with most of their food. The heathen party had been the under dog in the fight, and though it now hurrahed for Mwanga as loudly as anybody, it was not represented in the offices. The nativ Christians of Uganda believe that to the victors belong the spoils. The Roman Catholics and the Protestants were equal sharers in the offices. They had buried their grave differences and were united in face of the common dangers that were likely to menace them from the heathen party. Everybody seemed to be fairly contented except Mwanga. He complained that he was helpless and was king only in name. He undoubtedly inclined toward the heathen party, and tried to play off one party of Christians against the other, so as to weaken them. The young rascal, who owed the fact to the Christians that he was still a king, instead of a beggar, was showing himself in his true colors. Professing the Romish faith, like Constantine, the first Christian emperor, he still inclined to the heathen worship, and was not prepared to giv up all the old practices. He still had many wives and wanted more.

Meanwhile the supply of gunpowder was running very low and fresh kegs had not arrived. Suddenly a storm burst from a nearly clear sky. Karema had received a fresh supply of ammunition from the king of Unyoro, and was footing back to Rubaga as fast as his army could travel to show that he was still boss of the country. Couriers from the frontier brought the unwelcome news to the capital. There was great excitement and commotion. An army was sent forth under Christian generals to stay Karema's progress, but spears could do nothing against guns, and they were defeated. Then Mwanga and his wives were packed over to the island again, and all the Christians paddled over with them. Karema made a triumphal progress to Rubaga, and set himself up in business again as king.

Just then a friend in need loomed above the horizon in the person of Jackson, the agent of the British East African Company. He wrote to Mwanga on December 15th, sending one of the company's flags, and saying that if the king accepted the flag and placed himself under British protection, the company would help him. Mwanga accepted the flag. A little later Dr. Peters of the German expedition also appeared on the scene. From this point our information is very meager, and is of the nature of postscripts to the missionary letters. We only know that both Jackson and Peters, who had plenty of gunpowder, contributed their aid to set Mwanga again on the throne from which he had twice been thrust, and that in the final fights Karema perished, leaving Mwanga the only claimant to the throne of Uganda.

So runs the story of the Christianizing of the land of Uganda. It will be noticed doubtless that some things are more prominent in it than others—among them that gunpowder is more potent than Bibles, and that the heathen equipped with guns were stronger than the righteous armed only with spears; that the missionaries are good directors of a war of conquest and that they know how to obtain all the worldly emoluments naturally following their conquest. In return for his two or three thousand dollars' worth of ammunition Missionary Stokes received so much ivory that three thousand porters were required to carry his wealth to the coast, whence he could ship it to England and obtain the cash for it. The other missionaries hav all equally well rewarded themselvs, and there is every prospect that they and their descendants will never regret their missionary work among the heathen. The only cloud upon the horizon is the prospectiv difference between the two eminently Christian nations of England and Germany as to which shall own the country the men of God hav obtained.

We trust that the next appeal to the babies in the Sunday-schools to giv their pennies to the poor missionaries who carry the gospel to Africa will be generously heeded. How worthy these laborers are of their hire!

Prosecution of Freethought in Germany.

In our items of foreign news last week was mentioned the suppression of the Humboldt Freethought Society at Leipsic, Saxony. In the Freidenker we find the decree of suppression:

"The Freethought society, 'Humboldt,' located in this city, which according to Section 5 of its by-laws proposes to teach 'a liberal conception of the universe' as well as to maintain 'a resolute position in favor of total liberty of conscience,' has since its founding, in October last, at its numerous meetings kept up a systematic course of teaching and exhortations by which not alone its members but outsiders attending its meetings were enticed from the belief in God and the Christian church; their religious feelings undermined and Christian institutions held up as objects of laughter and contempt; and Infidelity and immorality hav been propagated. At the last meeting these aims of the society were so plain that certain utterances of the speaker came very near being included under the conception of criminal blasphemy, and there is no doubt that the principal aim of the society is the pursuance of certain lines of thought and teaching; and since these, in accordance with Section 20 of the laws for societies of Nov. 22, 1850, are to be classed as immoral actions, the society has been found guilty of unlawful proceedings. Therefore, in accordance with said law and contents of the ministerial letter of March 10, 1878, the meetings of the Humboldt Society are prohibited.

"This prohibition shall take effect immediately, and all objects which might serve to continue the society, as furniture, cards of membership, etc., are confiscated."

Now, we know what is immoral in Germany—"a liberal conception of the universe," and a resolution "to maintain total liberty of conscience"—and they are, besides, akin to "criminal blasphemy." This decree was issued by the police of the city, and the Humboldt Society is no more. Commeuting upon the order the Freidenker says: "And this is the liberty of thought and speech existing in the country of the 'thinking' people! How miserable must be the condition of a religion to protect which its supporters are compelled to use such means! The Freethinker seems to be as free as a bird in the atmosphere of thought, yet how far from it he really is! every word he utters against the church religion is called a crime, yea, stamped as immoral!"

In keeping with this inquisitorial act is the indictment for blasphemy of Karl Schulze, editor of the Nordhauser Volksblatt, for publishing an Easter poem, in which, according to our German Freethought exchanges, there is no blasphemy whatever! Since the death of Frederick III., who was known to be a Freethinker, the church has found the state ready to carry out its wishes. The present kaiser is a very pious "war-lord," ready to pray and fight, and to make a consummate fool of himself. So it has come that in Germany, where there are thousands of Freethinkers, and a Freethought party in the Reichstag, more prosecutions for blasphemy are begun than in countries where Freethinkers are comparativly scarce. The Freethinkers there should wake up!

Indians Under Church Influence!

The unwisdom of parceling the Indians out to the sects to be cared for has received no stronger illustration than the present difficulty on the Keshena reservation in Wisconsin. The trouble is over a contemplated change of agents; the Indians, under the influence of the preachers, refusing to accept Mr. Kelsey in place of Mr. Jennings.

From authentic sources reports hav been received from the reservation which clearly show that the underlying cause of this refusal to recognize Mr. Kelsey is religious differences. The reservation has been for years in charge of the Episcopal and Methodist churches, the Roman Catholics having charge of the other Wisconsin reservation. During the past few years the Catholics hav been trying to get a foothold in Keshena, and hav been assisted by Agent Jennings, who is a member of that church. Bishop Grafton, of the Episcopal church, in whose diocese the reservation is situated, in a recent circular asking for money for new buildings makes the following charges:

"During the past few years the United States Indian agent has been a Romanist and zealous partisan for his church. In making my first visit about a year ago I found that he had appointed the same day for making certain payments to the tribe which compelled a number of the young men to be away, and as the missionary informed me prevented their confirmation. A number of Indians desiring to send their children to Indian schools at Randolph and Carlisle were told by the agent that he could put them, free of expense, in as good schools off the reservation.

"On the death of Mr. Goodenough, an Episcopal missionary, a Roman mission was established on the confines of the reservation and a priest began to visit among the Indians. Certificates of membership to a Roman society, filled out with the names of our prominent church-members and acknowledging the payment of dues by them, were anonymously sent about. The Roman authorities petitioned the government to giv them a grant of land, and thus allow them to enter the reservation and erect a church. They tried to enlist the sympathies of the Indians by promising them schools and sisters. Forty-three men, women, and children were induced to sign a petition to the government asking for the Roman church.

"It is obvious that an agent who has the power of appointing various officers and making donations of farming implements, putting children in schools, etc., can exert a very persuasiv influence upon the timid and needy. The government directed the agent to call the tribe together in council to see whether land and permission should be given to the Catholics. The agent called the council, not in the accustomed place, the council house, but at one which on account of the spring floods was inaccessible to many. An official sympathizer was sent to notify those supposed to be in favor of the Catholics. But in the official notice sent to be read in our church the purpose of the meeting was not stated, consequently there was a small attendance. Thirty-nine, however, are known to hav voted against it. It is claimed that sixty were in favor of it, but this is very doubtful, as a number of names were put to the petition who were not present, and others say that they signed through threats and promises. The real mind of the tribe was shown on a subsequent occasion when, the matter being put to vote, one hundred and thirty-four men voted that they did not desire the Roman church, and the forty declined to vote.

"It is this same influence that is in a great measure responsible for the condition of affairs at present. The Catholics want Jennings retained, and are said to be secretly egging the Indians on to create such a row as will, it is hoped, lead to his return."

People who are best acquainted with matters on the reservation predict trouble when Mr. Kelsey takes the management of affairs, and the secretary of war has ordered troops to be in readiness to go to the reservation.

There is no need of saying anything further. Religious sects always hav and always will fight among themselvs and get others into trouble. They are thoroughly selfish, caring more for their own aggrandizement than for anything else, and natural consequences follow their acts. It costs very little to educate an Indian sufficiently to become a good Christian, and the government pays the sects well for their efforts. But the sects return the favor by attempting to deprive the government of all power over its own wards. It will be a bright day for the Indians when the government takes them away from the churches, and educates them itself.

Mr. Heywood Convicted by One Court.

From the report of Mr. Heywood's trial in the United States district court, reprinted on another page, from the Boston papers, our readers will get a good idea of the way he was convicted as per schedule made by Wanamaker. Judge Carpenter seems to be a very rough tool to carry out even such tyrannical purposes. The judge's charge, which we will print next week, left the jury little room for discretion, and they returned the verdict of guilty after being out but a few minutes. The O'Neil letter was removed from their consideration on a technicality of law, and conviction was had on the Word of April, 1889, and March, 1890. It is a curious fact that the articles complained of in these numbers were both written by women—the earlier one by Mrs. Heywood; the latter by an anonymous "Mother"—and neither one of them should ever hav been printed.

After his conviction Mr. Heywood moved for a new trial, and the motion will be considered at Judge Carpenter's convenience. Meanwhile, the defendant is on trial in the state court for practically the same offense for committing which he has been convicted in the United States court. His bail bond is $1,000, and his trial occurs as this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is being distributed to its subscribers.

One significant thing developed in the United States trial is the power the post-office department has assumed. Wanamaker's tool, Deacon Gregory, laid it down as law that publishers of papers could and should send proofs of their publications to the department for decision as to their mailability. This is precisely the censorship long established in Russia, and it is a new departure for our government to copy the rules of that despotic administration. We do not believe that Wanamaker can find any law for this ruling. Postmasters are allowed to examin second-class mail matter to see that the postal revenue is not being defrauded, but there is nowhere statutory power to pass upon the morality of the printed papers. That must be decided by the courts. A postmaster cannot be a jury all by himself, and every man has the constitutional right to a jury trial before being condemned as a criminal. This Presbyterian censorship is a thousand times more dangerous to the welfare of the people than all the obscenity Mr. Heywood will print.

Mr. Heywood and his friends will fight both the United States and the state cases to the limit allowed by law, and the end is not yet.

A Sample Christian.

Raising hogs and practicing Christianity does not seem to improve the temper of Mr. John P. Trautman, of Hamilton, Butler county, O., if we may judge by the following communication:

"COMBINATION HERD OF POLAND-CHINA HOGS.

"JOHN P. TRAUTMAN, HAMILTON, O.,
"JOHN R. VINNEDGE & SON, HOPE, IND., } Proprietors.

"HAMILTON, O., May 15, 1890.

"MR. E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER:

"I Received a Sample Copy of your paper a few days ago. But hav no use for any such journal. and think it is a disgrace to our government that the Publication of such a paper is carried on under its jurisdiction. I think it is time to put a stop to all such work if we Expect or wish Peace and prosperity to crown our land Brother stop. think. and Reform your ways Before to late. JOHN P. TRAUTMAN."

We sympathize with our Christian friend, but unless the combination between Senator Blair, Frances Willard's Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Sabbath Union, the National Reform Association, and Reformed Presbyterians, succeeds in getting the national and state legislation it is after we do not see how THE TRUTH SEEKER can be stopped.

What a delightful country this would be if all the people were hog-raising John P. Trautmans!

Editorial Notes.

THE ministers of Oakland, Cal., are gathered together to find out whether the Rev. Dr. Stratton, ex-president of Mills College, hugged and kissed one of his female teachers after she had retired for the night. Reporting the fact of the gathering, Freethought says: "But suppose that in the midst of these proceedings some clergyman with a quickened conscience should arise and say: 'Brethren, how many are there of us here present who never committed the offense charged against Dr. Stratton? Let us pray that the miraculous power of God may cause the record of each to be written upon his forehead.' Then what a scrambling there would be for hats!" Not so, dear brother, not so. There is not one of these ministers who does not know that the Lord cannot brand their foreheads with a scarlet letter; they hav no faith at all in miracles, and their hats would remain under their seats, unless some of the ministers thought they could make a raise on them at the sign of the three golden balls. The Methodists are not afraid of the Lord; but they keep a sharp lookout for fear their wives may catch them.

A BAPTIST clergyman of Maine has risen to implore his brethren to be no longer idiots, but to become men and pay their poll tax. He says that it is quite common for towns to exempt clergymen from the payment of a poll tax, and inasmuch as the statute imposes the tax on all excepting "paupers and idiots," he does not think the courtesy of exemption complimentary to the craft.

IT is generally known that the Protestant pietists of Canada are pretty pious, but the following card in the Montreal Daily Witness is unique, in its depth of superstition, even for them:

CALL TO PRAYER.

In view of the approaching elections all members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the province of Quebec are requested to observe Tuesday, June 10th, as a day of Special Prayer, asking:

1. That voters may be wisely guided in their choice of candidates.
2. That those who are elected may be true to their promises of supporting any prohibitory measure that may be brought before the House.
3. That the time may soon come when the sale of liquor shall be no longer under the protection of law.

ELIZABETH MIDDLETON, Hon. President.
ELLEN G. FOSTER, Prest. Dom. W. C. T. U.
MARY E. SANDERSON, Prest. Quebec Prov. W. C. T. U.
J. E. DOUGALL, Prov. Supt. Special Calls to Prayer.

Montreal, May 29, 1890.

We hav not learned whether the Lord helped the "superintendent of special calls to prayer" and his friends or not. In the same issue of the same journal there is a letter to the editor from a minister which for pharisaical self-righteousness and general religious insolence is also unique. The writer says: "I notice in the report of the visit of the duke and duchess of Connaught to Niagara Falls that they hav taken liberties with the Christian Sabbath, which will cause God's displeasure to rest upon our land, if we ministers of the gospel and Christian people of the Dominion of Canada keep silence about it. It is a sad matter that a duke and duchess of our British nation should set such an ungodly example before the people of our dominion. I do trust the religious press will speak out on this matter, that our skirts may be freed from the guilt of the public Sabbath desecration. I am a lover of 'principles of righteousness, which exalt a nation.'" Canada has some queer people within her borders!

THE attack upon the Roman Catholic church which the National League for the Protection of American Institutions organized itself to make is going bravely on. The initial public meeting of the League was held here a few days ago, and the Protestant bigots composing it told some plain and unpalatable truths about their Catholic brethren. Col. R. C. Hawkins was the principal speaker at the meeting. "When I first came to New York in 1851," said Mr. Hawkins, "we had a gentleman for mayor. The members of the board of aldermen were also gentlemen. But soon after 1851 the decadence began. The Catholics then began to get in their influence. They found that they had a commodity to sell to the politicians. The compensation is shown by the two blocks on Fifth avenue, occupied by their cathedral and their orphan asylum. This property is worth $6,000,000, and cost the Catholics almost nothing." Colonel Hawkins declared that the term "religious institution" is a misnomer when applied to the Catholic church. He said that that church is a purely human institution, seeking to govern the world by the acquisition of property and the use of political influence. He referred to the attempt of Maximilian to found an imperial government in Mexico as the first attempt to seize this continent. South America next came under the eye of the Vatican, and Canada is now in a fair way of being captured for the church. "In this country the peril is great. What the Roman hierarchy has lost in Europe in the last decade, it has more than gained in America." The speaker said that Italy has shaken off the shackles of Rome. Austria, France, and even Spain, are more free from her power than for years; but America is the Mecca of all Catholic aspirations. In 1851, Colonel Hawkins said, the Roman church had only between three and four thousand members in this city, and owned property worth only $1,500,000. Now there are eighty churches, attended by five hundred thousand people every Sunday. There are five hundred priests, seventy-four educational establishments, one hundred parochial schools, and the estimated value of the real estate under the control of the Catholic church is $30,000,000. The ease with which the Catholic Protectory obtains $264,000 from the city per year, and the Roman Catholic Foundling Asylum $261,000, was declared to be a disgrace to an American city. Referring further to the government of this city, Colonel Hawkins said: "The political degradation of this community is without parallel in the history of the world, and it is due to the Irish Catholic vote. Wherever you find the Catholic influence you find political jugglery and robbery. Children alive to-day will liv to see that power dominant in this country. It will elect congressmen, senators, the president, and rule the United States." Colonel Hawkins wisely said nothing about the vast grabs of real estate and cash made by the Protestants, but that topic will also come up for discussion when our legislature can be induced to consider the subject of religious thievery. Meanwhile, every accusation he made against the Roman Catholic hierarchy stands true, and people should think it over.

Letters from Friends.

ARMSTRONG, IA., June 2, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2, for which send me your book of the pictures by Heston. PETER H. BURT.

WEST FARMINGTON, June 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2. Please send one of the cartoon books as soon as they are ready. A. H. WEEKS.

NEW CASTLE, PA., June 7, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $2, for which please forward "The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book" as soon as convenient.

Yours truly, A. W. THOMPSON.

MT. HURON, N. Y., June 7, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, and send the "Pictorial Text-Book" to the friend's address inclosed, and oblige,

G. W. SMITH.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $2 for the "Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book," advertised in THE TRUTH SEEKER. JOHN SMYER.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, and please be good enough to send a copy of "The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book." I wish every success to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and believe me,

Yours truly, W. JOHNSTON.

NORTH HURON, N. Y., June 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I sent you a postal requesting you to send me the cartoon book when ready. To-day I send inclosed the money for myself, and also $2 for the book to the friend's address inclosed. T. W. SMITH.

DENVER, COL., April 16, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $3. Send the pictorial arguments against the church and the "Age of Reason and Examination of the Prophecies" and the ANNUAL for 1890. Hurrah for Heston and success to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Yours for progress, I. N. SHORE.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., June 7, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will please find $5, for which you will please send me when completed the book of pictures. Use the balance to help continue the pictures in your valuable and much read paper. "The Lord helps those that help themselvs." ALBERT STEVES.

STONY FORD, N. Y., June 3, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I believe the greatest pleasure I hav in this world is reading THE TRUTH SEEKER, and when it comes to hand Saturday night so I can hav it for my Sunday reading, why, I am as happy as a man of my age, sixty-nine, can well be. No ghosts or goblins, no Gods or devils, no heaven or hell, bother my brain. W. T. GALLOWAY.

DUCK LAKE, MICH., June 6, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav not been able to get even one new subscriber. The general tone of the paper is grand. I believe THE TRUTH SEEKER is doing a good work and should be in every family. The illustrations prompt thought and a desire to investigate, and should be continued. All ridiculous sayings and acts should be presented to the people in their true light. J. A. COURTRIGHT.

BIG CREEK, GA., June 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am traveling and see several hundred men every week, and I feel an interest in Moses Harman and want to help him all I can. Please send me about three or four blank petitions and I will scatter them abroad, and keep one myself and hav it filled out. I want to hav the pleasure of signing my name to help a man gain his liberty that deserves it as much as Mr. Harman does.

J. M. MORTON.

CASCADE LOCKS, ORE., June 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: As I do not wish to miss a single copy, herewith please find $5 to renew my subscription and for one new subscriber. This is the best I could do, but we are going to hav Putnam with us the 24th and 25th of this month. Probably then I can get some more. Do not stop Heston, as I think the cartoons do more good than harm, especially the one on the front page April 9th. C. F. KUNATH.

OTTAWA, KAN., June 6, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been trying to get a new subscriber, but hav not yet succeeded, and cannot wait longer. This seems to be a pretty hard place for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Most of the brethren do not like it, as it does not agree with the old stories that there must be no doubt about. The pictures seem to hurt the worst, and are just the thing, and I am glad they are to continue. The picture book I must hav, and shall send for it soon. SALEM FOUTS.

GAYLORD, MICH., June 2, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: What are your figures for the work by Mr. Bennett, "The Truth Seeker Around the World?" Will you kindly send me a catalog of your publications? It is a source of gratification to all noble-minded Liberals to observe the spirited and aggressiv propaganda of Agnosticism. The warfare of science against the traditional absurdities of ancient and medieval epochs progresses vigorously, and the time is not far distant when, from the lofty hights of universal intelligence, posterity shall complacently look back upon the filth and decay of creeds, ministerialism, and all the vile superstitions that hav darkened, in every age and clime, the intellectual footsteps of mankind. I inclose you $3.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and take this opportunity of expressing my warmest approval of the eloquent Heston's Voltairean attacks on the church. ROBERT PHILLIPS.

IPAVA, ILL., May 19, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: You can rely upon me as a life subscriber. Times are close here, and somehow people will not subscribe for that kind of literature, so I hav been unable to procure you any names, but I scatter my papers round where I think they will do the most good. As for the pictures, I think they are excellent, and I would not do without them for twice the cost. Let us hav the pictures by all means. Success to Brother Heston, Brother Peck, and my old and esteemed friend and neighbor, "Colonel Bob." Put me down for a copy of the book of cartoons when ready.

T. P. DUNCAN.

CANON CITY, COL., May 30, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In response to the request of Mr. Dawes, of Oregon, concerning Liberal schools, I will say that I believe the establishment of such schools is one of the most pressing needs of our cause, and I will throw in my mite for this purpose. But it seems to me that Mr. Hauswirth's school in Oregon is too far from the geographical center of the country to be well patronized, and without this the school would not be self-sustaining after it should be well started. If it has to depend for a long time on donations it will be in great danger of failure. Centrally located and having a goodly number of Liberals interested and working for it all over the country, it surely ought to be a grand success.

G. P. BRENE.

S. OTSELIO, N. Y., June 1, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am pained to learn that our old veteran and faithful co-laborer in the cause of human liberty, J. H. Cook, of Columbus, Kan., is truly in need of assistance from the friends of freedom for whom he has devoted his life. He is confined with rheumatism and other ailments; is not able to teach, lecture, sell books, or do any kind of labor. His unselfish devotion to the cause of liberty is one of the chief reasons of his present distress. It has been his custom through life to giv ten cents to the cause and reserve five for himself—bad judgment vs. noble principle. He has done much service in clearing the way through the Dismal Swamp of Christian intolerance, and I trust all his friends will look in their pocket-books and see if they can find ten cents, or even $10, they can forward directly to him, at Columbus, Cherokee county, Kan. M. P.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., June 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I see from Freethought you are receiving money for the Moses Harman case, and inclose $1. While I am an absolute Freethinker, I came some years ago to the fixed conclusion that the problem we hav to settle as precedent to all possibility of a true, genuin exercise of free speech, is economic freedom. To make independent thinkers on moral questions out of factory slaves is hopeless. Therefore I stick to economics, and wish others would do so. This Harman business is, however, more than usually flagrant, and if I can scrape up any more dollars I shall send them along. Of course I here hav an everlasting drain on me. I am lecturing and traveling all the while in a country where towns are like needles in a bale of hay, and railroad fares all the traffic will stand. Please send along one of the petitions. Fraternally, W. C. OWEN.

COALING, ALA., June 3, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Do you think it will be possible for the keepers of the prison to keep Mr. W. E. Reid in prison? What will hinder him from calling those spirits to his aid? When they can get between sealed slates and sealed letters, and move tables that four men handle with difficulty, don't you know they can get into the keyhole and shove the bolts back? Besides, why did he not get them to giv a manifestation of themselvs in court and just jerk that judge out of his seat? It has always puzzled me why they don't do something useful. But they don't seem to care a straw for their friends, any more than Christ did for his. Now, that does not suit me. If I was to liv again, and was that way, I had as soon not be, and if I do liv again I want a nice little woman and some babies and a farm and then I am willing to sweat for them. I will close, hoping your editorials may grow longer and Peck's articles oftener. H. J. WARD.

UNITED STATES MILITARY HOME, WIS., June 7, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: None of the "Letters from Friends" in THE TRUTH SEEKER pleases me so greatly as that of Mr. John Downes, of Steubenville, O., in the issue of May 31st. It has the right ring, and every word in regard to the machinations of that political machine known as the church of Rome is the infallible truth.

If the members of Congress desire to hand down to future generations the freedom handed down to us, they must place the people of all nations on the same footing they hav placed the people of China on—none to land on these shores for the purpose of making this country a place of residence.

For several years past I hav been under the impression that we are not far distant from a religious war. If such should occur it would be confined to the northern section of the Union, and as the report of the first gun reverberates through the land the Confederate States of America will resurrect, and nothing can prevent them from being acknowledged as a free, sovereign, and independent power; thus the grand fabric bequeathed to us by our sires will be shattered into fragments. CHAUNCY BROWN.

ROCHESTER, MICH., June 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 31st I find a letter from W. J. Skidmore, Skidmore, Mo., criticising my statements concerning Kansas City, Kan., etc., in my article in a previous number of your paper. He says: "I believe that Liberals, above all others, should not use assertions of their ignorance as actual facts." That is a good one. In this case it evidently means myself. I accept it and acknowledge my mistake, sincerely regretting that it is not the first one of my seventy odd years' standing.

But, in the mean time, I am a little consoled in noticing that, while the question raised by THE TRUTH SEEKER Editor was as to the truthfulness of the Herald reporter's article concerning the late woman suffrage voting in Kansas, Brother Skidmore—like my two previous friendly critics, Geo. Wilson, of Lexington, Mo., and J. H. Wood, of Detroit, Mich.—has been quite clear of substantially indorsing it, as far as I hav seen.

I might add that Rand, McNally & Co.'s "Atlas of the World," published in Chicago the fore part of the last decade—in which Kansas City, Kan., is represented as a mere nameless suburb of Kansas City, Mo., depending on it even for its mail—was the principal occasion for my mistake in that direction. The number of chartered cities in Kansas was a conjecture of mine, and, undoubtedly, baseless. Gentlemen, I thank you.

Now, admitting all that is claimed for Kansas Cities by my kind critics—and I am not in a mood to question an iota of it—will some one, if he can, please meet the question direct, and show that the New York Herald reporter's article, copied in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 19th, was a truthful statement about the woman suffrage vote in Kansas, and not a fabrication and mean fling? C. H. GREENE.

ORANGE CITY, June 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say a little word in regard to the foreigners question discussed by Mr. Downes and "Mugwump." Being one of the foreigners myself, and living in an emphatically foreign settlement, the question touches me nearly.

I hav seen a body of about thirty foreigners not one of whom knew one word of English, who never heard about the Constitution of the United States, whose only reading is an impossibly stupid little religious paper published in a foreign language, stick out their horny claws toward the ceiling of the courtroom, while a clerk of courts muttered a lot of gibberish that a nativ could not understand, and by that solemn act the whole gang was transformed all at once into intelligent and worthy citizens and voters of this our so-called glorious republic, and whenever an occasion arises that their vote shall be required for any church cause, they will cheerily and consistently help to vote the Constitution to hell.

If law is good for anything—and I doubt it, because if for the general good, it certainly would be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court—a law should be passed requiring:

Ten years' residence in this country; ability to read, write, and speak the English language;

Knowledge of the Constitution of the United States;

Any foreigner that has not grit enough and is not interested enough in the welfare of his adopted country to pass the above examination, after ten years' residence, should certainly not be allowed to take part in determing the fate of others by the intelligent way of majority vote.

A. LESPINASSE.

AMERICAN FALLS, IDA., June 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing in your issue of May 3d Mr. Wettstein's letter in relation to matter and its forces, I would like to ask him, what created matter? Did it always exist, or does it contain some inherent element or principle that has the power of procreating? There is no beginning without a force, spirit, or what you will, to enforce that beginning. Do you not know there is yet to be discovered by scientists an unknown element or force that causes life, that causes matter to create thought, and the absence of which causes life or decay? The improvements in the electric fluid may lead to the discovery of that unknown God. The undiscovered element that causes the grain of wheat to grow, a rose to bloom, may be one and the same that produces thought—that infinit force that produces the eloquence of Demosthenes, the statesmanship of Gladstone, or the inventiv genius of an Edison. We are but "children of a larger growth," and the schoolboy of 1990 will jest at the science, philosophy, and religion of his ancestors of to-day. As Pope says:

> Know then this truth, presume not God to scan,
> The proper study of mankind is man.

The man of to-day is a vast improvement on the Jewish God. For he, according to biblical accounts, made this part of the United States, the Great American Desert, fit only for the home of the tarantula, centipede, etc. But man comes along, sinks artesian wells, constructs great dams across mountain canyons, digs immense canals, carries water hundreds of miles, makes the desert bloom like a garden, raises the biggest Murphys and the finest fruits in the world. God could not do it, but man can. The Mormons here are the best type of a religious people that I know of. I think Brigham Young a far abler man than Jesus Christ. They are honest, benevolent, and hav that proper degree of ignorance that goes so far to make a devout and credulous member of any religious sect. JAMES BROWN.

ROGERS, ARK., June 22, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The Rogers Secular Union publishes a home paper, Light Bearer. This paper is read in our regular monthly meetings. We inclose a communication from Pauline, Ark., with the request that you publish it.

H. M. MCGAUGHY, Editor Light Bearer.

PAULINE, ARK., May 24, 1890.

FOR "LIGHT BEARER:" Friends, Brothers: Your Secular Union is an oasis in an Arkansas desert. Among all the organizations of the state none are so valuable. By the side of it, politics, Brothers of Freedom, Wheels, Alliances, dwindle into insignificance. For we must hav perfect freedom of thought or liv and die slaves. From the time the Jew's God cursed Adam for wanting to investigate mankind hav been required to believe and obey. Semi-barbarian nations believing their God possessed of human passions—anger, revenge, and persecution—hav sent fire and sword through the world and by torture tried to extinguish reason. And how well they hav succeeded. And they stand ready to-day, if they had the power, to crush investigation and ostracise Freethought. Why, even the meek and lowly Galilean said, "I am come to bring fire upon the earth." "And those of my enemies who would not that I should reign over them bring hither and slay them before me."

Who wants the Constitution amended—the Sunday laws enforced—the Bible used as a text-book in the free schools? Christians. They hav gone into politics, invaded legislativ halls, besieged the capitol, and stand ready with their millions of names asking for legislation in their behalf. They are trying to muzzle the press by threats of boycotting. Their church property goes untaxed and still they are not satisfied.

Then, brothers of the Rogers Secular Union, never falter. Your cause is a good one. The principles for which you are contending will liv when priestcraft, superstition, and tyranny shall hav passed away.

Work for the Nine Demands of Liberalism, taxation of church property, and the entire separation of church and state. All religions die hard. And the Christian religion is no exception. They hav mustered all their hosts against advancing Freethought; but even Sunday-schools, evangelists, and money cannot stop the progressiv mind of the nineteenth century. There are doubters in the church, and they are thinking about leaving the old craft, and may hav already stepped out on terra firma.

DR. W. R. BACHELOR.

TRENTON, TEX., June 3, E.M. 290.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a long, faithful, and punctual supporter of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and a fearless, outspoken friend of Freethought at all times and on all proper occasions. Though humble in circumstances, I am proud to feel that I am living among the great minds of this century; that I am permitted to add my mite to push on the car of progress, contribute to the overthrow of ecclesiasticism, and assist my fellow-man to escape from that mental, moral, social, and political degradation into which he has been plunged for thousands of years by the king and the priest. It is gratifying to know that Freethought is making steady and permanent advances in the noble state of Texas. In July next the Liberals will hav a grand gathering in Waco. Come, see, and be with us. This meeting will do much good. It will unify and strengthen, and lead, it is hoped, to a general organization of Freethinkers throughout the state. Organization we must hav or continue to work at great disadvantages. I am proud to see the North, Northwest, and West rallying to the call for organization. Through it we must get Liberal and modern thought literature before the public. The church knows the great advantages of organization, and spares no means to feed the public mind on reading matter suited to its aims and purposes. Most of the Southern states will ultimately be Liberalized and Secularized, but their redemption to Freethought will be a comparativly slow process for some years to come. The curse of slavery and its universal concomitant, excessiv cotton growing, keeps the masses in bodily, mental, and social bondage. I often think the world would hav been much further advanced and better every way had every slave ship and every vessel bearing cotton sent to America found a resting-place in the bottom of the sea. But the South will not always be a slave to the cotton production. She will diversify her crops. She will build up manufactures. She will gradually diminish her acreage in cotton and consequently find more time for the education of her children. With improved educational facilities will come greater general mental culture. A new and improved Liberalized literature will find its way into every family. Then, and not till then, can the South be set free from ecclesiasticism. Not till then will her men, and especially her priest-ridden women, cease to read books better suited to the seventeenth than the present century.

I am glad to see the cartoons still accompany THE TRUTH SEEKER. Their sight makes the whining, white-cravated crew howl with indignation; the starving wolf will howl and so may they.

T. H. MANGUM.

BOZEMAN, MONT., May 22, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Being a Christian with a superabundance of grace, and, perhaps, a slight admixture of sanctification, in view of the deep interest our countrymen are just now taking in the God-in-the Constitution question, I hav thought possible a suggestion which if put in practice may lead to a permanent and satisfactory solution of the problem; as follows. At our next presidential election, let the lost and reprobate sinners who are opposed to a revision so desirable, who think a three-lettered name added to our Constitution so objectionable, select as candidates two of our most eminent and popular statesmen; nominate one for president and the other for vice-president. We, the Christian party, on the other hand, will nominate God for president, and Talmage for vice-president. Characteristically dull as Infidels are intellectually, it is absurd to suppose, or even for a moment think, they will not perceive the commendable nature of this proposition. I will not alone furnish a desirable solution to the entire question, but in case God should be elected, no one can estimate the immeasurable blessings that would flow. Gentle reader, I pray you meditate: Abraham, secretary of state; Jacob, at the head of the treasury department; David, secretary of the interior; Joshua, or Anthony Comstock, secretary of war; Elijah, postmaster-general; while Solomon, no doubt, would do credit to the nation as attorney-general. And who would beat Cain at the head of the agricultural department, providing he can be found, a task apparently not difficult, owing to the fact that he is especially marked? Now, when you bear in mind it is merely the presidential team and cabinet officers that are named above, and then think of a civil service filled with angels, hide your heads in shame, and rejoice that a second Moses has arisen to lead you out of a political wilderness. Illiterate and ignorant Infidels may look upon the writer as a "crank" who knows not whereof he speaks, but when I remind them that I speak with some degree of authority they can again hang their heads in shame. In closing, I may remark that should the worldlings, by chance, elect their candidates, we will in that case straightway revise our creeds, and if possible place them on a plane of common sense, a strain which in all probability they will not stand. When considered in this light the absolute necessity of the election of our candidates becomes apparent, rendering, as it would, a revision of our creeds unnecessary.

BLARNEY BENT.

NEW YORK, May 30, 1890.

FELLOW TRUTH SEEKERS: This is Decoration day, and, having nothing else to do, I will decorate our glorious old TRUTH SEEKER with a little truthful common sense, by quoting from my revised Bible that which, as one of the revisions, I hav written upon the eleventh page of the blank leaves in the latter part of that fiendish, filthy old book. Here it is:

To further prove, clearly, conclusivly, and unmistakably, to any honest, rational, candid, inquiring, and ordinarily intelligent mind, that this conglomeration of lies called the holy Bible was concocted for the purpose of scaring, by and through abuse—blackmail—the people of the world into submission to, and for the fostering, protecting, sustaining, and the perpetuation of, kings, emperors, czars, and popes, we hav but to read and study it closely. "Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause." This means that you shall stand by the rich, in the courts and in all other places, as do the priests, preachers, and the lawyers. See Ex. xxiii, 3. "Thou shalt not steal" (Ex. xx, 15). It does not say thou shalt not rob, subjugate, or enslave thy fellow-man. But it does sanction, nay, it commands, all of these higher barbarities and fiendish crimes that are committed by kings, by emperors, by popes, and by other rich and powerful rascals of the world; and usury, too. See Ex. xxi, 6, 21; Lev. xxv, 44-46; all of Num. xxxi; Judges xiv, 19; Matt. xxv, 27; Luke xix, 23; and hundreds of other passages in this infamous Bible. The poor, if they get any surplus at all, must steal it, since they hav not the power to rob or the wit to cheat. Therefore "thou shalt not steal."

The poor dupe is told to "resist not evil" (Matt. v, 39), but no matter what infamous imposition may be perpetrated against or foisted upon you, you must "submit yourselvs to the powers that be, for they are ordained of God." See Rom. xiii, 1, 2; and 1 Peter ii, 13. Washington and his compeers knew this, but they disregarded, disrespected, and scoffed at such villainous Christian fiendishness, resisted the fiendish Christian king of England, George III., and established the greatest republic the world has ever known. May Christianity never destroy it!

In Matt. vi, 9-12, the monarchical gush teaches the poor benighted dupe to pray for monarchy. "Our father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name." Now, couched in the ordinary language of our time, that means to say, Father, Son, Holy Ghost & Co., who are somewhere out in space, may the style of your firm be sacred. Then comes the first, because to kings the most important, petition in the infamous Lord's prayer. Here it is, "Thy kingdom come [not thy republic, democracy, commonwealth, or commune, but thy kingdom] on earth." Now, the man who honestly, earnestly, seriously, and sincerely prays for and desires the establishment of a kingdom on this earth, is a monarchist, and cannot be a true and worthy citizen of any republic, democracy, commonwealth, or commune. If he prays for a monarchy without considering the signification of his words, and does not mean what he says, he is a hypocrit, a mere babbler, and if he will babble on a subject so serious, what may we expect of him in a jury box, or on a judge's bench? No wonder there is so much corruption in the courts throughout the Benighted States! No republic can long endure wherein Christianity is permitted to receive sufficient sustenance to enable it to destroy the republic. As was the cry of Garrison, Lincoln, and other Rationalists—abolitionists of chattel slavery, the twin brother to Christianity, mental slavery—"A house divided against itself cannot stand." Christianity must go, or the great republic must go down forever! Hear ye this my racket! "Emperor"—usurper—Maximilian was placed upon the throne in Mexico by the clergy. I was there and saw it, and know whereof I speak.

Having quoted this decoration from my Bible, I will now quote from the actions, which speak plainer than words, of the average American gawkies throughout the Benighted States. Here it is: "Lie there; sleep sweetly, you brave soldier [Eugene's father], we will scatter dead flowers all over your dead body in that cold grave, under our dead Constitution, every Decoration day, while the unrepentant, unconstitutionally pardoned—ex post facto—rebel who chuckles over the fact of his having slain you on the battle-field, is occupying the highest position of honor, trust, and profit under the stripes." Pursuant to the teachings of the Bible, the fiendish Christians, in the Benighted States, West Indies, and Brazil, bought and sold their own mulatto daughters and sons in slavery, and used their own pretty mulatto daughters, and those of their neighbors, by and through brute force and outrage, in servil concubinage, and all the while, financially, slavery was a failure and a curse. Is it not plain to observe why they did it? Hurrah for the Fourth of July!

This is the Decoration offering of your rational co-laborer.

G. N.

PORTSMOUTH, O., June 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The Portsmouth Secular Union is gaining ground. Rev. A. Shapiro, rabbi of the local Israelitish church, has joined with us on the basis of "no union of church and state." He is a valuable addition. He is highly intelligent, full of eloquence, and has the necessary vim and vigor to make himself felt when heard. His Liberal views are as fragrance driving back the foul superstitious drafts that waft this way. He says that for every superstitious man he wishes we had ten Ingersolls.

At the Union's first regular public meeting a paper entitled, "Some Strange and Strong Thoughts," from the pen of James H. Feust, the veteran Freethinker of this region, was read. He took the ground that Infidels and such like were not made, but like poets, sculptors, etc., were born, and he presented strong argument to prove the same. At the same meeting J. L. Freuthart, president of the Union, delivered a discourse on his childhood days, and the morals and fables that he heard and read during that happy time. It was a witty composition, calculated to knock out both gods and devils.

On the occasion of the second meeting I lectured on "church and state," presenting my matter under three heads, viz., first, evidence to show the meaning of church and state; second, evidence to show that the bravest of the brave hav stood and still stand on the platform of no union of church and state; and third, evidence showing that to-day in this country there is a practical union of the spiritual and the secular.

The third meeting was graced by the presence of Judge H. W. Farnham, a noted criminal lawyer of Ohio, who gave his own autobiography, or why he was not a Christian. The judge is always able, but on this occasion he was abler than ever before. His address was full of wit, wisdom, and eloquence. Around and about it encircled that beautiful thought, "Help for the living, hope for the dead." Vividly he presented the walk through life's narrow vale, leaving uppermost in the minds of those present the quotation, "Every cradle asks whence, and every coffin, whither."

George F. Cramer, Esq, an able young man of Henley, O., addressed the fourth meeting. His subject was "Man: His Past, Present, and Future." He handled it well, and illustrated the main conditions between savagery and civilization by means of stereopticon views.

Our next lecturer will probably be Wash Cross, first vice-president of the society. He is a good talker, and an old-timer in the ranks of Liberalism. The lecture committee are also in correspondence with Judge Juan Fullerton, of Kentucky, who will perhaps follow Mr. Cross. George Light, of Cincinnati, and John Downes, of Steubenville, are down on the list, and will address us as soon as practicable. The committee also expects to get Mrs. M. A. Freeman.

A few Sundays since Rev. F. W. Fagin, pastor of Sixth street Methodist Episcopal church, was reported by President Freuthart as having said in his pulpit that he was ready and willing to debate with any person on the subject of the transfiguration of Christ, which proves Christ the "sonship" of "God." I brought the matter before the Union, and made motion that a committee of three be appointed to wait on Rev. Fagin, accept his challenge, arrange terms, etc. Judge Farnham, J. Q Lewis, and myself were appointed the committee. We waited on the "reverend gentleman," with a result as shown in the following report:

TO THE PORTSMOUTH SECULAR UNION, Gentlemen: Your committee appointed to wait on Rev. F. W. Fagin, Esq., hav to report:

1. That the "reverend gentleman" was called upon at his residence Tuesday afternoon, May 27th.

2. That he received the committee kindly, and talked to them in a "without money and without price" manner, being, for once at least, consistent with the teachings of the lowly Nazarene.

3. That the committee's mission was stated plainly; in other words, that the Portsmouth Secular Union having been informed that he (Rev. Fagin) had recently said in his pulpit in substance this: "I am ready and willing to debate with any person on the subject of the transfiguration of Christ, which conclusivly proves Christ the 'sonship' of God," and that they had been appointed a committee to wait on him, accept his challenge, arrange terms, etc.

4. That the Rev. Fagan acknowledged having preached on the transfiguration of Christ, but explicitly and emphatically denied having offered to debate on the subject. And to substantiate his denial said: "I am opposed to public debates; it is utterly contrary to my belief. Such debates do evil to the cause." And as an illustration he told of Rev. Craighton, of Gallipolis, O., who challenged anybody for a debate on a certain constitutional amendment about to be voted on by the people of Gallia county, and who was taken up by Hon. John L. Vance to his (Creighton's) sorrow.

5. That, having thus denied in toto what he was reported as saying as to a challenge to debate, he finally asked who was the informant; that the committee presented J. L. Freuthart as that personage, and that upon learning this, Rev. Fagin at once reconsidered his answer, and prepared an exit from the uncomfortable trap he had by his own hand placed himself in, thus: "Now, perhaps I said some such thing, and hav forgotten it. As I write only a few of my sermons, and as the one in question was delivered off-hand, it may be that I said what was reported."

6. That in summing the matter up we hav not stopped at sunrise or sunset. We hav gone further and taken into consideration the life principle of this society, viz., truth and veracity. We hold that the presidential chair of our Union should be graced by one who adheres strongly and steadfastly to that principle. The question, "Did Mr. Freuthart violate it?" has been put to the test, and in so doing we find the negativ; that is to say, we find that Rev. Fagin has handled the truth very carelessly in the reported instance, and that he did by voice in his pulpit on the Sunday in question challenge to debate on the subject above stated. The committee has drawn these conclusions in this way: they hold that Rev. Fagin's denial in toto, and then the modification that followed when informed that Mr. Freuthart heard him say what was reported, is a presumptiv admission that he did say it, and that if anybody was mistaken he (Fagan) was. . . . And further, that J. M. Stockham and Edgar Woodson, the first-named a member of Fagin's church, were present and heard the challenge proclaimed as Mr. Freuthart heard it. The committee are a unit that the pastor of Sixth street Methodist Episcopal church is sadly mistaken as to his remarks, and that the president of the Portsmouth Secular Union has told the truth. This report was adopted, and ordered spread on the minutes.

We hav also appointed a committee, consisting of Judge Farnham, G. W. E. Mitchell (formerly a Presbyterian divine), and Alex. Criswell (lately converted from a Campbellite to Liberalism), to look into the matter of exempted property in our midst.

WILL S. ANDRES.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

In June.

The summer sun slants down the lane,
The lane washed clean by summer rain,
And folds within its rosy urn
Dark velvet moss and fronded fern.
The purple asters faintly sigh,
As zephyrs sweet go floating by;
The lily's breath, in soft caress,
Breathes out its life and dies to bless;
While low and still the day lies down,
Beneath a star-jeweled, starry crown.
The last low note of warbling bird
Trembles and trills ere it is heard;
And green leaves rustle overhead
Of bird and babes in downy bed;
While harps Æolian from the trees
Giv back refrain to summer breeze;
And field and sky and placid stream
Make real some remembered dream,
When fancy's pencil painted bright
Fair pictures in life's golden light.

The witching beauty of the hour,
With weird enchantment's magic power,
Holds me within its warm embrace,
Till I discern all nature's grace,
And feel her heart beat true and strong,
Forever right and never wrong!
She asks to pledge with sweet accord,
My heart to keep with her dear word,
That word so oft misunderstood,
Yet woven through and through with good.

And granting this, the lights of joy
Flame in my soul without alloy.
Above the clouds I need not soar
To find the key to heaven's door;
Nor wait till hushed is earthly din,
To see its glories ushered in.
For now I walk the pearly way,
And taste celestial joy each day;
With nature, brave, serene, and wise,
I pass straight on to paradise.
And hence, in sweetest peace I dwell,
Content to know that all is well;
That good in nature livs and moves,
And boundless love each moment proves.

Thus, through the spaces, near and far,
In darkest night or morning star,
Who will, may list the triumph song—
Eternal law cannot be wrong.

SUSAN H. WIXON.

To Elmina Drake Slenker.

My thoughts are with thee, Elmina, to-day,
I seem to see thee cheerful, though not gay;
Flitting all around among all thy flowers.
Perchance the fairies dwell amid those bowers.
In fancy I gaze on a pansy's face,
A blushing rose full of beauty and grace;
Carnations, mignonet, and immortels,
Violets, verbenas, and lily bells;
The syringa, the lilac, and snowball,
Thyself the most interesting of all.

So kind, loving, honest, faithful, and true;
Though unappreciated except by few.
Pen and tongue lashed, and almost ostracised,
Abused, misjudged, maligned, and criticised.
By zealous and pure (?) Christians arrested,
And thereby of freedom's speech divested.
Yet, still the same woman, grand and brave,
Seeking from woe humanity to save.
Teacher of all the little children dear,
The friend of them all from afar and near.

Great and good, with truest nobility,
Doing grandest deeds with facility;
Enemy to every church and creed,
Desiring from priestcraft the world all freed.
In every effort so uniting,
Ever reaching, and ever aspiring;
Loved thou art, and loved thou wilt ever be,
By the good, the true, and all who would be free.

SADIE ATHENA MAGOON.

McCoy Station, Los Angeles, Cal.

Corner Gospel.

SELF-DEPENDENCE.

Some grown people as well as little children hav a great way of leaning upon others. Is anything to be done? They like to coax some one else to do it. Are there difficulties in the way? They look for another to remove them. Now, the best way is for each person to do his own particular work. Turn resolutely about it. Take up the difficulties one by one, and turn them aside.

The more you are helped, the more assistance you will need.

Self-dependence is a great advantage in this world. There is nothing like pluck, energy, determination. Who wants to be a weakling? You wish to be strong, able, manly, womanly. Of course. The way is to learn to depend upon your own efforts. You never know what you can accomplish until you try. If failure meets you the first, second, third, or even the fourth time, you need not giv up. The fifth time you may be successful.

There was once a girl who desired to be a school-teacher. She had educated herself at severe odds. She failed to pass a successful examination before the school-board. It was humiliating. However, she wiped away the tears, and studied harder than ever.

At the next examination she failed again. It was very disappointing. She studied more, and tried again. The third time she was successful. To-day she is one of the finest teachers in the country. "Try again," is her motto. It is a good one.

Depend on your own efforts. Do your work with energy and perseverance. Learn the causes of failure and avoid them. Be truthful, earnest, honest, and hopeful, and, in the end, success awaits you. S. H. W.

A Few Plain Words Regarding "Church Taxation," by Richard B. Westbrook.

Few persons are aware of the vast amount of church property in this country exempted from taxation. The little pamphlet bearing the above title written by the president of the American Secular Union tells the whole story in a few words.

The American Secular Union is trying to do all that is possible toward equalizing all taxation, as well as to promulgate the factors of religious liberty and the equal rights of all men, women, and children.

It is a great and noble work. Parents, brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, and cousins can aid in this work by purchasing copies of this book on "Church Taxation" and circulating it everywhere. The price is but ten cents and the money goes to help the Union.

Judge Westbrook has recently written another admirable little book called, "An Open Letter to Hon. Edward M. Paxson," in which it is shown that Hon. Mr. Paxson has been cherishing some very false and foolish theories, which do not reflect much credit upon the chief-justice of the state of Pennsylvania. The ease and grace with which the author upsets and demolishes the pet ideas of an ignorant past is most delightful to contemplate. This and the book on "Church Taxation," which is already in its second edition, should be in the hands of every intelligent person in the world. The world would be the better for it. S. H. W.

Keep a Note-Book.

It is a good plan to carry about with you a little blank-book in which to write your thoughts. Many bright and original ideas are no doubt lost on account of the failure to jot them down at the moment. If you wait for a more convenient opportunity the thought is almost sure to slip from your memory and be forgotten.

Curious things that you see, dates of occurrences, memoranda, facts of observation, new thought suggested by study or reflection, are many times worthy of preservation. A bright memory will retain much, but that which is written can, with a truthful person, be depended upon. You will therefore find it of great service to carry note-book and pencil wherever you go.

A commonplace-book is also another valuable accompaniment. In this you jot down all the bright and beautiful sayings of others that you read in newspapers or books. Selections of poetry or prose that please your fancy, witty remarks, and the like, may thus be preserved, also the good and intelligent thoughts expressed by those you meet in daily conversation, as well as of authors you read, may be noted.

In this way you may come to hav a fine book of reference for instruction of yourself and others. S. H. W.

Antiquity of Electricity.

Thales, a Greek philosopher, who lived six hundred years before Christ, is said to hav known the electric properties of rubbed amber. Otto von Guericke, in 1647, constructed the first electrical machine. Franklin, in 1748, killed a turkey by electricity and roasted it on an electric jack before a fire kindled by the electric spark. Perhaps this was the earliest actual use of electricity. As long ago as 1747 electric shocks were sent over short distances. Reisen, in 1794, by using thirty-six wires, one for each letter or character, sent messages over small distances. Morse simplified the telegraph, using only one wire, instead of from thirty to thirty-six wires. His first public message was, "What hath God wrought?" This was on May 24, 1844. Two days later the Democratic convention in Baltimore nominated James K. Polk for president and Silas Wright for vice-president. Mr. Vail, Morse's assistant, telegraphed the news to Morse in the capitol. Morse told Wright, and the convention was astonished to get a dispatch from him declining the nomination. The convention wouldn't believe it and sent a committee to Washington to get reliable information. This was doubtless the first news telegram sent.

Correspondence.

WESTBORO, MASS., June 8, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for two years. I hav one brother, eleven years old. Just as soon as papa brings THE TRUTH SEEKER home, the first thing I read are the letters in the Children's Corner.

I will close for this time, hoping to see this letter in print, as it is my first one.

WILLIE MARSHALL (age eight years).

[For a little boy's first letter, it is a good one. Write again, Willie.—ED. C. C.]

OPHIR, CAL., May 29, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My papa has taught me to write and read, so that I can read the little letters from the children in the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, and write some letters for it myself, if you will be kind enough to print my letter also. I will be six years old next month, and I weigh sixty pounds. I study reading, writing, spelling, and arithmetic. I am in the third reader, and know the multiplication table up to the twelves. I hav a little brother, and his name is Robert G. Ingersoll Kaiser; and I hav one little sister; her name is Annie Delila. I am afraid my letter is getting too long. My papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER a good many years, and I like to look at the pictures. Also, I am a true little Freethinker.

CORDELIA EMELINE KAISER.

SWEDISH AND NORWEGIAN CONSULATE,
SALONICA, May 22, 1890.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: Mother and I both miss poor dear Uncle Fisk's kind letters now, it used to be such a comfort to hear from him regularly. We shall be very glad to get the book of Uncle Fisk's life you spoke of in your last letter, if Mr. Hodge will be kind enough to send it to us when it is published. Papa is now trying for a place in Persia, as his business here has been very bad and he has written for work, and as soon as he is able to find something to do we will leave Salonica for good. We are all very glad to leave it, as all the people here are very disagreeable, and we hav very few friends, hardly any, although we hav been here more than two years. There are very few English and American people here. Mother says if we do make a move, perhaps it would interest you to know about the ways and customs of the Persians. Mother is going to write you herself as soon as she has time to. Would you mind sending me some old books for reading you may hav to spare, as I hav nothing to read and cannot buy books here, nor is there a library, so I hav to depend upon my cousins and friends for books. I hav read "Apples of Gold" over and over again; so I hav all my other books. Mamma and I both think you must hav been very courageous to make a speech in public. I should very much like to hav a copy of the song you composed; perhaps some day you may be able to spare me one.

With best love from mother and myself to you, dear Miss Wixon, believe me,

Ever yours affectionately, DAISY SUTER.

A FEW WORDS TO MASTER CLARK.

FOREST HOME, CAL., May 29, 1890.

DEAR MISS WIXON AND CHILDREN OF THE CORNER: Girls, I reckon our friend Clark does not chew tobacco, doesn't smoke, and has no bad habits. If "she" copies after him why is she not on the road to him(mel) instead of to Hel ena? I suppose Clark was too generous to use the masculin word she ol. I call it his because it was coined by a Hebrew. Men hav named many bad places feminin names. Say, has he not treated Sam ('s) Son a little shabby? Overlooked his best character, and that, too, at a time when he was naming the sons. Samson claims not to be overlooked. And poor John Stown, will he ever recover like She cago (Chicago) down by the lake Miss she gan (Michigan)? But then boys hav no sympathy for the fallen. Boys' style of clothing—bah! You forget that you cried because your nurse put you in pants. Your supreme court wears gowns yet; drop in some time and see some of your simple styles when you visit Washington. And while you are so free to talk, remember you owe that gift to your mother tongue. Talk about the father of his country! Why, we hav mer maids, but there are no sir maids to bar their progress or hold them back. A few male ships and men of war and the rest of the great deep is ours. That "dad" of yours must be a sort of hydra-headed monster. I guess he is the fellow that is said to be older than his mother. Well, he "takes the cake," anyway. He has a half-brother in southern California known as "Old Sol dad" (Soledad canyon). But come now, and I will show you other fields that woman has trod. It is uphill traveling, but I will lead you. Now look at that grand highway of progress up yonder in the sky; that is the milk maid's path. The limits of it are known only to her. I think it may reach to the celestial city. All along woman's pathway in this world are to be found seeds of kindness, which justice in the coming years will weave into a jewel crown. Well, this higher path too is strewn with myriads of shining stars. Oh, sir, I tell you there is hope for the world "when womanhood awakes." Now, don't go into ecstasies over your papa, the major (ursa major), for I am told he is only a great bear. Then, you will be lost without a companion, so I will hav to giv you the dog stars. And nearly all the rest of the starry world ought to belong to us by right of possession and residence, for when you praise us, you declare that we outweigh the universe, and are angelic enough to dwell in starry spheres.

MARY V. FOSTER.

THE dull boy sometimes displays an unexpected streak of brightness. Teacher: "Which New England state has two capitals?" Boy: "New Hampshire." Teacher: "Indeed! Name them." Boy: "Capital N and capital H."

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 314 S. State st, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

IOWA.
M. L. D. Lansing, Madrid.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, Woodbine Cottage, Coit ave., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 332 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau st., New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
W. Smith, 329 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.
Emory P. Robinson, Sydney.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.
W. Wedeken, Portland, Ore.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 723 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick. Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

Please send stamp for copy of
PLAIN DEALER.
Address ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
4t24

BIBLE OF TO-DAY.

By JOHN W. CHADWICK.

This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible.

Price, $1.50.

A New Book by Helen H. Gardener.

A THOUGHTLESS YES.

The downcast eyes of timid acquiescence hav paid to impudent authority the tribute of a thoughtless yes.—R. G. Ingersoll.

CONTENTS.

A Splendid Judge of a Woman.
The Lady of the Club.
Under Protest.
For the Prosecution.
A Rusty Link in the Chain.
The Boler House Mystery.
The Time-Lock of Our Ancestors.
Florence Campbell's Fate.
My Patient's Story.

Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

FREETHOUGHT

IS IT

DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?

A SYMPOSIUM

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAMS,
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,	THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:

Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?

PRICE 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

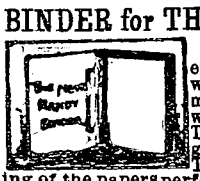
8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,



The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Charles Watts's Works.

The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of Mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.

A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.

Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.

The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which Is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.

Saints and Sinners—Which? 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Nature and the Supernatural; or, Belief and Knowledge. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3. Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.

NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.

Christianity: Defectiv and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,

OR, THE

Conflict between Reason and Superstition.

BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FESTIVAL OF ASHTAROTH.

A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews.

By A. C. MIDDLETON.

Price, ... 10 cents.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ANTICHRIST.

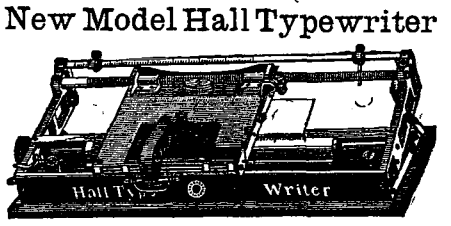
PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS.

AN ADDRESS

By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE



New York State Bar Association, at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1890.

The only Complete and Authorized Edition.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

New Model Hall Typewriter

The Best Standard Typewriter in the World. Cheap, Portable, No Ink Ribbon, Interchangeable Type in all Languages, Easiest to learn and rapid as any. Agents wanted everywhere. WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED. Address

National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. P. O. box 5159.

Send for catalog and specimens of work.

13t10

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies. For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, ... $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Every Liberal Should Read

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.

INTRODUCTION.

Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution; Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.

Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Publications.

Unless otherwise specified, all publications noticed here can be had of THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, at the prices named.

EPITOMES OF THREE SCIENCES: Comparativ Philology, Psychology, and Old Testament History. Chicago: Open Court Publishing Co. Cloth, pp. 139. Price, 75 cents.

This excellent book contains three essays, each by an authority on the subject treated. H. Oldenberg lays before us the present state and results of comparativ philology. Professor Jastrow sums up the state of things in the department of psychology. C. H. Cornell exhibits the outcome of the latest investigations of Old Testament history.

EVOLUTION: TRUE OR FALSE? By C. L. Abbott. Waco, Texas: J. D. Shaw. Paper, 54 pp. Price, 25 cents.

This pamphlet is compiled from the works of the most distinguished authorities on both sides of the question, and is designed to be a manual of the facts upon which the doctrin of Development is based. Being furnished with accurate references for every quotation and statement of fact, it provides the reader with the materials to enable him to decide for himself whether Evolution is true or false. The unique and systematic plan of this work, with its numerous tables and diagrams, renders it at once a comprehensiv and reliable handbook of organic Evolution.

FRUITS AND HOW TO USE THEM: A Practical Manual for Housekeepers, containing nearly seven hundred recipes for the wholesome preparation of foreign and domestic fruits By Mrs. Hester M. Poole. 12mo, pp. 242, cloth. Price, $1. Fowler & Wells Co., Publishers, 775 Broadway, New York.

We hav cookery books without end, but among them all there has not been a treatis making a specialty of fruits and their uses. Mrs. Poole, appreciativ of the want of a work in this special line, has earnestly set to work and carefully prepared this book. An introduction considers the value of fruits in their relation to human diet, and then the department of recipes is opened, beginning with the apple, in which we find directions for its use in nearly one hundred different ways; we are taken through a long series, inclusiv of fruit products of the temperate and tropical zones, the tamarind being the last.

FREETHOUGHT: IS IT DESTRUCTIV OR CONSTRUCTIV? A SYMPOSIUM.

The reader is requested to turn to page 168 of the March number of this magazine, and read there an extensiv notice of this symposium, composed of articles by some twenty of the ablest Liberal writers in this country, that first appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER. The Truth Seeker Company has put these articles into a beautiful paper-covered pamphlet of eighty-two pages, printed on good paper, and the price is twenty-five cents. It is for sale at this office. We consider it one of the most valuable Freethought publications that has recently been published. The questions answered by the writers are these: Is there an affirmativ, positiv, constructiv side to Freethought? If not, the reason why? If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?—Freethinker's Magazine.

THE SUPPRESSION OF CONSUMPTION. By G. W. Hambleton, M.D. New York: N. D. C. Hodges. 40 cents.

In this little volume Dr. Hambleton, president of the Polytechnic Physical Development Society of Great Britain, argues that consumption is conquerable, and sustains his argument by brief histories of several cases that hav been cured. He believes that judicious exercise under proper conditions, accompanied by specific treatment, details of which he givs, will eventually conquer the disease. Physical education, he thinks, should be made a necessary part of our system of national education. With the necessary institutions, and this system of treatment thoroughly and continuously carried out, he says, "I am certain we shall hav reduced the mortality from consumption to truly insignificant proportions before the next century has escaped from its infancy. And I hav the right to express a clear and emphatic opinion on this subject; for I myself and my patients hav unquestionably completely recovered from the disease. A great, a splendid, a noble victory over this disease lies in the hands of the profession."

THE BIBLE: WHENCE AND WHAT? By Richard B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B. Philadelphia: J. B Lippincott Co. Cloth, portrait of author, pp. 232. Price, $1.

This scholarly and ably reasoned work by the distinguished president of the Secular Union now appears in a third edition. An enumeration of the chapter headings will yield a good conception of its matter: Chap. I. Foundation of the "authorized" version of the New Testament. II. The new-version basis (1881). III. Canonicity of the scriptures. IV. Custody of the scriptures. V. Miracle, prophecy, martyrdom, and church infallibility. VI. Internal evidence. VII. Probable origin of the Old Testament. VIII. Probable origin of the New Testament books. IX. Probable origin of certain dogmas found in all religions. X. Is the Bible strictly historical or mainly allegorical? XI. Were the Jewish and Christian scriptures written before or after the pagan bibles? XII. The summing-up. XIII. Interlocutory. We recommend this book to every reader of our paper. The portrait alone will be worth the price of the volume to many Secular Union members who would be gratified to view the countenance of their chief leader against the ranks of superstition.

CHURCH HISTORY. By Professor Kurtz. Authorized translation from latest revised edition by Rev. John MacPherson, A.M. Vol. III. 12mo, 544pp. Price, per volume, $2. New York: Funk and Wagnalls.

The volume before us completes this laborious work on ecclesiastical history. It carries the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches through the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries to the present time. The learned author compares these two systems as they hav operated side by side, giving special attention to the Lutheran church, the Reformed church, the Moravians, and the various "new and fanatical sects." Coming to the nineteenth century he first takes a general survey, then calls particular attention to Rationalism and Pietism; Evangelical Union and Lutheran Separation; Evangelical Confederation, Lutheranism, Melancthonism, and Calvinism; the disputes and forms of worship; Protestantism in Germany; Home Missions and Foreign Missions. In discussing Catholicism the author considers the States of the Church; her various orders; the liberal Catholic movement; Catholic Ultramontanism; the Vatican council of 1869; the Old Catholics; Catholic theology, and the relation of the Romish church to the various countries of the world. The last 95 pages of this volume are devoted to chronological tables and a general index, covering the three volumes and adding much to their value.

MIDNIGHT TALKS AT THE CLUB. Reported by Amos K. Fiske. 16mo, vellum cloth, gilt top, $1. New York: Fords, Howard & Hulbert.

A brainy little volume, this, commending itself by aptness in expressing what many enlightened men and women are thinking, in this changeful time. The conversations, held in a quiet corner room of the Asphodel Club on Saturday nights, agreeably occupy a small "owl party" of four—"Tom Benedict," an anxious and religious-minded young husband; "Colonel Bloodgood," a vieux moustache with ruddy face, white hair, blue eyes, and an explosiv temper and manner; "Judge Gamaliel Truman," the guide, philosopher, and friend of the party; and "The Listener," who is "amang them takin' notes," and who finally concludes to "prent it." Benedict represents the conscientious and honest inheritor of the traditional, and when roused to really think and speak is no mean champion of his accepted beliefs; Colonel Bloodgood is a good-natured but aggressiv fighter of "whatever is;" Judge Truman is the chief talker, however, and his calm, serene, considerate way of discussing views from which he entirely dissents offers a refreshing contrast to the heat of most debaters. The topics are various. The party discourse on Temperance and Prohibition; they find the churchly Shepherds neglecting their true Sheep; they talk about Sunday observance, and then at large about Religion. They branch off to Political Immorality, and come back to Superstition and Worship, with objections to making a fetich of the Scriptures. They take up the question of the Irish-Americans and their divers elements of good and evil as citizens. The chief interest, however, seems to be along the religious line, and so they get back to Moses and the Prophets and Ancient Scriptures generally. They discuss in this vein the value of Human Evidence, and the Power of Personality, with applications to the foregoing topics. The papers are full of clear thought and generous feeling, expressed in attractiv guise. They will lead many to think for themselvs, who hav not seriously attempted that interesting exercise.

"Looking Forward" is a pamphlet by Prof. C. Orchardson, 82 Ashland block, Chicago. It is a presentation of the principles of Socialism, and any wishing to investigate that belief will find it a clearly written manual for the purpose. Price, 5 cents.

Charles Watts has written and printed another of his serviceable little Antichristian pamphlets. The title is, "Nature and the Supernatural; or, Belief and Knowledge." This production, like its fellow-works from the same source, is sound in reasoning and perspicuous in diction. Price, 10 cents.

The Dramatic Mirror Quarterly sends us No. 1 of its Vol. I. As its contributors are all of the first rank, we are willing to say that it will giv satisfaction to all those who turn their attention to the literature of the theater. New York: Dramatic Mirror Co. Price, one year, 85 cents; single number, 25 cents.

We feel disposed, meanwhile desiring our readers to bear in mind our own stand as to Spiritualism, to praise a certain paper devoted to exposition of that belief. Those that believe in Spiritualism and desire an organ of their views, or those that do not believe but wish to hear the other side, will not find among Spiritual periodicals a better conducted one than the Better Way. It is published in Cincinnati, at $2 per year.

"Why I am a New Churchman," is the title given a work by the Rev. Chauncey Giles. The particular ailment, out of the round of Christian diseases, that afflicts our author, seems to be the febril and decidedly discomposing one of Swedenborgianism. This is what some call the New Church. Probably our readers will be satisfied with assuming, as the reason why our friend is a New Churchman, that it is because he doesn't know any better, or because he has not read THE TRUTH SEEKER. If anyone yearns for the reasons more at length, he may send 25 cents for the book to Wm. H. Alden, 2,129 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

"The Christian Doctrin of Hell," is a pamphlet written by J. M. Wheeler and published by R. Forder, London. As the more civilized of the clergy are endeavoring to throw into obscurity their ancient doctrin of hell which is now so shocking the enlightened, the author thinks it well that these shuffling divines should be confronted with the authoritativ deliverances of their churches on the subject. Teachings regarding hell, of a character revolting in the utmost to the spirit of this age, are collected from the fathers and the founders of sects and distinguished theologians down to the present day, and here presented. Price, 10 cents.

E. P. Roe is well known as the writer of novels that convey useful information and moral incitation in an attractiv narrativ vehicle. "Nature's Serial Story" is the latest one issued by his publishers, Dodd, Mead & Co. The scene is laid in a romantic and retired country spot by the Hudson. Here a household composed of persons of varied characters and callings watch and comment on "Nature's serial story" of changing air and dress and season. The work is calculated to awaken observation of nature and inspire a love of her in "a' her shows and forms." It is illustrated with a number of engravings that bring country scenes pleasingly before one. Price, 50 cents.

Count Tolstoi's latest novel. "The Kreutzer Sonata," which exists in Russia only in manuscript (its publication having been forbidden by the czar) and has not yet appeared in book form in any language, will be published in English, in Boston, in a few days, by Benjamin R. Tucker. The novel is the boldest work yet written by the Russian master. Dealing with the questions of love and marriage, it urges a morality that is more than puritanical in its severity, while handling the delicate subject with all the frankness of the realistic school. In St. Petersburg and Moscow manuscript copies pass from hand to hand and are read aloud in literary circles.

We must commend a work published by the American Humane Education Society, 19 Milk st., Boston. It is entitled, "Black Beauty, His Grooms and Companions," and is by Miss Anna Sewell. It is the autobiography of a horse, and is very pleasing and interesting. The design of the writer and the publishers is to move the heart of the people to sympathy with their friend the horse, too often maltreated. The book has sold largely, and also has been distributed free to a considerable extent. Mrs. Wm. Appleton, of Boston, put sixteen hundred copies in the hands of Boston drivers. It is to be hoped that after a century or two more of the humanizing operation of civilization, the citizens of Christian countries will get to be nearly as kind to animals as the inhabitants of India and Japan. Owing to the manner of publication of this "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the horse, buyers will send for it, not to us, as they may in other cases, but to the publishers in Boston. The book has 245 pages and is sold at 25 cents.

The names of Herbert Spencer, President Andrew D. White, and Hon. David A. Wells, as contributors to the June Popular Science Monthly, are a sufficient guarantee that this is a remarkably strong number. President White, in a paper on the "Antiquity of Man and Egyptology," shows how Egyptian chronology has been cramped and twisted to make it agree with the belief that the first man was created just four thousand and four years before Christ. Mr. Spencer, in his concluding chapters on "Justice," carefully considers the sentiment and the idea of justice. Mr. Wells contributes a description of certain "Evidences of Glacial Action in Southeastern Connecticut," accompanied by pictures of some of the immense bowlders which are thickly strewed over this region. Prof. C. H. Henderson has the fourth of his illustrated articles on glass-making in this number. It is entitled, "In the Atelier of a Glass Worker," and tells how the beautiful designs are produced that we admire in engraved, etched, and cut glass. "Atmospheric Dust," by Dr. William Marcet, is an account of some kinds of the fine particles that float in the air, and of the part they play in the phenomena of nature. So much has been written on the esthetic and sentimental aspects of architecture, that it is refreshing to come upon Mr. Barr Ferree's paper on "Utility in Architecture," in which the tendency to subordinate use to looks is vigorously handled. Under the title, "Education and Crime," Rev. A. W. Gould replies to an article in the January Monthly, by Benjamin Reece, and maintains that there has been most increase of punishments for crime where there is least education. In the "Affirmativ Side of Agnosticism," James A. Skilton proposes the word "metagnosticism" (knowing beyond) as a substitute for Agnosticism, and publishes letters from Herbert Spencer, Professor Huxley, and Dr. Lyman Abbott, to whom he had submitted his proposition. There is an illustrated descriptiv article on "Tin and its Nativ Land," by M. Brau de St. Pol Lias. Mrs. Fanny D. Bergen contributes the third instalment of her "Animal and Plant Lore," comprising many curious popular superstitions. Prof. La Roy F. Griffin describes the "Natural and Artificial Cements" now in the market, and tells the method of testing them. There is a sketch, by M. Léon Frédéricq, of Theodor Schwann, the discoverer of the cell theory in biology, with a portrait. In the correspondence department President Hill of the University of Rochester defends himself at length against the charge of misrepresenting Herbert Spencer, made in the previous number, and his defense is thoroughly reviewed in the Editor's Table. The other departments are full of interesting bits of scientific matter. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Fifty cents a number; $5 a year.

IRON-CLAD AND MANNA SERIES

IRON-CLAD SERIES.

1 Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
2 Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake.. 5
4 Influence of Christianity on Civilization. Underwood..... 25
7 Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Mueller... 10
8 Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison..... 15
9 Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 10
10 Epidemic Delusions. Marvin..... 10
11 Philosophy of Spiritualism. Marvin..... 50
12 Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural, and Portrait.. 25
13 Essay on Miracles. David Hume..... 10
14 Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
15 Were Adam and Eve our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
16 Why do Men Starve? Chas. Bradlaugh.. 5
17 Logic of Life Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. George J. Holyoake. 10
18 A Plea for Atheism. Chas. Bradlaugh.... 10
19 Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake.. 5
20 Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake..... 5
21 Defence of Secular Principles. C. Watts.. 5
22 Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts..... 5
23 The Christian Deity. Charles Watts..... 5
24 Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts.. 5
25 Freethought and Mod. Progress. Watts. 5
26 Christianity: Its Nature, and Influence on Civilization. Chas. Watts..... 5
28 Thoughts on Atheism. Austin Holyoake. 5
29 Is there a Moral Governor of the Universe? Austin Holyoake..... 5
30 Philosophy of Secularism. Chas. Watts... 5
31 Has Man a Soul? Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
38 Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
39 Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
40 Poverty: Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H.. 10
42 Science and Bible Antagonistic. Watts... 5
43 Christian Scheme of Redemption. Watts. 5
44 Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10
47 Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5

MANNA SERIES.

1 Original Manna for "God's chosen."..... 5
3 New Life of David. Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
4 Why I was Excommunicated. Barnard... 20
5 200 Questions Without Answers..... 5
6 Dialogue between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin..... 10
7 Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian..... 10
8 Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake..... 5
9 New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
10 A Few Words about the Devil..... 5
11 New Life of Jacob..... 5
12 Daniel, the Dreamer. Austin Holyoake... 10
13 Specimen of the Bible: Esther. Holyoake 10
14 Acts of the Apostles: A Farce. A. H.... 10
15 Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. H. 10
16 Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
17 Who Was Jesus Christ? C. Bradlaugh... 5
18 What Did Jesus Teach? C. Bradlaugh.... 5
19 New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5
20 New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh... 5
21 A Secular Prayer. Holyoake. Per doz... 10

On orders for Iron Clad and Manna we will send $1.10 worth for $1; $2.50 worth for $2; $5 worth for $3, and $10 worth for $5.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

BY JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 Cents.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Due Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps..... 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Biblo-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell. 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Capphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 1
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology..... 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wan Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
10 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson..... 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
13 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. ROSSITER RAYMOND.
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth. By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development. By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR HOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

tf

SPECIAL SALE OF WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2.50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4.50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.00; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels, $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart-shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can hav their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Chicago Secular Union
Meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,
Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Minneapolis Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; LEROY BERRIER, Sec.

Elizur Wright Secular Union
Of Alliance, O., meets the first and fourth Sundays of each month at Independent Church, at 10:30 A.M. Free discussion on all Liberal subjects. Subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator are solicited. R. G. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club
Meets every Sunday at 2 P.M. in Grand Army hall, Main street, Walla Walla, Washington. Science Lectures.—Free Discussions.—Original and Selected Readings and Poems. A large valuable library is at the service of members and friends. C. B. REYNOLDS, Pres.; A. W. CALDER, Sec.

Milwaukee, Wis., Liberal Club
Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 216 Grand ave., (Fraternity Hall). Lecture followed by debates. The public cordially invited.

Brotherhood of Moralists, No. 903, Prairie City, Ia.,
Meets every Sunday in the Liberal reading-room hall at 2:30 P.M. All Liberals are cordially invited. F. V. DRAPER, Cor. Sec.

San Francisco, Cal., Freethought Society
Meets every Sunday evening at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Seats free.

Des Moines Secular Union
Holds regular meetings at Good Templar Hall, Flynn Block, S.E. corner 7th and Locust streets. Lectures followed by discussion. Friends from abroad heartily welcome.
FRANKLIN STEINER, Pres.

Portsmouth, O., Secular Union
Meets every Sunday at 7 P.M. in Grand Army Hall. Lectures, discussions, readings, poems, music and songs. A cordial invitation is extended to all; especially to friends from abroad. Correspondence solicited. J. L. TREUTHART, President. WILL S. ANDRES, Secretary.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.

tf

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indescretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N.J.

Inquiries are frequently received asking what we know about Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, N. J., First, we know that he is a reliable gentleman of rare professional skill, who has earned success by good work. Second that he fulfills all has agreements to the letter. Third, that he has performed cures of hopeless cases that in the olden time his skill would have been called miraculous. Fourth, and last, we know him to be an honest man and a stanch Liberal.—The Better Way.

GODS AND RELIGIONS
OF
ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.
Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.
Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N.Y.

News of the Week.

HENRY SEIBER, a well-to-do planter of Fort Worth, Tex., recently ordered his wife to go to work in the field with negroes and on her refusing beat her. She fled, and applied for a divorce. He has always alleged to his neighbors the divine right to beat her, deducing it from the text, "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off."

CHEYENNES are doing violence in Montana, and frontiersmen hav fled to the settlements.

COLUMBUS has passed through a street-car strike, with much rioting and violence.

THE bill for a tunnel under the English Channel failed to pass the House of Commons.

GERMANY, France, Russia, and Switzerland hav signed a treaty for mutual suppression of Anarchy.

IN Italy mobs of unemployed workingmen frequently march about demanding bread, and create riots and conflicts with police.

THE Methodists in Canada hav refused their share of the $60,000 which the sects were to receive from the Jesuits' estate appropriation.

ON the 13th storms and floods did much damage to railroad and other property at Rockford, Joliet, Rock Island, and other parts of Illinois.

CAMPHOR has risen from eighteen to seventy-five cents a pound owing to large purchases by Germany to use in making a new kind of powder.

COMPLAINT has been made in Congress of the neglect of the Cunard Steamship Company to comply with the law on immigration of contract labor.

ABIGAIL HASTETH TO GET THERE.

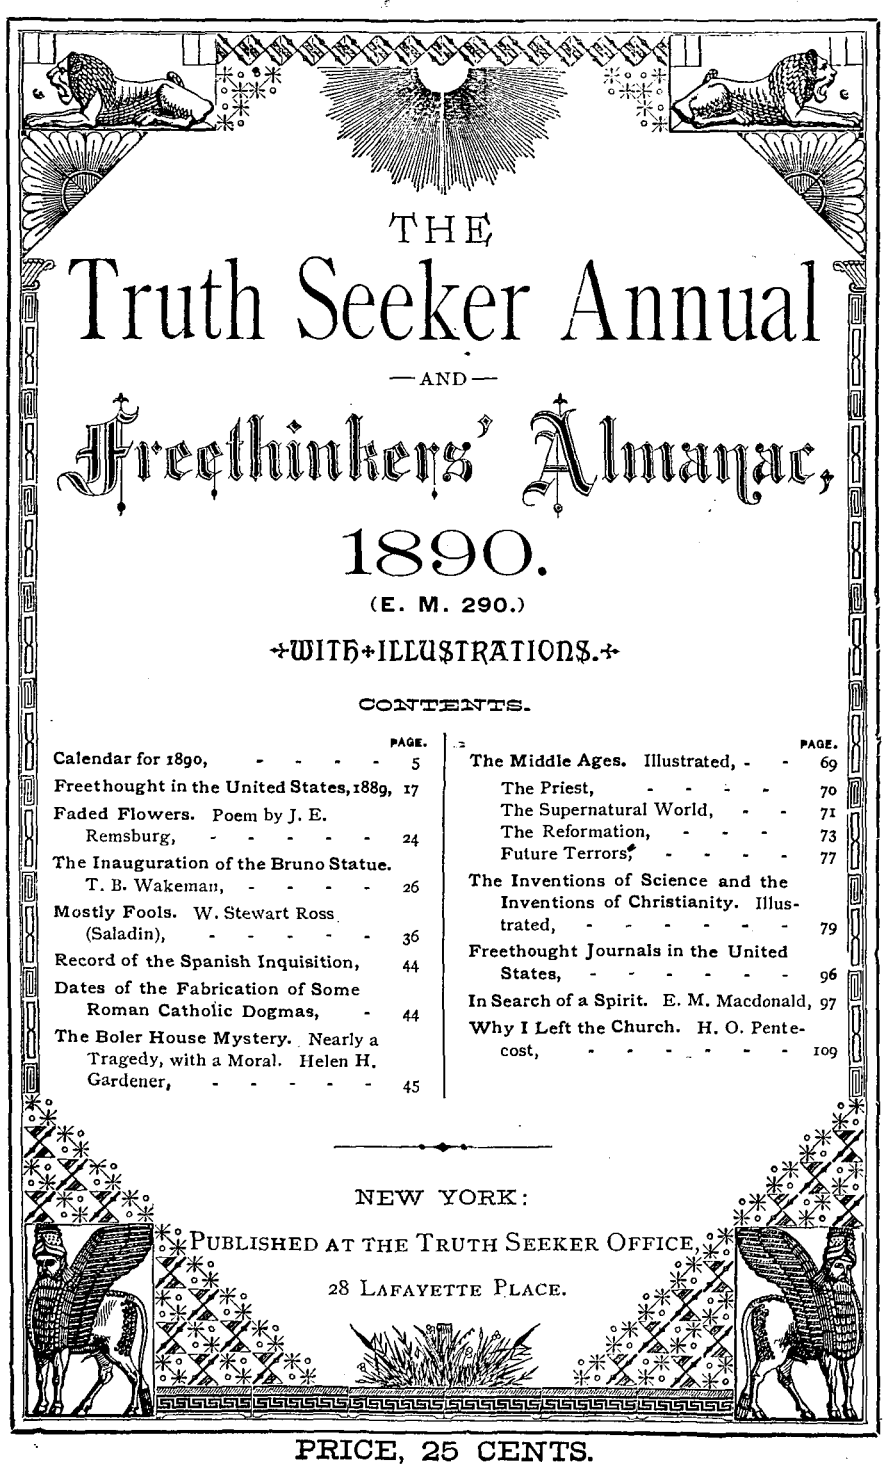
And Abigail hasted, and arose, and rode upon an ass, with five damsels of hers that went after her; and she went after the messengers of David, and became his wife.—1 Sam. xxv, 42.

CATHOLICS are rejoicing in the triumph in the Belgian elections of "the Catholic party, the party of honest government, whose triumph means the triumph of Christianity."

THE refusal of America to enact international copyright draws this language from the novelist Haggard: "The American nation alone among civilized nations has hoisted the black flag."

AT Warrentown, Mo., on the 9th, a collision of two freight trains on the Wabash road killed eight men, injured twenty-two, and killed or crippled fifteen racehorses. A telegrapher had by mistake sent out the running time as fifty minutes instead of five.

ST. LOUIS merchants and others ask Congress for more efficient protection against Mississippi river floods. Sediment washed down from the mountains is said to be continually raising the bed. Great and fatal floods like those in China are apprehended.



BISMARCK'S latest utterance is: "Over-education has led to much dissatisfaction and disappointment in Germany, but in Russia it has led to disaffection and conspiracy. Education is making pedantic theorists and visionaries, unfit for constitutional government."

NEW YORK has established a short and simple form of deed, mortgage, and executor's deed, antiquating the present mass of senseless verbiage, obsolete expressions, and endless repetitions that serve only to confuse the unlearned and add to the revenues of conveyancers and recorders.

A TOLEDO, O., priest, having taken legal advice, has refused to report to the board of education the names, ages, etc., of the pupils of his school, as the state law requires. The Catholics say the law is "conceived in a spirit of malice, envy, and hatred," and aim to overthrow it. The priest has been indicted.

DEPUTY PIGNATELLI has attacked in the Italian senate the instruction imparted in the Catholic seminaries, inspired by the bishops, whom he styles "bishops of resistance," because they carry on a propagandism against the state by their pastorals and homilies, from the pulpit, the confessional, and from the Episcopal Mansion, by alms and subsidies distributed to their creatures.

IT is rumored that the Lower California filibustering scheme was a plot of the British to secure the annexation of that peninsula the same as that people and the East India Company acquired Indian possessions. England, it is said, was to be called on to protect the property and rights of certain of her subjects there, and was to assume a protectorate. But the rumor is doubtful, and is circulated mainly by England's foes.

THE Truth Seeker Annual
—AND—
Freethinkers' Almanac,
1890.

(E. M. 290.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Calendar for 1890,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1889,	17
Faded Flowers. Poem by J. E. Remsburg,	24
The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue. T. B. Wakeman,	26
Mostly Fools. W. Stewart Ross (Saladin),	36
Record of the Spanish Inquisition,	44
Dates of the Fabrication of Some Roman Catholic Dogmas,	44
The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a Moral. Helen H. Gardener,	45
The Middle Ages. Illustrated,	69
The Priest,	70
The Supernatural World,	71
The Reformation,	73
Future Terrors,	77
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated,	79
Freethought Journals in the United States,	96
In Search of a Spirit. E. M. Macdonald,	97
Why I Left the Church. H. O. Pentecost,	109

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Gems of Thought.

To discover the true principles of morality, men hav no need of theology, revelation, or of gods; they hav need only of common sense. They hav only to commune with themselvs, to reflect upon their own nature, to consult their visible interests, to consider the objects of society, and of the individuals who compose it; and they will easily perceive that virtue is advantageous and vice disadvantageous to such beings as themselvs.—D'Holbach.

MEN will be more moral when they learn that morality does not rest for its authority upon arbitrary edicts thundered from the skies, but that its foundation is the experience of mankind as to what is best for man.—Robert C. Adams.

THE good is universally the pleasurable. Conduct is good or bad as its results to self or others is pleasurable or painful: the need for commandments from God disappears.—Spencer.

ANCIENT history, ancient astronomy, ancient physics, ancient medicin (up to Hippocrates), ancient geography, ancient metaphysics, all are nothing but ancient absurdities, which ought to make us feel the happiness of being born in later times.—Voltaire.

A PEOPLE who regard the past with too wistful an eye, will never bestir themselvs to help the onward progress; they will hardly believe that progress is possible. To them, antiquity is synonymous with wisdom, and every improvement is a dangerous innovation. In this state, Europe lingered for many centuries; in this state, Spain still lingers. Hence the Spaniards are remarkable for an inertness, a want of buoyancy, and an absence of hope, which, in our busy and enterprising age, isolate them from the rest of the civilized world. Believing that little can be done, they are in no hurry to do it. Believing that the knowledge they hav inherited is far greater than any they can obtain, they wish to preserve their intellectual possessions whole and unimpaired.—Buckle.

AT present I am subsisting on certain wild flavors which nature wafts to me, which unaccountably sustain me, and make my apparently poor life rich.—Thoreau.

How all things liv and work, and ever blending,
Weave one vast whole from Being's ample range!
How powers celestial, rising and descending,
Their golden buckets ceaseless interchange!
Their flight on rapture-breathing pinions winging,
From heaven to earth their genial influence bringing,
Through the wide sphere their chimes melodious ringing.
A wondrous show! —Goethe.

IF the bulk of the human race are always to remain as at present, slaves to toil in which they hav no interest and therefore feel no interest—drudging from early morning till late at night for bare necessaries, and with all the intellectual and moral deficiencies which that implies—without resources either in mind or feelings; untaught, for they cannot be better taught than fed; selfish, for all their thoughts are required for themselvs; without interests or sentiments as citizens and members of society, and with a sense of injustice rankling in their minds, equally for what they hav not and for what others hav—I know not what there is which should make a person with any capacity of reason concern himself about the destinies of the human race. . . . But there is no ground for such a view of human affairs. Poverty, like most social evils, exists because men follow their brute instincts, without due consideration.—Mill.

TIRED with all these, for restful death I cry—
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimmed in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honor shamefully misplaced,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgraced,
And strength by limping sway disabled,
And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly, doctor-like, controling skill,
And simple truth miscalled simplicity,
And captiv good attending captain ill:
Tired with all these, from these would I be gone—
Save that, to die, I leave my Love alone.
—Shakspere.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 17. No. 26. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY. { New York, Saturday, June 28, 1890. } 28 LAFAYETTE PL. } $3 00 per year.

WHAT MEXICO DID FOR PRIESTCRAFT.

Notes and Clippings.

"THE model family" is the designation that New York papers hav adopted for the purpose of denoting Colonel Ingersoll's family.

Two poker chips in the left trousers pocket of a St. Paul man saved his life the other night by flattening out a bullet from a burglar's revolver. As poker chips are lighter and less bulky than the traditional life-saving Testament they may perhaps supersede that useful volume. And probably more men can be found in the great West with poker chips in their pockets than with Bibles.

ONE of the shameful workings of religion is thus set forth by the New York World: "We hav been so anxious to exclude sectarianism from our schools, and so jealous of ecclesiasticism, that we hav virtually concluded that it is better to do without morality than to hav it associated with religion." By hook or crook, by means direct or indirect, religion has managed in every age to be the arch enemy of morals.

THE Independent, a Protestant journal, says: "The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, affirming the constitutionality of the confiscating section of the anti-Mormon Edmunds law, strikes a deadly blow at the monetary power of the Mormon oligarchy, and is a long step toward wiping out Mormonism in Utah." Will the Independent point out the article and section of the Constitution which makes it the duty of Congress, or gives it power, to wipe out Mormonism or any other religion?

THERE is at least one instance in which the church can hardly arrogate to herself the credit of effecting reforms which she actually opposed. That she was inimical to the abolition of slavery in the United States is a fact too recent in occurrence, and receiving too frequent affirmation, to be denied or covered. The New York Tribune, for instance, in a rehearsal of Rebellion history, has to state this: "The churches of the North, which should hav been in the van of progress and reform, betrayed their trust and crouched placidly at the feet of the South."

"THE pope a traitor to his country." That is the substance of a speech delivered by Signor Crispi at a recent meeting of the survivors of "the thousand," who, on May 10, 1860, landed at Marsala, in Sicily. Crispi was one of the thousand; he was the most intimate friend of Garibaldi, and the sworn enemy of King Francis II. of Naples. In the speech delivered by him on the occasion mentioned, he said that "the pope is the worst enemy of his country, for he never ceases to appeal to the foreigner to overthrow the unity of Italy."

THE clergy seem to be entering into politics at this period more than ever before in our history. They are not content with giving moral and religious instruction, leaving the laity to apply it in practical affairs according to their own consciences. Instead of this the clergy are taking the part of activ political leaders with specific political designs. The Reformed Presbyterian ministers are circulating petitions to Congress asking that God shall be formally recognized in the Constitution as the only supreme ruler; and they are refusing to vote until their request is granted. Methodists and Presbyterians in their general convocations demand that religion shall become a part of the public school education, and a society, made up of ministers chiefly, has been organized to combat the supposed influence of the church of Rome upon school legislation. They cry out that the schools must be protected against clerical influence, and yet at the same time they protest that the secularization of the schools must not continue.—Sun.

EX-JUDGE DITTENHOEFER and Anthony Comstock got into a squabble in a police court in this city last week, and Mr. Dittenhoefer said something which he ought to, and no doubt can, prove. The judge appeared for George Smith, a policy dealer, of No. 42 Nassau street, who was arrested a few days ago on evidence obtained by Mr. Comstock. Mr. Comstock produced Frederick Luther, an ex-policy-dealer, and John R. Collard, also a retired gambler. It was difficult for Judge Dittenhoefer to elicit anything from the witnesses without frequent objections and interruptions from Edmund E. Price and Mr. Comstock. When the ex-judge had his patience pretty well tested, he declared that Mr. Comstock's office was being used by some functionary attached to it for the vilest purposes imaginable. "Before I get through with this case," continued the judge, excitedly, "I mean to show that there is more corruption in the Society for the Prevention of Vice than the public would dare dream of." We hope the lawyer will let the sun go down upon his wrath many times and rise up each morning determined to do as he says.

THIS table tells the story of the results of the abolition or practical disuse of capital punishment in Europe: Belgium.—No executions since 1863. Number of murders ten years before, 921; ten years after, 703. Finland.—No executions since 1824. Murders extremely rare. Holland.—Capital punishment abolished in 1870, with decrease in murders, despite increase of population. Switzerland.—Abolished 1874. Since reinstated by two or three cantons. Prussia.—From 1869–78, out of 484 condemned to death, only one execution (Hödel). Portugal.—Capital punishment abolished. Roumania.—Abolished. Tuscany.—No execution for fifty years. Russia.—Capital punishment retained only for treason and military insubordination.

THE business of Rev. Thomas A. Green, pastor of a colored church, and Sister Mary Ramsey in court at Indianapolis the other day, reads amusingly. Mary says she became security for the payment for Elder Green's best suit of clothes, and the elder did not show any great activity in paying for them. There was a church meeting the preceding night, and numerous bills were read. Sister Ramsey wanted her bill against Green read, in hopes that it would prod him up a little and cause him to produce some funds. He objected, and the bill was not read. "He done sat dah on a cheer," says Sister Ramsay to the court, "a showen his white stock'ns and wearin' dose close, and it makes me mad, and I don't denies it. I just push him off dat cheer, an' I push 'im haad, too." For this Green had Sister Ramsay arrested for assault and battery, and Sister Ramsay had Elder Green arrested for provoking her.

Communications.

The True Inwardness of the National Reform Party.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In a former article I asserted that the so called National Reform party originated in "Orangeism;" and with evidence now in hand I shall prove that under another name the National Reform idea is nothing more nor less than "Reformed Presbyterianism;" or, in other words, the principles of the National Reform party are the principles of the old Scotch Covenanters, or, as they are now called, the "Reformed Presbyterian church." But among other branches of the Presbyterian church many strong opponents to the National Reform idea are found. I mention this fact lest any of your readers might infer from what I shall present that the whole Presbyterian body is to be blamed for this attempt to unite church and state and to establish a national religion in the United States, and to enforce its acceptance by the people under penalty of civil distress. It will be observed from some quotations to be made, that the "Reformed Presbyterians" are not loyal American citizens, and are indeed enemies to the present Constitution of the United States. I will now proceed to prove my position, and to prove it out of their own mouths. At a session of the Reformed Presbyterian synod, held at Rochester, N. Y., in 1886, a memorial to Congress was adopted, urging upon it the necessity of the religious amendment to the Constitution, as advocated by the National Reform party. It complains that the Constitution has "no acknowledgment of God nor of the moral laws of his government" in it, and that this fact "encourages the false doctrin that civil government has no moral nor religious duties to perform." It also says that "the refusal of the nation to acknowledge the authority of Jesus Christ as king and to accept his law involves the nation in unspeakable guilt and exposes it to the chastening and destroying judgments of God," etc. These memorialists seem to be ignorant of, or oblivious to, the fact that for a hundred years the country has been prospered beyond all precedents in the history of nations; while such nations of Europe and South America, which are under religious control, or which are more or less directed or controled by the church, and of course "acknowledge God and his moral laws," etc., hav been visited with tenfold more of what these "reformers" would call "the chastening and destroying judgments of God," if famins, pestilences, earthquakes, wars, etc., may be called such "judgments." But let us see further about this "memorial" of the Reformed Presbyterians. It closes with the following words. Please note the loyalty (?) of these petitioners. For the reasons given above they said: "That we who present this petition are unable, for these reasons, to accept the Constitution as a right fundamental law for the nation, and are, therefore, debarred on conscientious grounds from participation in the government. We can neither take office under it ourselvs, nor by voting for others, lay this Constitution upon them as the rule of their official conduct." I need offer no comment on this statement, save that they in so many words confess themselvs to be enemies of the Constitution, and are not, therefore, loyal American citizens. Now, to see their identity with the National Reform party we hav only to read what follows, thus: "We pray you, therefore, to propose such an amendment to the national Constitution as shall suitably acknowledge almighty God as the source of all authority and power in civil government, the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations, and his revealed will as of supreme authority in national affairs, and so place all Christian laws, institutions, and usages on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land."

This is the regular National Reform party platform. I hav referred in a former article to some of the "Christian laws, institutions, and usages" which these Reformed Presbyterians demand shall be made the fundamental law of the land, but it will not be amiss to refer to a few that shall be enforced upon all classes resident in the United States. 1. Belief in one true and living God. 2. Belief in Jesus Christ as the only begotten son of God. 3. Belief in his death, burial, resurrection, and ascension to heaven. 4. Belief in his atonement, his mediatorship, his return to earth and judgment of the world, etc. 5. All parties must repent and confess their sins. 6. All must be baptized. 7. All must be confirmed. 8. All must partake of the sacrament, or eucharist. 9. All must pray. 10 Read the scriptures. 11. Support the ministry. 12. Attend church, etc. For what these people demand is that "all Christian laws, institutions, and usages" are to be placed on an undeniable legal basis. So that as these laws, institutions, and usages are the distinguishing characteristics of the Christian religion; and the acceptance of, obedience to, and observance of, these laws, etc, constitute a Christian character, and constitute those who do thus accept, obey, and observe the church; so they intend to thus unite church and state, and force all the people to become Christians; but what class of Christians do they intend to produce?

Let us see. In the synod referred to, in adopting a report on National Reform, they said: "It is ours to uphold the ideals of God, which hav originated the National Reform cause." In the Reformed Presbyterian we read thus: "The proposed amendment of the federal Constitution is an acknowledgment by the government that God is the author and source of all authority and power in civil government; that the Lord Jesus Christ is the ruler of nations, and that his revealed will contained in the Bible is the supreme law of nations. Now, the association for National Reform proposes to hav these distinctiv principles of the Reformed Presbyterian church adopted into the Constitution of the United States, and annulling any parts of the Constitution that may be inconsistent with these principles." These propositions of the National Reform party are here claimed as the "distinctiv principles of the Reformed Presbyterian church." And therefore their adoption by the United States government would be the adoption of the principles of the Reformed Presbyterian church, or in other words Reformed Presbyterianism is to be made the national religion. That we do not misrepresent their design and expectation will be seen by the following, from the same paper, viz, "The principles of National Reform are our principles, and its work is our work. National Reform is simply the practical application of the principles of the Reformed Presbyterian church for the reformation of the nation."

It is therefore evident that the Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, etc., are committing themselvs to the establishment of the peculiar doctrins of the Reformed Presbyterians. Now, it may be pertinent to inquire what are the distinctiv principles of this church? "In the Shaff-Herzog Encyclopedia Rev. J. R. W. Sloane says of the Reformed Presbyterians, 'The more special and distinctiv principles of this church, the one in which she differs from all others, is her practical protest against the secular character of the United States Constitution. Holding to the universal headship of Christ, and that civil government is a divine ordinance, and one of the "all things" put under him as the mediatorial ruler of the universe, and that to him the allegiance of all nations is due, Reformed Presbyterians refuse close incorporation with any government which does not in some form recognize those principles and giv them effectiv expression in its legislation.

"'On examination of the United States Constitution, that remarkable document is found to contain no recognition of God as the source of all legitimate civil authority, nor of his law as supreme above all human laws, nor of his son as governor among the nations. . . . The Constitution does not recognize the Bible, the Christian Sabbath, Christian morality, Christian qualifications for civil offices, and gives no legal basis for any Christian feature in the administration of government. . . . They take the deepest interest in that reform movement which has for its object the amendment of the United States Constitution in those particulars in which they consider it defectiv. Indeed they feel specially called to aid in its success, at whatever cost or personal sacrifice.'" It may not be amiss to inquire right here what is the Reformed Presbyterian idea of what the "mediatorial ruler of the universe, Jesus Christ," will demand of the government of the United States, and of the people, as also of all other nations? We will let Rev. J. M. Foster tell us, for he is a Reformed Presbyterian. He says: "The duties which the reigning mediator requires of nations" are "(1) A constitutional recognition of himself as king of nations. . . . (2) A constitutional recognition of their duty as the divinely appointed keeper of the moral law. . . . (3) A constitutional provision of moral and religious qualifications for their officers. . . . (4) An acknowledgment and exemplification of the duty of national covenanting with him. . . . (5) An acknowledgment and performance of the nation's duty to guard and protect the church by suppressing all public violation of the moral law, by maintaining a system of public schools, indoctrinating their youth in morality and virtue, by exempting church property from taxation, and by providing her funds out of the public treasury for carrying on her aggressiv work at home and in the foreign field."

Now, is there a man or a woman in the country who will pause just a moment to think on these various positions of the National Reform party, alias the Reformed Presbyterian church, but who can see that all this means a complete union of church and state, and that the church is to be the Reformed Presbyterian? I fancy that I see a smile on the face of Cardinal Gibbons and the whole Roman hierarchy in the United States at this thought, and I fancy that I hear them saying, "We will see about that in due time, but for the present we will encourage the Reformed Presbyterians to pull our chestnuts out of the fire." There is one point in the foregoing declarations of the "principles" of the Reformed Presbyterians worthy of the attention of the members of Congress, and of all the various officers of the government from the president down to a cross-roads postmaster, and which all state and municipal officials should keep in mind, and that is, that as soon as this National Reform party (or Reformed Presbyterians) assume the control of the nation, every one of them must be not only a "moral" but also a "religious" man, for they intend to demand a "constitutional provision of moral and religious qualifications for their officers." Every officer of national, state, and municipal governments must be a professed Christian and a member, of course, of "the church." The political demagogs of the day, the chronic office-seekers, and all who love place and power, must make an open profession of religion, and it will hav to be of the orthodox stripe, too, or they will not stand any chance of election or appointment to office.

Who is it, knowing the unprincipled character of many of the political hacks of the country, but can see that they will "join the church" solely for office, and at heart may neither believe or from the heart obey the principles of the Christian religion—providing these reformers themselvs understand them—and will be hypocrits therefore?

Will not these reformers be not only offering a premium on hypocrisy, but also virtually disfranchising every consistent Infidel in the land? No matter how moral he may be; no matter how capable he may be; and although he may hav lost an arm, or a leg, or an eye, or his health, and endured any amount of physical suffering, or sacrificed his worldly possessions, in defense of the Union and the Constitution, yet, unless he joins an orthodox church—and it may be unless he unites with the "Reformed Presbyterian church"—he cannot even be a policeman, or a town clerk.

The thousands of Freethinkers in the United States will hav to submit to "taxation, but without representation." These reformers justify to-day our forefathers in rebelling against England on that ground, but will they excuse the multitude of so-called Infidels who will refuse to pay taxes, because they cannot hav any part or lot in the government? And what are their taxes to be used for? Among other things, this, viz., the support of the church: "By providing her funds out of the public treasury for carrying on her aggressiv work at home and in the foreign field;" that is, a support of the ministry by the government.

These people are striving their "level best" to secure an "amendment" to the Constitution that will prohibit the use of the public funds for the support of sectarian schools. But they are anxious to hav the government use the public funds to support a sectarian clergy. For it is sheer folly to suppose that they would be willing that a dollar of the public money should be used to assist at home or abroad any church that is not considered by them as orthodox or evangelical; and that, of course, excludes Unitarians, Universalists, Adventists, Seventh-Day Baptists, Campbellites, Mormons, etc., as well as Jews. Of course the Catholics favor all this; nothing could suit them better than a constitutional provision which would insure support for the clergy of the church of Rome. Of course the Presbyterians would be the last body of religionists to agree to anything of this sort; but how can they prevent it being done? For it is only a question of time. The thousands of Christians who oppose the principles and plans of the so-called National Reform Party, and the thousands of Freethinkers, Jews, and others, who also are opposed to them, will not, of course, vote for their candidates (if they would be allowed to vote, which may not be the case), and would leave them (as compared with the Catholics) in the minority in most of the congressional districts in the United States. But as they propose to disfranchise all "logically consistent" Infidels, according to Rev. Mr. Coleman in the Christian Statesman, who said, "To be perfectly plain, I believe that the existence of a Christian Constitution would disfranchise every logically consistent Infidel;" and as Rev. Jonathan Edwards said that "the Seventh-Day Baptists [and of course all other Sabbatarians] must be counted together," as "one class," with "Atheists, Deists, and Jews," so then all Christians and all others who oppose their proposed "amendments" are to be disfranchised. This then will leave the contest for office to be settled by the National Reform Party on one side, and the Catholics on the other; and if the issue was made to-day, it is extremely doubtful that the National Reform Party could carry one fourth the congressional districts in the country, nor could they control the legislatures of but few states; so they could secure only a minority of the national senators.

They could not elect a president and vice-president. But the Catholics could elect them, and the majority of Congress. They could thus secure a Roman Catholic cabinet, Roman Catholic heads of departments, and all the embassadors and consuls to foreign lands. They would control the army and navy—in a few words, they would control the entire government, and establish as the "national religion" that of the Roman Catholic church. They would find upon accession to power, a Constitution framed so as to demand the support of "the church" in "her home and foreign work," out of the general treasury, and the largest portion of this fund will hav been furnished by the Protestant classes, and the Infidels, etc., of the country.

As soon as these blinded zealots hav secured their object in changing the Constitution the Roman leaders in foreign lands will at once do their utmost to flood the United States with Catholic emigrants; and after the opponents of the Reform party hav succeeded in disfranchising their enemies they, as before said, would be in the minority in many states, while the Catholics securing control of the state legislatures would speedily change the naturalization laws, giving aliens the rights of citizenship, perhaps immediately upon arrival at our shores; and by judicious placing of these emigrants where their votes would be most needed, that church would soon control the few districts that may at the present hour be in the hands of the National Reformers. There is one scripture that these Reformers may find fulfilled at that time, viz., "The measure that ye mete, to you it shall be measured again." They intend to demand "religious qualifications" of all officers of the government. The Romanists will insist that they shall be "religious" according to the Catholic idea, i.e., that they shall be Catholics.

Rev. Jonathan Edwards admits that the Seventh Day Baptists are believers in "God and Christianity," but would he favor one of them holding office, although they are Christians, and Protestant Christians at that? Nay, but he and his fellows class them with Atheists, Deists, Jews, etc. "They must be counted together," said he. "These all are, for the occasion, and as far as our amendment is concerned, one class," he said.

Why does he so class them? Because, said he, "they use the same arguments and the same tactics against us."

That is, because these Seventh Day believers in God and Christianity do not agree with the National Reform party on the Sabbath question, they must be counted and treated as Atheists, Deists, Jews, etc. Upon that ground, i.e., of opposition to some or perhaps most of the doctrins or dogmas of the church of Rome, that church when in full control of the government will—as she does now—count them as her enemies, and disfranchise them. At least she will see to it that none of them will hold an office of any description, in any part of the country where she has the control.

In another way are these Reformers preparing the way for Rome rule. Prof. C. A. Blanchard, one of the prominent National Reformers, publicly assumes that as "Constitutional laws punish for false money, weights, and measures, and of course Congress establishes a standard for money, weight, and measure, so Congress must establish a standard of religion, or admit anything called religion." But what shall that "standard" be? The Reformed Presbyterians hav a "standard." So does every other denomination represented by the National Reform party. Congress must adopt one of them, or "admit anything called religion." It cannot adopt them all, for they do not all agree. If it adopts one of them, that of the Reformed Presbyterians, for instance, will the Baptists, or Methodists, or Episcopalians submit to it? By no means. Will these National Reformers, or the churches represented by them, agree and unite upon a "standard of religion?" Well, they hav not been enabled to do so during the past two or three hundred years.

But whatever "standard" they should adopt, the church of Rome cannot and will not agree to it, nor submit to it; and will therefore bend all of its energies to secure a sufficient majority in Congress in order to establish the Roman Catholic "standard" as the national religion.

But suppose the Reformed Presbyterian "standard" should be adopted, what would that "standard" be? Now let it be understood that the Reformed Presbyterians claim to be the only representativ and true conservator of Covenanter principles, and to be the lineal and direct descendant of the Covenanters of Scotland and England.

To learn what Reformed Presbyterianism is one need but understand the Covenanters' principles.

Under what was called a "Solemn League and Covenant," they succeeded in causing an ordinance to be adopted by the English Parliament, which declared that "Any man denying the doctrin of the trinity, or the divinity of Christ, or that the books of scripture are the word of God, or the resurrection of the body, or a future day of judgment, and refusing on trial to abjure his heresy, 'shall suffer the pain of death.' Any man declaring [among a long list of other errors] 'that man by nature hath free will to turn to God,' that there is a purgatory, that images are lawful, that infant baptism is unlawful, anyone denying the obligation of observing the Lord's day or asserting 'that the church government by presbytery is Antichristian or unlawful,' shall, on refusal to renounce his errors, 'be commanded to prison'" (see Green's Larger History of England, book vii, chap. 10, par. 11).

From the foregoing the Unitarians, who deny the trinity; the Methodists, Free Will Baptists, and others who believe in "freedom of the will;" the Baptists and others who deny that infant baptism is lawful; the Seventh Day Baptists and Seventh Day Adventists, who deny that Sunday is the true Sabbath; the Episcopalians and others who oppose the Presbyterian idea of church government; the Catholics who believe in purgatory, etc., are all to "be commanded to prison," and some must "suffer the pain of death." This then is what may be expected when Covenantism or otherwise "Reformed Presbyterianism" is made the "standard religion" of the land. And yet Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, and others are doing their best to secure the establishment of Covenanterism alias Reformed Presbyterianism, alias National Reformism, by Congressional enactment.

Well, as they are sowing the wind, they must reap the whirlwind. So, if Reformed Presbyterianism demands the imprisonment and death of dissenting Christians, what mercy can Atheists, Deists, Infidels, and Jews expect? Therefore, in view of the fact that Reformed Presbyterianism is but another name for Covenanterism, and that means persecution unto death of all dissenters, it is well that those who dissent shall understand what their fate may be when Reformed Presbyterianism rules the land. Of course they will not submit without a struggle even unto death. They might as well begin to prepare for the issue. Reformed Presbyterianism, bigotry, intolerance, and persecution mean one and the same thing. Will Americans be warned in time?

May 8, 1890. A Missionary at Sea.

Our London Letter.

Freethought, as represented by the National Secular Society, is evidently gaining in strength and numbers. The report of the conference held in Manchester on Whitsunday forms pleasant and interesting reading. There has been a considerable increase of members, eleven new branches hav been opened, and the income of the society has been augmented. The activ management of Mr. Foote has borne good fruit so far, and there is no reason why the society should not go on and prosper, and make itself a power in the land. The president's proposition that the yearly subscription of members be reduced to one shilling caused some discussion, but was carried by a considerable majority. The amount is certainly a small one, but it will enable many to become members who could not well spare a larger amount, while it is open to those who can giv more money to do so. It is to be hoped the scheme will be found to work well, and entail no loss to the society. It will certainly cause as little annoyance to the Christian Evidence Society, as their agents will find it more and more difficult to hold their ground. I heard one of them the other Sunday evening in a public park, maintaining that the Bible was strongly opposed to slavery; but one of the audience, a workingman, sprang to the rostrum, and quoting chapter and verse, exposed the Christian Evidence man, much to his annoyance, and he could only reply in the usual manner, by abusing the Freethought party; after which he took up his platform and departed amid much laughter. As it is the custom of these Christians to pass the hat round, and on this occasion there was nothing to be gleaned, the chagrin was exceedingly great; and the pathetic appeal of another member of the party, that he had come a long way and at his own expense, solely for the purpose of saving souls, met with no favorable response. If matters go on like this the Christian Evidence agent will soon become as scarce as the Punch and Judy man.

The Manchester Woman's Christian Temperance Association hav been advertising in several papers their intention of observing Monday, June 9th, as a day of special humiliation and prayer on account of the drink traffic. It will be a stiff day for the Lord if the program is carried out; nine hours of prayer, etc., surely ought to hav some effect. If the bill to compensate publicans is thrown out I suppose this association will take the credit, but to be consistent they must admit, if the bill is passed, that their God favors the public house interest, and consequently they should at once dissolve the society and all take to imbibing strong drink. But I suppose they will only say, in this latter event, that they did not worry the Lord enough, and make up their minds to giv him another dose.

Sir Andrew Clark, president of the Royal College of Physicians, has had his little say at the annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society, when he "boldly" avowed himself a Christian, saying he had come through seas of doubt to the quiet haven of belief. Unfortunately he gave reasons for the conclusions he reached and so spoiled himself, because there was nothing new or original in them. He must hav had an overdose of Paley and other exploded theological arguments and had not stopped to consider them before attending the meeting. I should imagin he primed himself just beforehand, and then rushed down to deliver his version before he forgot all about it.

Dr. Lunn, formerly medical missionary in India, will get himself into trouble if he goes on telling the truth about missionaries in the East. He has stated what every Anglo-Indian knows, that these men liv like the members of an aristocratic caste, and do not mix in with the people on equal terms, consequently he has brought a nice nest of hornets around his ears. He has had to explain that this is greatly the fault of the Hindoos, who appreciate only Englishmen who treat them with obloquy and contempt. No doubt this amendment will somewhat assuage the wrath of the missionary societies, and satisfy those who subscribe so liberally as a set off against their rascality in the way of business. J. D.

To the Liberals of Texas.

After considerable discussion through the columns of the Independent Pulpit and an extensiv correspondence with Liberals in this state it has been determined to hold a general meeting in Waco, Tex., July 15, 16, and 17, 1890, to which all who hav at heart, and hold dear, that absolute freedom of thought and expression, in the search for truth, which is the natural right of every rational being, are cordially invited.

The object for holding such a meeting is to inaugurate a system of positiv, tolerant thought, ethical culture, and practical benevolence, in which all Liberal-minded people can unite and work in harmony for the moral elevation, intellectual improvement, physical amelioration, social well-being, and consequent happiness of the human race. Therefore, the following subjects will no doubt be discussed in such order as may be agreed upon by those in attendance:

1. Is an organization practicable?
2. On what basis shall it be established?
3. What particular aims are to be attained by it?
4. What methods of work will be most effectiv in the attainment of its aims?

With an object so laudable for an incentiv, and with subjects so important for discussion, it is expected that the occasion will be one of unusual interest to all morally disposed, Freethinking people, and a large attendance is solicited. J. D. Shaw.

Eminent Women.

MARY ROBINSON OWEN.

Everybody has heard of Robert Dale Owen. He has been a sort of human god to a vast army of worshipers, and especially to those kindly people who love and adore an honest, earnest, radical worker for human good.

But probably very few of those who thus remember the husband, know aught of the wife, a woman equally good, true, and noble, equally worthy of honor, love, and reverence, Mary Robinson Owen.

Mary went to hear Mr. Owen lecture in New York. Mr. Owen was speaking upon equality of sex, and few in his audience had any sympathy with his opinions. As his gaze wandered from face to face, seeking some recognition for his theme, he was attracted by the magnetism of Mary's attentiv gaze, and afterward spoke, as it were, to her alone.

When she got home she said to her sister, "I hav seen the man I shall marry; he is the homeliest man I hav ever known; but if I am married at all he is to be my husband." A few months after (April, 1830), they were married. The marriage consisted simply of signing a document, written by Owen himself, with a justice of the peace, and the immediate family, as witnesses. After a wedding tour in Europe, they returned and settled in New Harmony, Ind., where the father, Robert Owen, had been making experiments in community life.

The roughness of pioneering in the then wilds of Indiana was something new to that delicately reared couple; but strong principle animated them, and earnest determination carried them through.

Mary's life was a busy one, and though not so notedly public as that of her husband, who shall say its real influence for good has been less important and widespread?

She was a woman wise beyond her time. "Lovers and business men, struggling youths and perplexed mothers, children and veterans, poured their griefs and fears, their hopes and disappointments, into the listening ear of sympathy, knowing that the clear judgment of this little woman could unravel much that seemed to be in hopeless entanglement."

She reared four children of her own, and took seven other young people under her protection. "Pasture and stable, hennery and dairy, yard and garden, kitchen and parlor, were all under her immediate guidance and control." When the children were reared, she turned her attention more to public work and woman's work. She was well calculated to giv instruction upon rearing children, and all kinds of home work. "Her manner was the earnest manner of a woman who has looked into the heart of life." She taught that self-government was the primary principle and broad foundation of true living. She had no belief in scolding and fault-finding; but led, guided, and requested. Her home was cheerful and happy and well-ordered. The influence of this good mother and good woman is vast and far-reaching, and will never end. Much of Robert's best work grew out of the companionship of this life-long friend, counselor, and helper, Mary Robinson Owen.

Elmina Drake Slenker.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President, . 305 2d ave., Asbury Park, N. J.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Vice-President, 120 Lexington ave., New York city.
T. B. WAKEMAN, Vice-President, 93 Nassau street, New York city.
J. E. REMSBURG, Vice-President, ... Oak Mills, Kan.
JULIET H. SEVERANCE, Vice-President, . . . Milwaukee, Wis.
IDA C. CRADDOCK, Secretary, 930 North 17th st., Philadelphia, Pa.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Ida C. Craddock, Broad and Columbia ave., Philadelphia, Pa.
TREASURER, F. C. Mende, . 1814 Greene street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Notice.

Mr. F. C. Mende, treasurer of the society, will be traveling this summer, and does not wish letters and remittances addressed to him or to his order, but to the order of Ida C. Craddock, secretary, at the new office, Broad and Columbia avenue, over the bank. The undersigned may be addressed at No. 305 Second avenue, Asbury Park, N. J., until September 25th, after this date. Please make a note of this.

R. B. WESTBROOK,
President American Secular Union.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 2, 1890.

The American Secular Union Budget.

1. "A bill has passed the House of Representativs authorizing the director of the mint, with the approval of the secretary of the treasury, to change the patterns and styles of United States coins." So says our esteemed antagonist, the Christian Statesman. The Statesman evidently thinks this bit of news worth publishing as the second item on its editorial page. As the organ of the God in-the-Constitution party thus pointedly calls the attention of its people to this matter, we may infer one of two things; either it fears that the one concession already made to its party (of the "In God We Trust" motto on the Bland dollar) may be withdrawn, or else it hopes for further concessions. At all events, it behooves Liberals to be up and stirring in this matter.

How many of you who read this item and who recognize the importance of a protest against this union of church and state in the mottoes on our coins, are willing to put your objections into some practical form that will hav its effect upon the said director of the mint and secretary of the treasury?

There are auxiliaries of the American Secular Union organized all over the country. Let the members of these, and indeed of all Liberal clubs, whether auxiliary to us or not, make known their wishes in this matter to their legislators at Washington. Let them, both through their societies and as individuals, insist that their representativs there shall see to it that no more "In God We Trust" or any other religious mottoes shall be stamped on the coins of a free people.

2. The Portsmouth, O., auxiliary to the American Secular Union (president, J. L Treuthart; secretary, Will. S. Andres) is booming our cause. Judges, lawyers, editors, and other leaders of thought in the town are doing what they can to make the local society a success, and the rank and file of the membership seems to be composed of the most activ and influential of the citizens. They are going to work in a business-like way, too, i.e., attempting coöperation with our other auxiliaries and with Liberal societies in general in obtaining lecturers. The first lecturer chosen is Mrs. M. A. Freeman, and she is to be followed by others. These lecturers are, by a recent set of resolutions of the society, to be recommended to the different Freethought societies and citizens throughout Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania. These societies and citizens are to be requested to coöperate by writing at once to Mrs. Freeman for terms, dates, etc., and arranging for her reception. Later on, it is hoped that a system of coöperation can be perfected by which each of our leading lecturers can make the rounds of the Liberal societies in these states in turn, at the least possible expense to both lecturer and society. This scheme is worthy of consideration, not only by our Liberal friends in the states above-named, but all over the country. With organization and coöperation, the traveling expenses of each lecturer would be less, the outlay for each individual society would be less, and the lecturer would hav more dollars in his pocket at the end of the year.

3. Some of our orthodox friends are falling into line with us. It will be remembered that we hav laid great stress of late on the necessity of flooding Maryland with pamphlets on "Church Taxation." The Jesuits and ultra-orthodox Protestants in that state are working hard to hav church property exempt from taxation by a constitutional amendment, which will lift the matter beyond the reach of ordinary legislation. The Maryland newspapers, almost without exception, hav been strangely silent on the subject, and one cannot help thinking that they hav been muzzled. Lately, however, the Baltimore Methodist, by giving prominence to certain articles by one Ed. L. Stroughton and others, has bravely come to the front in behalf of the equitable taxation of church property in common with other property. We wrote the editor, thanking him for his bold and fearless stand in giving such articles prominence, and sending him one of our "Church Taxation" pamphlets for further points; and we hav received from him a most encouraging and sympathetic reply.

Now, dear friends, there is just one lesson which is to be gleaned from these three disconnected items of news, and it is this—the value of coöperation among Liberals. If, instead of being broken up into dozens of unaffiliated societies, we were welded into one solid organization, we could strike telling blows for Freethought at every point. We should be able to strike "In God We Trust" forever from our debased eighty-five cent dollar. We should possess a full corps of traveling speakers, at more profit to the latter, and at less expense to ourselvs, than at present. And we should effectually hinder the plans of the church exemption people in Maryland.

These three things, with many, many more important ones, could be accomplished if for one little year the majority of Liberals would consent to serve in one united army under organized and capable leadership of their own choice, and to uphold those leaders with something of the loyalty that obtains among our opponents. It is something of which Liberalism ought to be ashamed—that so vastly inferior a force in numbers as is the ecclesiastical party in America to-day, should so frequently outwit the friends of progress and religious freedom.

What is the remedy, do you ask? I reply: Organization and coöperation.

The American Secular Union is doing what it can for freedom of thought. Wherever it can, it strikes a blow for that religious liberty which can be secured only by total separation of church and state. But what can so small a standing army accomplish for the widespread interests of the cause for which it is fighting?

We rejoice in the work which some of our members hav accomplished during the past year, and we are grateful for the support which we hav hitherto received, both in small and in large ways. But we need many more soldiers than we hav. Yes, Liberals, you ought every one of you to belong to this army. You ought to be organized into companies and regiments in your local towns. You ought to hav your American Secular Union badges and your rallying-cry, your camp-fires and your grand military reviews, just as the ecclesiastical party hav. And, like them, you should support the leaders whom you yourselvs hav placed at the head of the controling central organization.

It should not be necessary for us to appeal for money, as we hav had to do for the past two months, and as, from the present appearance of the treasury, we shall probably hav to do again this month. It ought to be a matter of pride with each Liberal to belong to the army of the American Secular Union, and to help carry on the battle to the best of his ability, both with money and with personal influence.

I repeat that the battle of Liberalism, in the matter of total separation of church and state, is an easy one to gain, provided that our people will become organized. The majority of the male population of the United States are to-day not only non-church-goers, but thorough Liberals at heart. A large, though constantly lessening, proportion of the women, it is true, continue to be church-goers; but this will not prevent the majority of these from joining hands also with the American Secular Union, when our society shall prove itself to be a permanent and well-equipped organization, with a definit and loyal following. The more conservativ women are the more likely they are to be swept away with the current of enthusiasm which such a society, and only such a society, can create.

Liberals, we want you, one and all, to enroll yourselvs in the army of the American Secular Union. How many will enlist as regular members at once? How many who, for any reason, cannot become members just now, will send in their mite to help along the work? Remember that every little contribution helps to swell the general fund.

We need money and we need workers—many, many more of the latter than we now hav. For not until Liberals shall be organized into a permanent, well-equipped body, under capable leadership, and loyal to that leadership, will they be able to deal the deathblow to ecclesiastical power in the state.

IDA C. CRADDOCK,
Corr. Sec. American Secular Union.

Philadelphia, June 20, 1890.

An Open Letter to Mrs. Marietta M. Bones.

DEAR MADAM: Your letter addressed to me in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 7th, dated May 13th, deserves a brief reply. (1) You cannot plead youthful inexperience on the part of Mrs. Matilda Joslyn Gage, in the management of the Washington convention, as she has been activly associated with Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony in conducting conventions for about forty years. The rest of you really had nothing to do except to look on, so your plea of the "baby act" is unavailing.

(2) As to the resolutions themselvs, all but four of them are substantially the same as those adopted by the National Liberal League in Philadelphia in 1876, and since frequently reiterated by the American Secular Union. It is certainly amusing to call on Colonel Ingersoll to know what he thinks of their resolutions when he has been president of the Secular Union and is now a vice-president. In one of the Fayetteville resolutions women's suffrage is affirmed, but no more strongly than has been done a thousand times by several other societies. That the church by its general teaching has not encouraged the true development of woman is truthfully asserted in one of the resolutions, but it is not true "that every church is the enemy of liberty and progress," and "that the Christian church of whatever name is based on the theory that woman was created secondary and inferior to man," etc. The Universalists, Unitarians, Hicksite Quakers, and many other liberal churches utterly disprove this statement.

(3) It makes me smile at the hope that you so benevolently express, "that you [American Secular Union] will eventually bring your little band in our union," etc. Our society has been in existence fourteen years and numbers hundreds of local societies and thousands of private members from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Besides, it has several objects in view which your society has not, and ours is not a woman's suffrage society at all—though many of us favor equal suffrage. No, Sister Bones, we most respectfully decline the honor of being swallowed. Our Secular Union ox might burst your Woman's Union frog. We do not want to kill you, but we want to help you; and one way of doing so is to criticise you and denounce gag-law and the one-woman power.

(4) I am heartily in favor of a Woman's Suffrage Society of a more liberal type than anything we now hav. One that will not succumb to the orthodox church and the Bible, or to any of the claims put forth by the "standing order," but we hav not got it yet. I hav letters by the dozen approving of my criticism of the Gage usurpation from those who were present at the convention, and until the name of the society, the officers, and the platform are submitted to a public body called together for the purpose, "the Woman's Liberal Union" is a delusion and a snare. You might as well understand this and begin the work de novo. Tallyrand said, "A mistake is often worse than a crime." The mistake of the Washington convention was in not trusting the people. You must do something to atone for this at your next meeting. You must tell the truth in your resolutions. Free discussion would hav prevented this humiliation. I will help you every way possible. I do not want to tear down, but to build up. I do not want you to be auxiliary to us. I never had such a thought. We will not, organically, be auxiliary to you. Let us help each other without the petty jealousy for which women are so proverbial. Let us hav peace.

R. B. WESTBROOK,
Pres. American Secular Union.

Asbury Park, June 13, 1890

Resolutions of the Portsmouth, O., Union.

WHEREAS, The American Secular Union and its auxiliaries believe that "the world is full of beauty, that there are 'fair humanities,' and that this glorious side of life should be emphasized so that every hearthstone may be brighter and better;" and

WHEREAS, This, our home, the great Northwest, is a spread of territory in itself of nature's most magnificent forms and man's largest enterprise; with a life so vast that not for a moment should be forgotten the defense of its liberty and the heralding of its hope;" and

WHEREAS, "The growth of Secularism up to the present time makes necessary new instrumentalities for its further advance, and as our aim is coöperation with all Freethought societies, which are now doing such valiant service," be it therefore

Resolved, That this body, in connection with other like organizations, people, and papers, especially endeavor to illustrate the progress of the great Northwest.

Resolved, That a lecture campaign be inaugurated for this purpose, by which greater liberty shall be attained, and that already possessed, retained.

Resolved, That Mrs. M. A. Freeman, of Chicago, Ill., be recommended to the different Freethought societies and citizens throughout Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania, as the first lecturer, and that such societies and citizens be requested to "join in," write her at once as to terms, dates, etc., and to arrange for her reception.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to each of the orders and citizens above mentioned, also a copy to the directors of the American Secular Union, and Mrs. M. A. Freeman, respectivly; and further to all foreign journals of Freethought and local papers for publication.

WHEREAS, The American Secular Union is "representativ of the times in which we liv, dealing with realities, recognizing the importance of this world and all its interests and welfare, giving living pictures of to-day, expressing the hopes and aspirations as well as the struggles of the common people, and striking with unflinching hand at the wrong that exists, and making no compromises," and

WHEREAS, It is nearing the time when the annual congress of the American Secular Union convenes, and as such a gathering is a notable affair made up of the most prominent orators and leaders in forwarding the thoughts above presented, representing all parts of the United States, from ocean to ocean, and gulf to lake, and as invited guests the "bright lights" of Freethought in the Dominion of Canada, for the north, therefore be it

Resolved, That we as an auxiliary and part of the American Secular Union, plead for the session of the next annual congress in this, our nativ city.

Resolved, That we, as a body, extend an invitation to the public, and especially the press, to assist to this end.

Resolved, That the matter be taken in charge by the president and committees of the Portsmouth Union, and that no delay occur in urging the matter and gaining the point.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the president of the American Secular Union, and that they be presented to papers at home and abroad for publication.

J. L. TREUTHART, President.
WILL S. ANDRES, Secretary.

The School Board Comes Down.

The school board at Lynden, Whatcom county, Wash., finding the law unmistakably against them, reconsidered their recent defiance, and hav instructed the teachers to discontinue all religious exercises or instructions in the public schools.

Having justice, reason, and all the law, on our side, the directors of the Washington Secular Union hav pursued the most patient and conservativ course, studiously avoiding anything like dictation, offensiv or hasty action.

Vice-President Tobiassen, our executiv officer for Lynden, first obtained evidence that the public school was opened with reading the Bible, repeating the Lord's prayer, and singing gospel hymns. He then waited on the members of the school board, called their attention to the requirements of the constitution, and kindly requested them to instruct the teachers to obey the law. They asked time to consider the matter, which was granted them. After nearly three weeks they informed him of their determination to continue religious exercises and instructions in the schools, and defied the Liberals to stop it.

Under advice of our president, R. Winsor, one of the most shrewd and able lawyers of the state, we sent letters to the superintendent of public instruction and to the state board of education, calling their attention to the facts, and asking them to take action in the matter.

Determined if possible to avoid litigation and the fierce religious dissension and bitter hate it would engender, I went to Lynden, and at the Opera House there delivered two lectures, calling attention to the law, and proving that it was equally to the interest of the most devout Christian as to that of the Liberal, that the wise and just provision of the constitution (Art. i, Sec. 2) should be enforced.

The following extract from a letter of Vice-President Tobiassen, of Lynden, dated June 8, 1890, will be read with interest: "Last Tuesday E. O Neil and Wm. Lauckhart, two of our most influential citizens (both members of the Washington Secular Union and of the Lynden Secular Union), visited the public school. As soon as school was called to order the principal announced to the school that he had received orders from the school board to henceforth discontinue all religious exercise or instruction in the school. One of the pupils asked if they might sing a gospel hymn. The principal answered, 'No!'"

An item in the last Lynden Press states that "our public schools are now opened without prayer, scripture reading, or singing, greatly to the disgust of many of the pupils."

Beyond doubt the Lynden school board did not revoke their first decision, especially in view of the excitement on the part of the religionists, until after consultation and advice from the superintendent of public instruction.

If so, thus ends all religious worship, exercise, or instruction in any public school in the state of Washington.

Glory, glory, glory, to practical organization!

All funds contributed for the purpose of the "Defense Fund," to make appeal to the courts, will be at once returned to the generous donors.

Our next struggle will be to enforce obedience to the law in regard to taxation of all church property, at its full valuation.

Once again I call on every genuin Liberal of this state, in any precinct where it has not already been done, to send in their names as members of the Washington Secular Union, and induce all Liberals in their neighborhood to do likewise, and, as soon as this is done, elect from their own number a vice-president of the state society, who shall be the executiv officer of the Washington Secular Union for that precinct. So that by right of office, and in performance of duty as the authorized officer of the united Liberals of the state, the assessment rolls may be examined, and when church property is not assessed at full valuation as the law requires (Art. i, Sec. 2, of the constitution, and H. B. 179, by Lughes, of King county) demand compliance, and in any case of refusal report to me as secretary of the Washington Secular Union that I may lay the matter before the board of directors for prompt, energetic action.

C. B. REYNOLDS,
Secretary Washington Secular Union.
2,104 Sixth street, Seattle, Wash.

Judge Carpenter's Charge to Mr. Heywood's Jury.

We hav here a case not materially different from other cases that hav been presented to you for your decision. It is a question whether the defendant has violated the laws. Long ago in the beginning of the government the postal service was established for the convenience of the people and for the carrying of such things as the legislativ department shall think proper. It is of course not true that any person has a right to send through the mails any package. If Congress had seen fit to exclude all printed matter from the mails no harm would hav been done. From the things that may be sent through the mails a great variety of objects are excluded. Poisons and live animals may not be sent through the mails. Indecent publications may not be. It is for offering for transmission such a package as this that the prisoner is now arraigned. He is arraigned for attempting to use the United States mails in the commission of what I suppose may fairly be designated the foulest, meanest, lowest offense of which a human being can be guilty. I suppose there is no offense which can be committed against the persons of our fellow-beings which reaches in hight of evil or depth of depravity such offenses as are directed against the mind as well as the conscience of our fellow-citizens. Therefore I say the offense, so far as my imagination of guilt goes, is monstrous. You must decide whether he is guilty or not. If he has done it the punishment will not interfere with the right of free printing nor with any other right of citizenship. We all hav happily the right freely to express our opinions on all subjects and spread them freely whenever they can be properly published. This is subject to the restriction that the things we say and things we write shall be proper, fit, and decent things. There is no freedom in this country for a man to do anything except to do right. The name of freedom is prostituted when it is employed to signify a privilege to do an evil thing. Now, another observation. It is said that the statute that we hav under consideration has set a trap into which he has fallen, that the prisoner innocently and conscientiously believed he was doing nothing that would seem to him to be wrong. He has fallen into the trap and finds himself caught. There are such laws as that. Sometimes by differences in construing a statute it happens that the law is a false light, a trap. In such case it would be becoming to you to see to it that no man suffers. We are here to administer the law and we are here as citizens and not as automatons. If we consider that the law is a trap I should see to it that you were in no danger of falling into mistake. If it were so. It is not so. The statute is plain, clear, and distinct. He was caught, he says. It is quite true. He was not trapped into the commission of the act and he was detected in the commission, and it is for that that he complains. He says that he had to put these papers in the hands of the postmaster, and then the postmaster held the papers and there he is in the trap. He needn't hav deposited. Is it to be desired by a citizen to avoid this statute? If it can possibly be considered that any decent citizen will hav any question whether he shall avoid it or not. If he wants to avoid it it is very easy to do it. Respectable journals are deposited without fear of it. If a man desires not to do his duty in good faith, with a foul object, if he desires to sail as closely as he can to the commission of a crime, if he desires to get as many indecent words as he can into his paper, or words that are just close to indecency and yet escape, if he is anxious to court the dignity of martyrdom and escape its penalty, then it is easy to see that he has a somewhat difficult problem before him. The way of the transgressor is hard, and the path of the man who desires to go as closely as he can to transgression will not be found free from difficulties.

Now, let us go to the technical questions, and they are but two in number. I say to you in the first place in considering this indictment, the first count is not to be considered by you. The testimony properly applies only to the second and third counts contained in the second and third leaves of the indictment. The charge also relates to two copies of the newspaper. You will bear in mind the business of the government in attempting to find him guilty here is to satisfy you that the charge is correct. The government takes the burden of proof. Now as to the fact and considering what he deposited in the post-office for mailing. It has been claimed here that the depositing in the post-office is admitted. That is not so. When, however, you come to the statements made by the postmaster and the prisoner as to what he did, as an official in this case I think I am right in saying that they do not differ. It was stated by both of them that the prisoner brought a basket of papers to the post-office and put them on the counter, offering them thus to the postmaster for the purpose of sending them through the mails. That constitutes the act of depositing them in the mails for transmission, and answers that question in the affirmativ. The only other question which may be made upon that testimony, Were these two packages among those contained in the basket? The postmaster deposes that they were and that he so marked them. There is the fact that the prisoner stated to Torrey that he had sent copies to him and they had been detained by the authorities. We hav the statement of the prisoner that he does not think these could hav been conveyed in the basket. Regarding that testimony you will make up your minds whether they were delivered to the postmaster. If you find that they were not you may stop your investigations, go no further, and find "not guilty." If you find they were.

It has been argued that in order that these papers shall be held to be obscene you must find that each and every part is lewd. This is not the law. In order that you shall find that they are lewd and lascivious, it is necessary to find such matter in them. If you do find it, that constitutes the paper a lewd and obscene one. The fact that there may be very much unobjectionable matter does not excuse it. If you find any part of it so lewd, lascivious, and obscene, you should then resolve the question in favor of the government. Now, as to what parts of these papers are lewd or obscene, the government has selected portions, shown in the indictment. You will look at those articles as you find them printed, and at no other. It may be that this paper will seem to you important in making up your mind whether they are lewd, lascivious, and obscene. These articles hav not been read to you up to this present moment.

It should be seen the question is whether these are or are not obscene, a question peculiarly fit for you to determin out of your own observation and out of your own conscience, untrammeled by arguments or any notion you may hav as to how others may regard it. It is a pure question of fact.

Is this article, or either of them—are they to either of you—lewd, lascivious, or obscene? Now it is suggested that anyone will hav difficulty in knowing what is meant by those words. These words are common words. Every person living among us has frequently heard them and knows what they mean. They are to be determined and construed by you, giving them their ordinary sense. You know what is meant by the words lewd, obscene, and lascivious, and I shall make only one or two observations on the meaning of them. Lewdness or obscenity I suppose may consist in a written paper in either one of two points; or specifically, it may exist in the words or in the thoughts that are conveyed. It may be possible that observations of a perfectly proper nature may be made in evil and indecent words, so that the obscenity and indecency of them consists in the words and not in the thought which may be expressed. Then there may be an obscenity far more subtle and reprehensible than through words that are in themselvs indecent and obscene. It has been suggested here that as for the obscenity of the words themselvs they are proper to use, that it is proper to use words under some circumstances which under other circumstances would be obscene. This suggestion is quite true. It is true that some words used in private used between persons holding certain relations to each other may be such as would not be obscene but when used in public they become indecent. It is sometimes proper in technical or scientific works to use words and make declarations and representations of things which while grossly improper in ordinary life become proper because they are necessary, but these papers do not come under any of those heads. This paper is a newspaper, a publicly printed paper intended, as it is said, for the purpose of reform. If so, of course it must be distributed among those who suffer from the evils in question. It is therefore not a technical or scientific paper nor is it a confidential communication. You must therefore determin whether the language so used in a public newspaper is obscene and whether the language which the prisoner himself has used and which could not well be misunderstood are the words and thoughts which are fit and proper under the circumstances under which they were printed.

Now there is only one other observation on the same subject in behalf of the prisoner. It is suggested that he has used obscene words and thus obscene thoughts, if he has so used them, under a sense of duty. He claims that he ought to use these expressions in the interest of public morals and for the good of society. It is not for us to dispute if he says that use is proper. It does not concern us in this investigation. It is familiar history that the greatest crimes hav been committed by persons who believed that they were doing God service. Honest persons hav been tortured and put to death. The greatest outrages against the rights of men hav been perpetrated by men who thought that they were commanded by the divine being so to do. They do not, however, excuse persons who under such pretext, whether sincerely or not, violate the laws of the land, or violate the law of decency. It is right for us to hold that no person should think that purity, manliness, and virtue could be promoted by sending through the mail a lewd, lascivious, and obscene paper. We hav before us an example of a person who apparently, with the education of a respectable man, yet believes it. All that can be said about that, is that however we should pity that state of mind—however we may regard his view, we may object to punishing him—nevertheless we ought to punish him for any wrong and indecent acts which he may be guilty of or has done.

Mr. Chamberlain: Regarding showing of pictures to his children?

The court: He showed them. That is quite correct. The attorney said that it was the testimony of the prisoner that he showed to his children certain obscene pictures. I do not remember that the prisoner characterized them as obscene. He said they were pictures which showed the organs peculiar to men and women in various postures. You will hav to determin whether such pictures are or are not obscene.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE last lecture for this season of the Liberal Club will be by T. B. Wakeman, on "Present Political Outlooks," at 220 East 15th street, Friday evening, June 27th.

W. F. JAMIESON writes: "In the course of a few weeks I will again, after an absence of four years from the land of cool breezes and beautiful parks, travel and lecture in Minnesota. I hav remained longer in Iowa than I expected to when I came last fall, most of the time quite busy, although traveling is rather costly. In a few places Freethinkers present a bold front to 'our friends, the enemy.' And in such localities Freethought is respected, while in many places where Liberals are timid and temporizing, the Christians are undisguised in their contempt of 'Infidelity.' I hav already received several invitations from Minnesota, a state which I very much like. I would be glad, however, to make a number of lecture engagements near together, in order to avoid long trips. I may be addressed at Des Moines, Ia."

J. E. REMSBURG is now conducting a summer campaign in the Northwest. His appointments, a portion of which hav already been filled, are as follows:

Galt, Ia.	Fri., June 13.
Conrad Grove, Ia.	Sat., Sun., 14, 15.
New Hampton, Ia.	Mon., 16.
Delavan, Minn.	Tues., Wed., Thur., 17, 18, 19.
Utica, Minn.	Fri., 20.
Waterville, Minn.	Sat., Sun., 21, 22.
Plainview, Minn.	Mon., 23.
St. Paul, Minn.	Tues., 24.
Anoka, Minn.	Wed., 25.
Kasson, Minn.	Thur., 26.
Hudson, Wis.	Fri., 27.
Neilsville, Wis.	Sat., Sun., 28, 29.
St. Cloud, Minn.	Mon., 30.
Grand Forks, N. D.	Tues., July 1.
Wahpeton, N. D.	Wed., 2.
Buffalo, N. D.	Thur., 3.
Valley City, N. D.	Fri., 4.
Jamestown, N. D.	Sat., Sun., 5, 6.
Huron, S. D.	Mon., 7.
Henry, S. D.	Tues., 8.
Estelline, S. D.	Wed., Thur., 9, 10.
Bruce, S. D.	Fri., 11.
Correctionville, Ia.	Sat., Sun., 12, 13.
Omaha, Neb.	Mon., 14.
Eagle, Neb.	Tues., 15.
Loup City, Neb.	Wed., Thur., 16, 17.
Gibbon, Neb.	Fri., 18.
Friend, Neb.	Sat., Sun., 19, 20.
Sterling, Neb.	Mon., 21.
Tecumseh, Neb.	Tues., 22.
Elk Creek, Neb.	Wed., 23.
Salem, Neb.	Thur., 24.

Mr. Remsburg organized Secular societies at Atlantic, Ia., and Galt, Ia., with the following officers: Atlantic, J. Bardtmann, president; Otto Wilken, secretary; Otto Shields, treasurer; Galt, J. H. Birdsall, president; Elliott Munson, secretary; James Winslow, treasurer.

The Times and Jim Buckley.

THE METHODIST BOOK CONCERN CHARGED WITH PUBLISHING AN OBSCENE BOOK.

From the New York Times of June 13th.

No subject is at present quite so distasteful to the editor of the Christian Advocate as the conduct of his religious paper and of the Methodist Book Concern, with which his paper has intimate business relations, in advertising and selling the African book of which we hav a pretty fair history in our issue of June 6th. He would fain drop the subject altogether, and he wishes from the bottom of his heart that the Times would drop it. If our righteous contemporary would giv his soul the great benefit of confession, if he would show a contrite heart and a penitent spirit, we would gladly oblige him. But to our exposure of the dishonest character and the obscene contents of the book in question he makes this reply:

The New York Times withdraws its charge that the book whose improper advertisment naturally evoked severe condemnation is "pirated." This shows that it made its savage attack in total ignorance of the subject. But to sustain its reputation for never withdrawing an erroneous charge without, if possible, covering its retreat with another attack, it changes the charge to "plain theft," and says that it is "filched right and left from foreign and American copyright books on Africa." This is not so. Like all compilations, the author got his fac s somewhere, though quoting from many sources, condensing, and paraphrasing, but did not infringe copyright. Whether a good, bad, or indifferent book, we do not say; that is a matter of literary criticism; but it is not "plain theft." Two-thirds of it were written before Stanley emerged, and what is said about his last tour is not filched from copyright matter, American or foreign. By taking parts of advertisments and suppressing the rest, the Times makes a plausible story as false in effect as its original charge. If its editorials usually are made up in the way these hav been, by writing first and trying to get facts afterward to justify or hide original mistakes, the readers of the Times can learn nothing from it but the caprices, prejudices, and perversions of its anonymous editors.

Inasmuch, reverend and dear sir, as you think it not unbecoming to meet proved charges of dishonorable conduct in such a fashion, we must inquire who you are and what your early advantages may hav been. Appleton's "Cyclopedia of American Biography" informs us that you were born in New Jersey, educated at the Pennington Seminary, "entered the class of 1860 at Wesleyan University, but left during freshman year to study theology at Exeter, N. H.," joined the New Hampshire Methodist Episcopal conference; were stationed at Dover, and subsequently transferred to Detroit, and then to Brooklyn; were a delegate to the Methodist ecumenical conference in London in 1881, and the same year were elected editor of the Christian Advocate. Now, where were you taught that the publication, the "puffing," the advertising and selling of a book deliberately put forth to cheat the author and the publishers of another book constitute an honorable business, or a business in which a doctor of divinity may be permitted to engage? Was it at Pennington, at Wesleyan University, or at Exeter? In the last-named place did you ever happen to meet Gideon R. Soule? What do you suppose that stern and righteous man would think of you and your dodgings and your lame excuses and your obscene book business if he were alive now? Somewhere in the course of your training you hav come under sound moral teaching, for, in the course of an article on "The Decay of Righteousness Our Country's Threatening Danger," published in your paper of the 12th inst., you say:

One great danger of our times is a partial holding of this theory that between right and wrong, honesty and rascality, truth and falsehood, there is no sharp dividing line, but only a shading insensibly of one into the other; that it is only a matter of degree, not of kind.

It seems to us that this "theory" has found pretty firm lodgment in your office and in your great Book Concern. Compare our charges with your answer, and ask yourself whether you hav kept in view "the sharp dividing line" between honesty and rascality, truth and falsehood. As to the origin of the book, we said this:

A compilation of this sort, though it should be sternly reprobated by a religious newspaper, and never be sold by a Methodist Book Concern, might pass without the censure of the worldly, for the art of compilation is useful, and has done much to diffuse useful information. But not only has the substance of the book been conveyed without honorable acknowledgment from storehouses of information filled by the arduous toil of many African explorers, but it was deliberately and craftily put forth with the wicked design of forestalling a forthcoming book by Henry M. Stanley, upon the sales of which the authorized American publishers, Charles Scribner's Sons, will pay Mr. Stanley copyright fees. An aroused public curiosity about Stanley's recent explorations was taken advantage of by Messrs. Hunt & Eaton, the agents of the Methodist Book Concern, to create a market for a book from which Mr. Stanley will not only derive no revenue, but the publication and sale of which was certain in some measure to diminish his profits from the authorized American edition.

If the compiler of the book had been an honorable workman, he would hav made some acknowledgment of the sources from which he compiled, but you know that this is not the gravamen of the charge. The discreditable part of the business is the studied attempt made by the agents of the Book Concern, aided and abetted by you, to palm this trashy and indecent volume off upon the public as "The New Stanley Book," for so you repeatedly advertised it in your columns. The Times made also this further charge:

It becomes almost an imperativ duty to say that this book, by reason of its illustrations and some passages of its letterpress, is one that no man could put upon his bookshelvs or show in his family without shame. It seems to hav been the intent of the publishers of the volume to illustrate every phase of African nudity that has been made available either by the sketches of travelers or the creations of a filthy imagination. And yet, disgusting as is the edition sold by the Methodist Book Concern, there is an earlier edition containing sixteen coarse wood cuts of naked negro women that hav been omitted from the religious edition. For what purpose could these obscene images hav been so plentifully introduced in the book except to cater to prurient tastes and increase the sales? Does not all the world know that most African races reject the fig-leaf as burdensome? Would not one or two examples of Ethiopian fashions hav served all proper historical and anthropological purposes?

What do you say in reply to that accusation? Not one word. You are afraid and ashamed to let your readers know that your paper has been engaged in such a dirty business. You do make this remark about the book: "Whether a good, bad, or indifferent book, we do not say; that is a matter of literary criticism." But in your "literary criticism" of the book—not an advertisment, but an editorial book review—on April 24th, you said that this was "the best and most trustworthy of the various books upon Africa yet placed upon the market," and you recommended it to the "masses" for its "educational value." And you hav the effrontery to say that the Times, "by taking parts of advertisments and suppressing the rest," made "a plausible story as false in effect as the original charge!"

Rev. Dr. Buckley, yours is a very sad case. You are an appointed teacher of religious truth. You are a doctor of divinity and of laws. You are a guardian of public morals. You stand on the watchtower, and in your weekly writings you warn the people that the "decay of righteousness" is "our country's threatening danger." And this exalted vocation of teaching and preaching you carry on side by side, without moral inconvenience or discomfort, so far as we can discover, with the very shady business of promoting the sales of a disreputable and disgusting book. Moreover, try as we may, we can't make you acknowledge that the book is disreputable and disgusting, and your only answer to our amply sustained charges is that by suppression of parts of advertisments we hav made up a story that is plausible but false. By the way, what has become of that pirated reprint of the Oxford Bible which your Book Concern's agents were advertising so conspicuously in your paper a few weeks ago?

Ingersoll on Oratory.

From the Philadelphia Press.

As Colonel Ingersoll's Indianapolis address in 1876 is regarded as the model of Decoration day oratory, and has gone into the school-books as a specimen of chaste and exalted eloquence, it seemed to me that perhaps he might be willing to say something both about the manner he adopted in composing this address, as well as upon the general subject.

I said to him that there prevailed a general belief that the Indianapolis address was impromptu, or, at least, extemporaneous. Colonel Ingersoll said that this opinion was entirely wrong, and was as incorrect in regard to his addresses as it was in regard to any speech or specimen of oratory which was thought worth preserving. I quote his language from memory, but still with sufficient accuracy:

There is no such thing as an extemporaneous address. Of course, I mean by that an address which is dignified, worthy of the occasion, and commands attention and respect. There never was and there never will be an impromptu speech. Of course I know that some men hav delivered speeches which hav attracted wide attention, which are reported to hav been inspired on the moment. But in the nature of things this is impossible. If you analyze a great speech, and consider what is necessary to make one, it is easy to see that such a thing as impromptu oratory is impossible. Now, a speech which is true oratory must, in the first place, suggest sublime, deep, and eternal truths. There must be thought, and it should be thought which is capable of producing correspondingly great emotion and sentiment in the minds of those who hear it spoken. Therefore, the thought cannot help being sincere; it must reflect the very truth, as the mind of the utterer has conceived it; and so no really great oration has ever been delivered which did not spring from the heart of him who spoke it.

Sometimes the thought is developed after excessiv, and it might be said exquisit, labor and turmoil of the soul. The operation of constructing or composing a speech which is truly great is precisely similar to that which enables the painter to express great emotions by colors and with the painter's brush upon canvas. The making of a great speech is like the formulating of a great painting. See how the operations are similar. The painter conceives a great truth, an idea capable of suggesting the profoundest realities of nature and of calling into being the sublimest emotions of the human intellect; he takes his palet and his brush, and with infinit patience mixes his colors and develops upon the canvas the thought which is in his mind. He labors over it patiently, affectionately, his whole soul wrapped up in the desire to express to the fullest that idea or emotion which is in his heart. Sometimes it is the labor of years; delicate shadings, strong, vigorous strokes, a defiance of technical rules if need be in order thereby the more strongly to bring out the idea upon the canvas; the touch of a brush guided with the superb delicacy which truth and love compel; and in this way the painter at last produces upon canvas that idea which was born within him and which makes clear to men for all time the power, the beauty, the strength, the loveliness of that conception.

Now, that is precisely what the man who is to deliver an oration must do if he is true to himself and if he would make the impression of the idea as it exists in him clear, strong, persuasiv, and emotion-stirring in those to whom he is to disclose it by means of word-pictures. For a great oration, a true oration, is but the painting of ideas by words instead of by colors, and the truth that is in it will be suggested as impressivly and as surely, if the speaker has been true to himself, as does the wonderful painting upon which multitudes, for generation after generation, look with wonder and with the best emotions of their nature stirred within them. Now, when we consider that it is with such methods as this that the true oration is perfected and delivered to the hearers, it is easy to see that it is impossible to formulate it while a man is standing upon his feet and to create on the instant and deliver thoughts by word of mouth which shall stand the test which makes or breaks an oratorical effort.

Colonel Ingersoll said these words with much of that fervor and earnestness which distinguish him as an orator. The remarks themselvs might hav been called a little impromptu oration, delivered on the suggestion of the moment, and yet they illustrated the force of the assertion which he made, for it was plain that he had thought much and deeply upon this subject, and had in reality already composed an oration in which the central thought was the idea expressed above. I asked him if there were not in his experience, both in his own career and in listening to the great orations of others, some other qualifications than those of which he had spoken. He replied that there certainly were. He said:

It takes not only the power of composing an oration but the experience which comes from long practice and patient labor in improving before the orator has delivered himself of his best. This is a matter of experience; there is a great deal in that. An orator must learn, and must learn by practice, how to formulate his thought in words so that it shall reach the audience or impress the reader with the best effect. There are no rules for such practice; each man must determin for himself; he must learn by experience; he can acquire the art of preparing and delivering a great oration only after many and arduous trials. If he possesses the gift he will sooner or later be taught by his own intuitiv perceptions what is the best to be done in each and every case.

I said to him that his remarks seemed to run counter to the opinion which has always prevailed, that Webster's greatest oration, that one which he delivered in reply to Hayne, was practically an impromptu speech, as but a single night intervened between Hayne's fiery oratory and Webster's great reply. It was also a matter of history that during that night Webster had made an effort to compose his reply. In answer to this, Colonel Ingersoll said that the popular impression in regard to that address was wrong. He said:

Why, the speech which we read now is not in form, though it is in spirit, the address which Webster really delivered. He spent many days in carefully revising and writing out the speech, and the published speech is Webster's revision and not the actual speech heard in the Senate chamber. Furthermore, it is well known by those who hav made some study of Webster's life and career that he had been for many years preparing this speech; he had bestowed upon it precisely that labor which I hav described as essential to the conception and composition of a great oratorical work. He had turned these constitutional truths over in his mind, thought deeply upon them, elaborated his conception, fortified his opinion by reference and study, and was really composing this great constitutional exposition during the space of many years. He knew well enough that the time would come when he would deliver it, and when the time did come, whether of a sudden or by prearranged impulse, Mr. Webster was perfectly ready to deliver the speech. Therefore, I declare that Webster's reply to Hayne was not an extempore speech. That he may hav been called upon of a sudden to deliver it does not impair the force of what I say. He was all ready to deliver it, and for a long time had been all ready. It was easy enough for him to reply to the temporary interruptions of Mr. Hayne and others; anybody could do that. The reply might be interjected into the speech, but it formed no part of it.

I reminded Colonel Ingersoll of the current anecdote about his hasty preparation of the famous address at Cincinnati in 1876, which has gone into history under the name of the "Plumed Knight" speech. I told him that it seemed to be pretty well authenticated that he had neglected to write the speech, although besought by his brother to do so, until the night before the nomination of Blaine was to be attempted, and that then, after he had gone to bed, he did get up in response to his brother's request, and, taking a few sheets of paper, dashed off the speech in a few minutes and then returned to his bed. There was a suspicion of a smile about the colonel's lips, and it seemed to me as though this anecdote had brought humorous recollections to mind of that midnight scene in the hotel when, rather petulantly, he yielded to his brother's request. But he said, speaking in seriousness:

Yes; it is true, so far as the writing is concerned, I did sit down and put what I had to say upon paper—all but the first paragraph. The first paragraph was suggested by something which I had heard upon the floor of the convention. A speech had been made nominating another candidate than the one whom I was to put in nomination, and some reference had been made to Massachusetts. That gave me an opportunity of saying in a single sentence something contemporaneous and suggested upon the moment, but after I had spoken that one sentence I delivered the speech as I had written it out, but the writing out of the speech was a mere mechanical operation. It was no part of its composition; the ideas which I had and which I uttered were those which had been in my mind, had been turned over in my mind, and had been composed long before.

I asked him if the same operation characterized the composition of the Indianapolis Decoration Day address, which was delivered in the same summer that the "Plumed Knight" speech was. Colonel Ingersoll did not seem to remember whether he had written out that address beforehand or not, but he asserted that its composition had been going on in his mind for years. The speech formulated and expressed the solemn and sublime emotions caused by an experience upon the battlefields and by familiarity with the awful tragedies of war. It represented thoughts which had filled his mind since '61.

An Interview with Medium Reid.

From the Detroit Evening News.

Modern Spiritualists are never quite at peace among themselvs and fail to harmonize either in their views of practical occultism or the mystical theories upon which they are based. The riddle of the sphynx is still a poser, and all that is claimed to be known through disembodied souls and spiritual forces as they manifest themselvs through some seer, medium, in trance, semi-trance, séance, or any other of the accepted inspirations which connect the spiritual and the material, is equally beyond the comprehension or faith of the uninitiated. There are still teachers of these strange doctrins, however, and they find their followers not only willing to accept the infallibility of the creed but to pay well for the services of those who would hav the world believe that their souls are attuned in accord with absolute divinity and that the mysteries of creation are unveiled at their bidding.

The mystery that surrounds the Spiritualistic apostles, the exposés, the frauds and claims of frauds, the unexplained phenomena and the inevitable conflict with the accepted religion of ages, invest the subject with unusual interest. Hence it was that the News called upon Dr. Reid, for he is rather conspicuous in his connection with the subject. The doctor resides at Grand Rapids, but is at present serving his country in the Detroit house of correction. Just why this favored communicant with the spirit world is subjected to this indignity will appear below. When called upon the doctor was willing to grant an interview, and a guard conducted him from the factory where he does a simple part at putting cane bottoms into chairs, to a place that's secure and at the same time comfortable.

The man whose professed faith and questionable works got him into trouble is far from being an ideal criminal. He looks about forty, is above the medium height, finely proportioned, quick in movement, clean cut in appearance, has piercing black eyes, black hair just touched with gray, a handsome mustache, and a dark skin through which flow the evidences of good health. He is a ready and an intelligent talker, has considerable magnetism, a smooth voice, and an assurance that is nicely tempered by good manners as well as by lightly alluding to anything which might appear as too strongly asserting his perfection in matters generally accepted as supernatural.

After stipulating that a copy of what he said should be given him and another sent to his wife in Grand Rapids, the doctor gave facts as follows:

"I was arrested June 5, 1889, and as I was not convicted until the latter part of last April, you will concede that I fought a good fight. I was taken for a violation of the United States postal laws, it being claimed that I wrongfully professed to obtain communications from the spirit land. I had a preliminary examination June 27th, and was placed under $500 bonds, which I furnished, to appear before the grand jury. I was indicted, and had my trial late in November, before Judge Severens, of the United States court; Hon. A. B. Richardson, the famous criminal lawyer of Meadville, Pa., and Frank S. Donaldson, of Grand Rapids, acting as my attorneys. The case occupied four days, the jury disagreeing and standing six to six.

"In that trial three sealed letters were introduced, one of them written by Dr. Claflin, of Marshalltown, Ia. He is a brother of the former Victoria Woodhull and Tennie Claflin."

"They hav just flitted back to Europe," and the reporter's statement was welcome news to Dr. Reid.

"No! Gone back, hav they? Got too hot for them over here, did it?"

"Had business on the other side."

"I guess so. We've got enough Claflins here without them.

"It was their brother's communication that got me into trouble when I was way behind in my work and needed every minute of my time. I had several stenographers helping me, and I was a very busy man with my magnetic healing, my weekly newspaper, the Banner of Life, and my Spiritualistic work in answering sealed letters. This Claflin letter wanted to know how he could accomplish the ruin of a certain party. After I ascertained the contents of the letter I refused to answer it, and returned the amount of money it contained."

"How did you learn what was said in the letter?"

"Through communication with spirits and exercise of the same power which enabled an automatic response to letters that I never opened or saw. When I declined to accede to Dr. Claflin's request I received a number of threatening letters. I finally called on the United States attorney, told him the contents of the letter, and asked him if I could safely hav it opened. He said that I could, and I thereupon notified Claflin that I would hav the seal of his letter broken in the presence of ten business men of Grand Rapids, which I did, its contents being just what I had foretold.

"Jas. Vincent, a friend of Claflin, also sent me a letter, inclosing 35 cents instead of the fee of from $1 to $5. This I sent to the post-office inspector at Chicago, who had seen me read letters harder than either of these in controversy. Claflin did not dare come to the state, so Vincent made the complaint. The prosecution in the first trial tried to prove that the objectionable part of Claflin's letter, which was on a separate piece of paper, was a forgery, but we showed that the paper, the ink, and the writing were identical. They never took that tack again. In the first case only one person out of ten claimed that I must hav opened the letter surreptitiously and inserted the obscene question.

"The second trial lasted over three days. All the evidence they offered against me this time was from some mediums who swore, in substance, that they had professed the same power which I possess, but that it was a fraud, and that they never took any compensation for pretending to exercise it. I can prove that they did. I wanted to show evidence of scores of letters answered correctly, but the court would not permit. I tried to get in the testimony of those to whom I had returned money because I could not answer them, but it was no go."

"Couldn't you read and answer all the sealed letters sent you?"

"No, there were fully a fourth of them to which I could obtain no response."

"Why?"

"That I can't explain any more than I can hundreds of other mysterious phenomena. I only know that I couldn't and that I returned such letters. It is not every departed spirit that I could commune with, nor are they always as propitious at one time as another. Numerous conditions hav to do with this, but I can't explain."

"Why didn't you sit right down in the courtroom and show them that you could do what you professed?"

"I did want to and was headed off there again. The district attorney had a lot of letters with him and a folding-slate wrapped up. He had boasted that he would show that I couldn't read, much less answer, a sealed message. My attorney took up this challenge given out of court and proposed to chance the test which must convict me if I failed. The district attorney couldn't object quick enough, and I was prevented this means of escape. Yet the judge, in his charge to the jury, said that if I honestly believed that I could obtain answers from the spirits of the departed, I was not guilty. How was I to show not only faith but ability to perform under such rulings?

"When I moved for a new trial before Judge Jackson I had Moulton and Rogers, because the former is a noted Spiritualist and wanted to argue from his standpoint as such. We had thirty odd reasons why we should hav another show, but as many thousands would hav done no good. Judge Jackson was very sarcastic, and among other things said that if any man would swear on a stack of Bibles as big as the court-house that he could answer sealed letters, the judge would not believe it. He agreed with Severns also in saying that anything bordering on the mysterious and beyond ordinary comprehension is prima facie evidence of fraud. It cost me $3,000 to make the fight, and at the end I got a year at hard labor in the Detroit house of correction."

"Is it hard labor?"

"I've had harder," and the doctor laughed cheerily. "One thing sure, I get a better show here than I did in the United States court. I couldn't ask better treatment."

When an attempt was made to go into the doctor's antecedents and history there was a noticeable contraction of his volubility.

"Were you born and raised in Grand Rapids?"

"No, I've been there three years."

"Where were you born?"

"I went to Grand Rapids from California."

"Born and raised there?"

"Yes."

"What part of the state?"

"Well, I lived all over the state."

"What was your business?"

"I did numerous things. I was in the mercantil trade and devoted a good deal of time to newspaper work. I'm running the Olive Branch at Grand Rapids now, or doing what I can toward it from this distance and under these circumstances. I tell you the treatment I hav received is creating a big agitation among Spiritualists. All the leading papers of my belief hav taken it up, and they're carrying the war right into Africa. Too many people know what I can do for such an outrage to pass unnoted. I hav answered as high as fifty-seven sealed letters in one night, and a dozen in an evening was usual. Hundreds of people about Grand Rapids can attest my powers."

"When did you first discover them yourself?"

"Some twelve or fourteen years ago."

"How?"

"Through acquaintance with Spiritualists, and a test of my mediumship."

"How long hav you practiced magnetic healing?"

"Only since going to Grand Rapids."

"Will you resume business at the old stand in the sealed-letter business?"

"Not a bit of it. I've had a genteel sufficiency of sending such answers through the mails. I'll operate on the platform and I'll show that I hav been falsely accused."

Items of Foreign Freethought News.

Henry V. Berghell, the Swedish Freethought lecturer, has a rather hard time of it with authorities and ministers. In Jönköping the police tore down the bills advertising his lecture, and prohibited the meeting. Yet in spite of this the meeting was held, and Jönköping's mayor, a bigot by the name of Palmgron, has, for giving these orders, been subject to a complaint by Mr. Berghell addressed to the provincial court. While lecturing in Norrköping, Mr. Berghell invited the clergy to attend, but of course the pulpit-pounders were conspicuous by their absence only. But as soon as the Liberal lecturer left the city they came forth, and Pastor Arblin did not hesitate to show his courage by calling the absent Infidel a liar and coward. Unfortunately Berghell returned two days later, and when hearing the "glad tidings," he caused to be printed a thousand copies of a short answer to said minister. The copies were distributed on the street, and caused a severe attack of "colic" among the orthodox. Well, our friend will get used to such treatment after a while, it is so very Christian.

The health of Mr. Victor E. Lennstrand is slowly improving, and we hope ere long to hear that he has re-assumed his position as lecturer and editor. His presence would be quite a help to the cause. His lecture, "Why I Am Opposed to Christianity," is up for the courts. The clergy want the publication of it prohibited; yet we think they will not succeed, inasmuch as all cases relating to liberty of press are to be judged by juries, and these never went back on Lennstrand.

Another Liberal has been indicted for blasphemy in Germany. In this instance it is the president of the Free Religious Society of Rixdorf-Berlin—Mr. P. Steinmar. Yet we need not be surprised. Anything may be expected from a government whose head claims the "divine right" of kings, and who has ordered that every German soldier shall in his knapsack carry a copy of the New Testament.

The eighth annual congress of German Freethinkers is over and may be pronounced a splendid success. A good deal of hard work was done. A union of the German Freethinker Society with the Free Religious Societies was brought about. The Freethought organ, the Menshenthum (Reign of Man), is to cease its existence, and a new paper acceptable to all Liberals is to be started in Fulda, Dr. Specht assuming the position as editor. The next congress will be held in either Erfurt, Hamburg, Mannheim, or Solingen.

Lectures were delivered, by Dr. Specht—"The Positiv and Negativ Side of Freethought;" Dr. Voelkel—"Thomas Paine and His Motto, 'The World Is My Country, to Do Good My Religion;'" Frau Hedwig Wilhelmi—"Do We Need a Religion?" while Dr. Rudt spoke about "Spiritualism."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - JUNE 28, 1890.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

IN PRESS.

The Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book.

One Hundred and Eighty-five Pictorial Arguments Against the Church, and Nearly the same Number of Pages of Reading Matter.

Price, $2; advance orders solicited.

The Union of Church and State.

It seems by the subjoined communication that a minister exists who doubts the word of THE TRUTH SEEKER:

"SALIDA, COL., June 10, 1890.

"EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: You say there is now a practical union of church and state, and it bids fair to soon become a great deal closer. True, emphatically; but when I said so to Rev. Mr. White, he asked for the proof of it. Would it not be well for you to take this for a text for the sake of others, ignorant of the two most important facts which concern us as Americans and Liberals?

"C. M. OVERTON."

There is a popular belief that church and state are separate in this country, but the belief belongs to that class of traditions which investigation shows to be without foundation in fact. The basis for this particular tradition is that the founders of the government intended to separate the two; that the first president officially declared that the government is not Christian; and the clause in an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the establishment of any religion.

There is no doubt that a majority of our people really believe church and state to be separate, and that we could never hav an established church anywhere from Maine to California. This is an error in thinking. The supreme court has decided again and again that the amendments are not binding upon the states, and therefore only the national government is prohibited from setting up a church. Any state can do it if the people so will; though it is a fact that most, if not all, of the state constitutions prohibit it likewise. But by changing their constitutions they can do it.

The United States government, however, does not maintain the spirit of this amendment. Congress governs the District of Columbia and the territories, and in all these places churches are exempt from taxation, religious societies receive public funds, and the Christian religion is recognized. Chaplains are employed and paid from public funds in both houses of Congress, and in territorial legislatures. All but one of our presidents hav issued religious proclamations. There are Sunday laws enforced by national power, for though the territories hav local legislatures which make laws, Congress is their superior. Sectarian Christianity is recognized by Congress, too, in giving the Indians to the sects to educate, and the granting to the sects of government land for religious purposes.

In the states the union is closer. In all of the states, except California and Washington, churches are free from taxation, and in New Hampshire the constitution provides that towns may provide for the support of Protestant ministers. All property used for "religious purposes" is exempt in Alabama, Florida, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, and the two Virginias. Only in fifteen states (California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Texas, Washington, Wisconsin) do the constitutions provide against sectarian appropriation, but these provisions are all rendered void by chicanery of legislators who are under church influence. In these states there is no constitutional provision against compulsory support of sectarian churches, though it is not done; and all the territories exempt churches.

Church and state are further united by the employment and payment of chaplains in all the state legislatures except Washington. All the states, except the same, notwithstanding constitutional prohibitions, make appropriations for religious and sectarian purposes. Even California, with an iron-clad constitutional prohibition, lets religious institutions get hold of state funds; and no doubt the Christians of Washington will find some way to break into the state treasury when the Liberals are not watching them.

Public schools form another close connection between church and state. In no state or territory are public schools conducted without religious worship, and this, too, often in violation of laws and constitutions. The Christians hav no sense of shame in this matter, nor do they mind a violation of law in carrying out their purposes. In New York, for instance, it has been decided several times that singing religious hymns and Bible reading in schools are illegal, but it is done every school-day in the year. The children are taught to believe that Christianity is as true as the multiplication table, and as much a part of their life as their duty to obey their parents and teachers.

By the appointment of public religious holidays, and by the enactment of Sunday laws, Christianity is imposed upon us, and the church and state united; the state punishing the people who violate the laws which are nothing at all if not of religious significance. In itself it can be no sin to labor on Sunday; the sin is in breaking the holy day of the church. It was only two weeks ago that we published the decision of judges in Minnesota, Texas, Alabama, and New Hampshire that the disregard of the "Sabbath," the refusal to recognize it as a day sanctified to holy purposes, constitutes the offense. In nearly all the states the same view has been taken by Christian judges, and those refusing to keep the Christian holy day punished according to law.

In the judicial oath, too—calling upon the Christian God to attest the truthfulness of the witness—there is a direct union of church and state. In nearly half of the states a man who does not believe in the two chief articles of the Christian faith—the existence of God and the reality of future rewards and punishments—has no standing in court. Agnostics and Atheists are forbidden to testify, or their testimony is discredited because of their unbelief.

And closest of all unions is the barbarous and iniquitous blasphemy laws which are in force in Connecticut, Dakota, Delaware, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Vermont, and the dead-letter Maryland law which provides the death penalty for blasphemy in the District of Columbia. It is not many years since the authorities of Delaware were trying to get hold of Colonel Ingersoll for blasphemy, and every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER recollects the conviction of C. B. Reynolds in New Jersey on the same charge.

These are the most flagrant of the statutory instances of the union of church and state. Practical instances of the union can be multiplied indefinitly. Every dollar, every rod of ground, given to churches and church institutions is such union. Every prayer made in a legislature is such union. Every prosecution for Sabbath breaking is such union. Every witness rejected because of unbelief indicates the union. Every religious song and reading from the Bible in the public schools is such union. Every prosecution for blasphemy is such union—a revival of the Inquisition. It is only because people willfully close their eyes to these things that they imagin the church and state are separate in this country. Just to wake them up we will giv some of the cases occurring within a few months.

C. W. Cook, of New Haven, Ind., was convicted and fined because he allowed an automatic cigar machine to work on Sunday.

Baseball players hav been arrested in Grand Rapids, Mich., for playing on Sunday.

R. M. King has been convicted in Obion county, Ohio, of violating the Sabbath, and fined $75.

The schools in New York are always closed on Good Friday, which is nothing but a religious holy day.

In Wisconsin it took a decision of the supreme court to prevent sectarian instruction in the public schools of Edgerton.

South Norwalk, Conn., recently closed every business place in the city.

The committee on Education and Labor in the House of Representativs has reported another bill to make Sunday labor in the District of Columbia illegal. The bill has passed the Senate.

Postmaster-General Wanamaker has discontinued Sunday mail service because Sunday is a Christian holy day.

In Chicago, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Newark, N. J., Omaha, Minneapolis, and other cities Christian societies hav closed or are trying to close theaters, cigar stores, concerts, and other places of business or amusements on Sunday.

President Harrison has ordered the religious observance of the Sunday by the officers and men of the army and navy.

Some twenty or thirty Seventh Day Adventists hav been prosecuted, convicted, and imprisoned in Georgia, Arkansas, and other states for not keeping the Christian Sabbath.

H. J. Ward, of Coaling, Ala., has been deprived of his civil rights, and refused the privilege of using the courts, because he is not a Christian.

These are but a few of the hundreds of cases that hav been published of persecutions for Sabbath-breaking and violating other Christian rules. They show how the church uses the state to enforce its peculiar notions, and how Christian officials use their power for the benefit of their churches. Everywhere, almost, the church controls the state in many ways, and secular government is made subordinate to religious principles. These cases are representativ: one stands for thousands of others of which we do not hear. And we hav said nothing in this list of the colossal union formed by church exemptions and sectarian appropriations. We do not know—no one knows, because the statistics are concealed—the enormous amounts of money the states giv to the churches. In this city alone it is about two millions annually. In all the states the amount must be fabulous. The exemptions are still more costly to the people—something like $30,000,000 per annum on the $1,500,000,000 worth of exempt church property. So burdensome has this financial union become in Maryland that the last legislature passed a bill submitting a proposed amendment to the clause of the state constitution which exempts church property. The amendment provides for the taxation of all property. In Baltimore alone over fifty million dollars' worth is now exempt and the evil is so great that even some of the Methodists are clamoring to do away with this union of church and state, and are asking for impartial taxation, and seem willing to pay their taxes, because the Roman Catholics own two-thirds of the exempt property!

We could fill columns with facts on this subject. Look at the union of church and state in Poughkeepsie, where the school board paid for the schools and Catholics taught them! Look at the discontinuance of public schools in Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Kansas through the union of school authorities and the priests! All through the country where the church authorities hav power they are making the taxpayers support their religion. In Illinois the Protestant authorities of the state university refuse to allow a student to complete his course of study because he would not attend chapel! In Concord, N. C., a man who has performed public services can not collect his pay because he cannot conscientiously take the oath which Christians hav devised, as he does not believe in God and future rewards and punishments.

These unions of church and state already exist, but still the church is not satisfied, and each branch of it is striving to obtain full power over the people and restore the old regime. The Catholic would take us back to the Middle Ages; the Protestant to Puritan times. East and West the Catholic church is making prodigious strides toward accomplishing its purpose. The votes of all its slaves are at its command and they are used for its welfare. The Protestants already control the public schools, and they are endeavoring to control the government of the country as well. A writer, Mr. Loughlin, in the Dubuque Telegraph, states the case plainly and truthfully. "Protestantism," he says, "is and has been since 1833 openly and secretly plotting away the religious rights of the people through an organization formed with that object in view, known as the National Reform Association. This society is composed of ministers and lay representativs of the various Protestant denominations. The object contemplated by this society is a religious amendment to the federal Constitution—an establishment of church and state. It originated at Xenia, O., in February, 1863, in a convention composed of eleven Protestant denominations who assembled for prayer and conference, not in relation to the amendment of the Constitution, but the state of religion. Meetings (small in numbers) were held shortly after in Pittsburgh and elsewhere. At first the association was called a religious council. Now it is the 'National Association to Secure the Religious Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.' The first national convention was held in the First United Presbyterian church of Allegheny, Pa., January 27, 1864, at which a large delegation was appointed to present the matter to the attention of President Lincoln. Conventions were held in New York in 1868, in Columbus, O., February, 1869, and in Monmouth, Ill., 1871. National conventions were held in Pittsburgh, 1870; Philadelphia, 1871; Cincinnati, 1872, and New York, 1873. The business committee at its Cincinnati session recommended that the delegates to the Convention hold meetings in their respectiv localities to ratify the proposed religious amendments to the constitution, and that twenty thousand copies of the proceedings be published in tract form for gratuitous distribution among the people; also that auxiliary branches be established in every state.

"Among the resolutions adopted at this session were the following:

"'Resolved, That it is the right and duty of the United States as a nation settled by Christians—a nation with Christian laws and usages—to acknowledge itself in its written Constitution to be a Christian nation.

"'Resolved, That, recognizing the importance of this subject, we pledge ourseivs to present and advocate it until the nation shall declare its Christian character.'

"The then President Brunot announced the chief object of the National Reform Association to be:

"'Such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States (or its preamble) as will suitably acknowledge almighty God as the author of the nation's existence and the ultimate source of its authority, Jesus Christ as its ruler, and the Bible (the Protestant version) as the supreme rule of its conduct, and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all Christian laws, institutions, and usages on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.'

"Here, then, is an open and avowed declaration of hostility to religious liberty in the country and an unmistakably expressed determination to invade the constitutional guarantee of the right of the citizen to worship according to the dictates of conscience or not to worship at all if so disposed. The adoption of such an amendment would make Christianity the religion of the nation, and with the Bible declared in the Constitution to be the 'supreme rule of conduct of the nation,' its retention in the public schools would then be perfectly justifiable and its reading be 'put upon an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.' While this great Protestant association is in existence it is inconsistent and hypocritical in the Protestant clergy to prate and lecture in favor of non-sectarianism in public schools, the abuse of the taxing power of the government, or against the establishment of church and state. But it may be objected that this society is not in favor with the majority of Protestant ministers. Let us see. It is the boast of the friends of the Blair bill that it received the approval of every Protestant minister and society in the United States, and this measure sought to incorporate the God idea and nationalize the Sabbath as a day of rest and Christian worship. The St. Joseph district conference of the Methodist church, Marysville, Mo., passed the following resolution Oct. 4, 1882:

"'Resolved, That we do most heartily commend and indorse the object of the National Reform Association, and we pledge to them our prayers for success in securing their commendable and much-needed amendment to our national Constitution.'

"The general conference of the same church held in Philadelphia two years later (1884) adopted similar resolutions, declaring Christ as the foundation of civil law. The Iowa State Baptist Association at Shenandoah, Oct. 5, 1882, embodied the same sentiments as follows:

"'Resolved, That we earnestly approve of that part of the resolutions adopted by the Protestant National Association, which aims at the enactment of such laws as will lead to the better observance of the holy Sabbath, and the use of the Bible in our public schools; that we should acknowledge through the Constitution our faith in God and Christ.'"

"And only last week the Presbyterians in their General Assembly at Saratoga declared in a set of resolutions that the expulsion of the Bible from our schools was suicidal and deplorable, and urged Protestants everywhere to protest and so arouse public thought on the subject from pulpit, press, and ecclesiastical assemblages, that the Bible shall be retained in the public schools.

"This society has branches in every state in the Union, incorporated with headquarters at Washington, tract societies, lecturers employing a part or whole of their time traveling up and down the country from Maine to Oregon, and official organs established, in one of which, alluding to the Infidel and Jew who would be deprived of religious liberty, it says: 'If they insist on so working as to interfere, or violate the amendment, they must either move or be moved away.'"

It is this society which on another page of this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER Mr. T. W. Smith, a Christian missionary, completely dissects. Alone, the National Reform Association would not be formidable, but it has the support of other Christian organizations, and has its friends in nearly every legislativ hall in the country.

No union of church and state! It is all union; the Christians are sitting astride our necks like the Old Man of the Sea. They hav put their religion into nearly all our laws, and they hav made our governments conform to their superstition in scores of ways. And, not satisfied with this, they are trying to get their God recognized in our national Constitution; to establish their inquisitions all over the land; and to make all legislation, state and national, conform to their ideas.

There is a closer practical union of church and state in this country than there is in some countries which hav a state religion.

Two in Prison: The Other Probably Going.

Medium Reid, with whom the Detroit Evening News recently had an interview (reprinted on page 407), seems to be cheerful for a man in jail, and just as confident as ever that Spiritualism is founded on facts and that he is one of its prophets. Whether these things be true or not, he is unjustly suffering, or else every other medium and priest and minister ought to be keeping him company.

There is no further news from Mr. Harman, except that his physical health remains good. The petitions for his release are being activly circulated from the offices of all the Freethought papers.

Postponements hav been the order in Mr. Heywood's trials. The motion for a new trial has not been argued in the United States court, where a conviction was had last week. The state case, Mr. Heywood writes, was "liable to come on" last Monday, the 23d. Whether it did or not we hav not learned.

On a preceding page (405) is the charge of Judge Carpenter which convicted him in the United States court. The charge is much like other judicial charges in similar cases, and is strongly against the prisoner. A few of the things to which fair-minded people will except in this address to the jury may be briefly stated.

In every criminal trial it is the duty of the judge to see that the defendant is adequately defended and has fair play; that no unjust advantage is taken of his situation and that the presumption of innocence has its full operation in his favor. How far Judge Carpenter fulfilled these duties toward Mr. Heywood each can determin for himself. Again: A charge to the jury should state the law precisely and definitly. If the judge considers it necessary to refer to the testimony of witnesses that testimony on both sides should be stated antithetically and the jury left to decide which of the two contradictory stories is the true one. Judge Carpenter did not do this.

It is monstrous for a judge to endeavor to influence the jury by such a statement as this charge contains, that the offense Mr. Heywood was called to answer "might fairly be designated the foulest, meanest, lowest offense of which a human being can be guilty." And the statement that the right to express and publish our opinions upon all subjects freely "is subject to the restriction that the things we say and the things we write shall be proper, fit, and decent things," is just the notion under which many a truth has been sought to be suppressed. How shall a jury decide what is proper, fit, and decent? It was not proper, fit, nor decent for Galileo to express the opinion that the earth moved, nor was it proper, fit, nor decent for Wm. Lloyd Garrison to declaim as he did against chattel slavery, etc., etc.

It is simply preposterous for the judge to stand up there and say that "respectable journals are deposited in the mails without fear of this law." What constitutes a respectable journal? Was the Evening Telegram, which contained outline wood-cuts of nude pictures from the Paris Salon, a respectable paper? If yes, what made it a respectable paper? Was it not respectable because it was so rich and powerful that the obscenists did not dare attack it as they would eagerly hav attacked a weaker and less influential paper? What about the case of the Northern Ohio Democrat? Was not that a respectable paper? What is the test of their respectability? Is it not after all a very misleading standard for a judge to set up in such a case, that of respectability?

The judge says, "If a man desires to get as many indecent words as he can into his paper, or words that are just close to indecency and yet escape, if he is anxious to court the dignity of martyrdom and escape its penalty, then it is easy to see that he has a somewhat difficult problem before him." Now, this talk was not merely thoughtless and unbecoming in the judge, but it was just the kind of talk that a judge should avoid. The manifest purpose of it was to induce the jury to think that they had in the defendant just such a person as the judge described.

The charge that the finding of lewd and lascivious matter in a paper is sufficient to constitute the whole paper an obscene paper is interesting. In applying this rule to the Bible there seems to be no escape from the conclusion that the whole Bible is obscene. This is an item of much importance to our Christian friends. A few more legal decisions of this kind and they will perhaps realize that he who plants the wind will reap the whirlwind.

The concluding sentence of the charge exhibits very clearly the judge's disposition. Before reading through the charge to this portion of it the reader will hav discovered the spirit which culminated in the last clause, "However we may regard his view, nevertheless we ought to punish him for any wrong and indecent acts which he may be guilty of or has done."

The word "indecent" is so broad and indefinit that the judge should hav left it out of his speech to the jury. There are a great many things which the average man regards as indecent that are neither criminal nor obscene. To use the words, "proper," "decent," etc., givs a jury too much latitude. A Christian unhesitatingly calls a Freethinker's argument indecent; a Freethinker just as unhesitatingly and with a million times more truth retorts that the Bible is indecent, improper, and not respectable. The judge, therefore, should not hav used the words, but confined the jury's attention to the words printed by Mr. Heywood, the law, and the definition of obscenity. No man should be sent to prison because he is "improper."

WRITING about the Cassadaga Lake Spiritual picnic in the Progressive Thinker Lyman C. Howe says: "P. L. O. A. Keeler is also on the grounds and expects to remain until camp opens. This will giv an opportunity for skeptics and seekers in western New York to test his powers before the rush of August comes." It seems to us that Mr. Howe should hav left out the invitation to skeptics. It sounds very bold and fair, but Mr. Keeler will not back up his backer's words. He is the medium who refused to giv any séance at all to Mr. McArthur and the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER when they were in search of a spirit.

Letters from Friends.

LOTUS, CAL., June 8, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $6, for which please forward three copies of the book of pictures. G. W. RAMSEY.

BLUFFTON, TEX., June 15, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $2 for your "Pictorial Text-Book." I am very anxious to see it. D. M. BAKER.

POINT PLEASANT, W. VA., June 14, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 for the cartoon book, and when your pictorial Bible is finished put me down for a copy. Yours, etc., J. R. SELBE.

GREELEY, COL., June 11, 1890

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, for which please send to the friend's address inclosed the "Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book." Yours truly, EULAH C. STILLWELL.

CITY POINT, FLA., June 7, 290.

MR. EDITOR: I vote for the pictures, but, pictures or no pictures, THE TRUTH SEEKER is indispensable to us, and as long as I can raise a dollar I expect to remain a subscriber.

Yours truly, C. L. FABER.

S. OTSELIC, N. Y., June 1, 290.

MR. EDITOR: If my purse was as large as my soul, I would send $50 and call it a glorious investment. I vote for Heston and the cartoons. I want the new book of cartoons soon. MARY PECK.

CASTANA, IA., June 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $40. Send Mr. Reynolds or the treasurer of the Washington Secular Union $20. Send me two copies of the "Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book," and the other books on inclosed list. The rest of the money use where it will do the most good.

Yours for the truth and right, F. A. DAY.

CELINA, O., June 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 for the renewal of my paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER. Let her come and hit those Bible-pounders hard. John Peck is surely full measure. Heston is all right; long may he continue in the good work of showing up the absurdity of priestcraft.

Yours respectfully, HENRY T. NICOUM.

MONTREAL, CAN., June 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav now been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER for the last few years, and can heartily indorse all that has been said in praise of it by others. I read with pleasure your decision to continue the pictures, and I am sure had they been removed the strongest arguments against superstition and fraud would hav been omitted from your paper. JOHN R. CONWAY.

CRESSON, PA., June 10, 1890

MR. EDITOR: I hav enjoyed your paper so much that I feel I cannot do without it. My means are very limited, or I would gladly help along the good cause. What a boon THE TRUTH SEEKER would hav been to me some years ago, when I floundered around in the darkness with no helping hand to lead me into the light. ANNIE M. COYLE.

SPRECKELSVILLE, MAUI, HAWAIIAN ISLANDS, May 24, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to know that you hav decided to continue the pictures in your valuable paper, and also to issue them in book form, so I hasten to inclose $5, for which please send me one copy of Heston's cartoons, and one of his pictorial Bibles when published. I send kind regards to Watson Heston, John Peck, and all the good truth seekers who are laboring in the Liberal vineyard. WM. BARCLAY.

PRAIRIE CITY, IA., June 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please publish the following and oblige. A Union Liberal meeting was given in Union Hall yesterday at 2 P.M., under the auspices of the local Brotherhood of Moralists. Prof. John E. Remsburg was present, and for over an hour addressed a large audience on the life and works of Thomas Paine in an able and telling manner. This is Professor Remsburg's third visit here, and that he may return soon is the wish of all who heard him. IRA E. DRAPER.

PAROWAN, UTAH, June 5, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please send some petition blanks for petitioning Mr. Harman out of prison. I will circulate them, and make up a subscription also. I am a Freethinker, and always was. I think the Christians will get ashamed of themselvs if there is any shame to them. I had a talk with a Christian from Kentucky the other day, and I made his belief appear so ridiculous that he laughed at it, but he said he could not giv his God and did not know he had any. Well, if the president is like a Presbyterian minister that I know, why, it will do no good to petition for Mr. Harman. I will close, wishing you a long life. Please send catalog.

Yours, etc., WM. W. PAGE.

FRIENDSHIP, N. Y., June 10, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: To my mind the illustrations in THE TRUTH SEEKERS Nos. 21, 22, and 23 portray the absurdity, unfairness, and cruelty of the Christian religion paramount to any before given. How can sensible people be so blinded by ignorance and superstition as to believe palpable falsehood? Hon. A. B. Bradford is excellent. He writes with all the wisdom and polish of the thinker and scholar. He has the richness and vigor of ripe years, with none of the infirmities. May all who can, promptly send aid to C. B. Reynolds, to combat the issue now forced upon the people of his adopted state. The editorials are stirring exponents of present issues. Roman Catholicism is the danger of the hour. I tremble for the result. GRACE L. PARKHURST.

PRATTSBURGH, N. Y., June 14, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 for the best paper I ever read. Please never stop it. I read all with great interest. And when James Parton found fault with the cartoons I felt like giving three rousing cheers for him, for, as I thought it would, it proved a great boom for the paper. He might hav been sincere in his objections, but I hav doubted it. I think that he foresaw the result. It has helped the paper more than anything else could hav done. The vote has been almost unanimous for the pictures. Now, I vote for three rousing cheers for James Parton, the man that has done more than any other for the cause in showing up Christian absurdities. I will say to you, go ahead. You know just how to edit THE TRUTH SEEKER. Send me the cartoon book as soon as out, and I will remit on receipt. I wish I could do more for the cause. I think I will some time. GEO. H. LOOK.

OTTUMWA, IA., June 9, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I hav often wondered why the Freethinkers throughout the country thought it necessary to defend, with influence and money, anybody charged with sending obscene literature through the mail. In advancing the arguments of Freethought and liberty is it necessary to sink into obscenity? I think not. The evidence on our side is ample without resorting to the questionable, the obscene. The greatest arguments that I hav ever read could be read before a class of school-girls.

I hav read THE TRUTH SEEKER for nearly ten years with great profit and pleasure. Ottumwa is an enterprising and wide-awake city, and I believe that a good lecturer could organize a Liberal League. There are quite a number of Freethinkers here that by an organized effort could do some good work. JOHN W. DAYTON.

BEDFORD, MONT., June 4, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I send you to-day two copies of the Helena Herald, containing letters from a namesake of yours, Henry McDonald, on Jerusalem and Rome, thinking they may interest you. The Herald has always been a very conservativ paper, careful of offending the churches, especially the Catholic, which is a great power in Helena, and I was surprised at the publication of these letters—which is probably owing to Mr. McDonald being a wealthy and popular citizen of Helena, but I do not know.

Soon after my return from the Woman's National Liberal Union convention in Washington I had the objects, resolutions, and some of the proceedings published in our local paper. The next morning the Catholic priest (a fat young Belgian, resident at the headquarters in Helena) rushed into the office and delivered a great tirade, saying that "such things must not be published, they would ruin the country," etc. I do not think he frightened the editor much, however.

A poor but intelligent squaw near here has had her children at St. Peter's mission near Great Falls. She went there herself and worked a short time, and the terrible abuses and infamies practiced there caused her to bring her children away and hav turned her from being a faithful Catholic, as she had always been before. I wish I could ventilate the deviltry practiced in that school and make the government stop it. How can I? EVA WARREN COLLIER.

FAWLEY PLACE, QUINCY, ILL., June 11, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose an order for your holy Bible pictures to the amount of $2. I do not buy this book exclusivly for my improvement in freedom, but that I may show it to my Christian friends whose mental obtuseness cannot be reached by argument, but may be touched through the eye, as pictures often explain themselvs, and even if caricatures are in many cases more effectiv than the cold letter. "The spirit [pictures] quickeneth, but the letter killeth." I would say, it depends a good deal how the letters are put together. Like a piece of machinery, if wrongly mated they would be useless and in many cases dangerous to our physical well-being. The Roman Catholics and Lutherans are kicking like an army mule against our compulsory school law, and are sending out circulars to our candidates for office. What the office seekers will answer it is very easy to surmise. They will come right down, and, as usual, eat crow, caw and all. There will be no independence in this country among our politicians until the church is made to feel that the laws of our country are above the church. I saw a Roman Catholic funeral procession the other day; the religious banner in front, and the American flag relegated to second place. This ought not to be allowed, and would not be if our demagogs did not hanker for the votes of the ignorant and degraded followers of the pope. It will ever be thus until our naturalization laws are changed, and our immigration laws are made to conform to what is right and just. Liberal candididates are almost as bad as the Christians are when it comes to wanting votes.

Yours truly, JOHN L. MOORE, J.P.

KENTON, May 28, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: The Cincinnati Enquirer of the 16th inst. published a glowing account of the centennial celebration of Methodism in Kentucky, at Lexington—the Northern branch at the Centenary Methodist Episcopal church, and the Southern at the Tabernacle at Woodlawn park. Both places were well attended and much enthusiasm was manifested. They had sermons, prayers, and songs. And to prove to the world that they are the elect, they, as usual. went back to the creation and dug up all the fables and prophecies recorded in the book of books, and came down the stream of time to the flood, when their merciful father destroyed his children for worshiping idols, images, just such as the Roman Catholic worships to-day. And they come down to the tents of Moses and the prophets, and they find evidence there that they are the elect and the Jews are the lost, notwithstanding the fact that they pretend to believe every word the Jews wrote up to the time of Christ, when the Jews would not abandon what they had been taught by their inspired prophets for thousands of years and get Christian religion. The Methodist brother preaches himself into heaven and the poor Jew out of heaven. The Methodist never fails to impress his hearers with the fact that he loves Jesus above all else, and never tires of calling on him for his daily bread, and thanking him for what he is about to receive.

Now, to show the hypocrisy of the Methodist Episcopal brother, and to prove that he is a rank fraud, it is not necessary to refer to history ancient or modern, for the reason that there are millions of living witnesses in these United States to-day who remember when the civil war broke out in 1861, when it was left for them to choose which they loved best, their Jesus or their politics. You remember the Southern brother stood by his n ggah and the Northern by his Abolition doctrin. They threw their Jesus overboard and stood by their politics like little men, for which, if anything, I admire them, For downright hypocrisy the Methodist is surpassed only by the Catholic priest, who says to his dupes, I can forgiv your sins. GEO. BAKER

SAN MARCIAL, June 8, 1890.

TO H. WETTSTEIN: I read carefully your challenge to mediums. On reading your article, which I hav no doubt you intended for an argument, but which seems to me more of a question-begging effort, I came to the conclusion, if you had known anything of the subject of Spiritualism you would never hav written such an article. While your article will never make any impression on Spiritualism other than favorable, I think it will fully convince many who read of one fact, far from patent to yourself, i.e., you don't know, and you don't know it. Brother Wettstein, if you are seeking the truth you may find it and it will not cost you the $100, and I will promis you the Spiritualists will not "kill the fatted calf" for your benefit. You quote, "O consistency, thou art a jewel," and then ask Spiritualists to "make a note." I will do so by calling your attention to a very important fact you seem to hav overlooked—the name of that jewel is not Wettstein. In the article immediately following yours readers will find goods of the same chain and filling. You should know the writer, as I think you would be to each other a joy forever. Candidly, as an independent thinker, were I an honest medium—I am not a medium—I would treat your silly offer as an insult to a class of people equal in intelligence to Liberals and superior to them in Liberality. I only wish to express my opinions of that class of essay. No doubt you will be noticed by others more competent. If you desire truth, seek out some Spiritualist, make your desires known to him in a respectful manner, act on his or her suggestion, practice reasonable patience, and see what you may find—is the advice of a candid reader. W. J. RIBLEY.

NEENAH, WIS., June 2, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: If you can, will you please answer the following question for me? I hav always believed in deeds, not faith, according to all teaching. A few days ago a thought came to my mind. Was the word faith translated right? or rather, in the original copy was that word faith used? The more I read the more I am convinced it means all the highest principles of honor, like truth, loyalty, justice, charity, etc. I am writing of the faith mentioned in the New Testament.

I just finished the Bible yesterday; commenced to read it New Year's day. I read it for investigation. In my opinion, from what I hav seen of life and heard of people's opinion, if our land did not hav any better laws than and was as ignorant as the lands of eighteen hundred years ago, Col. R. G. Ingersoll would be stretched upon a cross. He would be a second Christ. The bigots would crucify him for teaching a better religion than is taught and our Bible holds.

Please answer me what you think the word faith means in the Bible. OLIVE M. LA BARRE.

[Buck's "Theological Dictionary" has the definition: "Faith is that assent which we giv to a proposition advanced by another, the truth of which we do not immediately perceive from our own reason and experience." That is, faith is that acquiescence which the timorous part of mankind has been induced to render to propositions advanced by priests of such a nature as to secure themselvs revenue and power, notwithstanding that the truth of the propositions could not be perceived by any of the means of knowing that we hav. Christ enjoined faith in himself personally; but the tying of faith to any one person is abhorrent to the genius of modern science. It is true that there are conjectures to the effect that where Christ seems to require devotion to himself he actually means devotion to those qualities that you mention. We hav published some pamphlets by Mr. Longshore developing such a theory. But what Christ said is of slight account. If by chance a few not unwise counsels found a place among the mass of rubbishy deliverances that he inflicted on the world, we need scarcely intermit our harvesting of the rich crops of science to go back and sift them out. If Christ ever made the remark that we should observe truth and justice, he said only what every person around us may be heard to say often enough. Men hav always desired, and enjoined in a general way, the observance of truth and justice; just what constituted truth and justice in particular cases is that which has been difficult to determin. On this, Christ helped us to no knowledge instead, he put the searchers for it on the wrong track for centuries. It is Science that is progressivly endowing us with this exact knowledge of truth, on social rights and duties and on all other matters; and it is in service to her, and in ridding believers of that engrossment of attention by Christ's crackbrain doings and sayings that keeps them from joining us in this service, that we must expend all our endeavor.—ED. T. S.]

BRAMBLE, IND., June 13, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: People for the want of knowledge and experience very often form wrong ideas and teach very absurd doctrins. Is death-bed evidence true? has always been a question of doubt in my mind. How can we possibly know for certain that it is a fact, after our dying friends tell us that they are going to heaven? I will admit that it seems reasonable that if a person ever tells the truth in his life, it will be when death is staring him in the face, ready to usher him into eternal happiness or eternal torment. But I come to the more reasonable conclusion that no one has ever died in a rational state of mind. A person racked with fever and pain cannot be in a perfectly rational state of mind. Do not the medicins generally given in sickness intoxicate or impair the brain? Therefore if a person is sick, and under the influence of medicin, and just before death should say to his friends: "I am going to join the angels; I see heaven wide open, and I am going there; I do not fear death," etc.; that is no positiv proof to me that he goes there, even if the fact was established that there is a heaven and hell. No one would desire eternal punishment in preference to eternal happiness, even if he deserved the punishment. If a man commits a crime and he is arrested, and is to be tried before the courts of our country, he will naturally desire to be cleared, although he knows he has disobeyed the law, and most criminals really think they will be cleared. As the fact of the existence of a heaven and hell are not established, for a person on his death-bed to say, "I am going to heaven," does not even prove that there is a heaven; and if he were to say, "I am going to hell," it would not prove that there is a hell. Some people's minds are stronger than others in life, and it may be that some minds are weaker than others when death seizes them. I am of the opinion that when one is dying and says, "I am going to heaven," the assertion is brought about by the desire of heaven, or the fear of hell, and probably if he should rally and overcome death and liv, he would remember nothing he had said regarding heaven. And if one should say, "There is no chance for me; I hav waited too long; I am going to hell; I can see the terrible spectacle," it does not even tend to prove that there is a hell, and I would apply the same reasonable hypothesis as in the other case. I hav cared for and nursed a great many sick; hav given a great deal of medicin, and know its effects upon the human system. I hav never died, but hav been so low with fevers several times that I was given up by both friends and physicians. Once I contracted a violent case of malarial fever in the far South. It kept me two months. I was given up to die. I thought I was going to die. I was an orthodox Christian believer then. My thoughts were, during my illness, sometimes on the terrors of hell, and sometimes on the joys of heaven. I came to the point that I thought I was just about to leave this earth. I called to my nurse. I told him I was going to die, and was going to heaven. I could see Jesus at the right hand of God; could see my angel mother, and all my departed friends, all in white robes, with long snowy white wings, whose tips reached the ground. They beckoned me to come, etc. I was telling my nurse all about what I could see in heaven, etc. But I did not die. But if I had died, all the clergy and Christians in that whole country would hav said that I went straightway to heaven. I was then quiet for about ten minutes. Then I was down in hell among the devils. I could see the old devil and the young devils, with chains about their necks, and with pitchforks. They were forking the brimstone flames over the poor victims of eternal hell. I was telling my nurse all about these horrors. Now, if I had died while speaking of hell and its torments, all the clergy and Christians would hav said I went to hell sure. When I got well my nurse told me of the things I had said, but I did not remember it at all. One thing I am glad of, that what people say is not always true. And maybe there is no eternal hell to torture people in after death. I hav ceased to believe in a hell prepared by a merciful and loving God. I hav no fear of hell now. I do not think death-bed evidence is reliable. If all the best friends I hav were to die, and say while dying that they were going to heaven, it would not be positiv proof that they are going there. Maybe there is no heaven. It may be that death ends all. If there be a heaven and hell, I think the only way to reach heaven is by right doing. I do not think the way to gain heaven consists in believing something or having faith in something that a person cannot possibly believe or hav faith in. I cannot believe that a God would create and hav me brought into the world without my consent; created as I am with a mind so that I cannot believe certain things (that must be believed according to Christian doctrin in order to gain heaven), and then damn me forever because I cannot believe. Why, it would be horrible. I would not do the like. And if there is a God with intelligence and ingenuity enough to create the earth, sun, moon, stars, and man, I think his mercy would far exceed mine, for mercy and intelligence are, or should be, in unison.

CHAS. A. GLENN.

FORT PIERRE, S. D., May 29, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Thus far I hav been able to procure but one subscriber, but the leaven is working, and I trust before the summer is past I shall hav more names on your books. I hav wondered if I could not write short stories of adventure that would be of interest to your readers. I hav been twenty-four years in Dakota and nearly all of that time employed by the government in activ service as scout, guide, and interpreter. During this long period I hav had many adventures. One, illustrativ of "Christian charity," I will relate. Early in the spring of 1885 I was sent upon a special mission from Fort Keogh, Mont., to Pine Ridge or Red Cloud agency in southwestern Dakota, a distance, the way I had to go, of about five hundred miles. I rode an Indian pony which was shod in front only. My route took me through the Black Hills country, where busy and important mining towns had already sprung into existence. I came first to the town of Spearfish; next to Deadwood, the metropolis of the Hills, wedged in between two mighty mountains. Here I rested two days; then on to Rapid City, a town at that time of about two thousand inhabitants, forty-five miles from Deadwood, and lying on the plain close to the foot-hills. From Rapid City to Pine Ridge was about one hundred and twenty-five miles, and no towns lying between. A survey, however, had been made for a railroad to Rapid City, and my way was along the line of survey. White settlers had begun to locate claims, so that every mile or two I found the cabins and shanties of the pioneer homesteaders. Toward evening of my first day out from Rapid City my horse became suddenly very lame. Having no shoes on his hind feet, the long distance and rough road through the mountain had worn his hoof through to the quick. Near by was a little cabin, where I applied for shelter for the night. The single occupant, a young man, told me that I was welcome to all that he had, which was little enough to eat and absolutely nothing for my horse. He advised me, if I could, to go on a mile and a half, where I would find the Bennett brothers, who were well fixed for keeping travelers, with a good stable, hay and oats for my horse, and a commodious house, nearly completed, that I could sleep in.

I am a member of the G. A. R., so I asked him if he knew of any members about there. He said no, but he thought the Bennett brothers had served in the war; that they were twin brothers, about fifty years old and from the state of Maine. I decided to go on, hoping to find a hearty welcome from a comrade of the late war. The sun had disappeared behind the mountains when, tired and hungry, I reached the Bennett ranch, leading my disabled horse, which I tied to the fence, and proceeded to the house, through the open door of which I saw the family, consisting of the brothers, their wives—who were childless—and an adopted child, a bright, intelligent girl of ten, at supper. The brothers turned their faces squarely toward me, scanning me closely as I approached the door, observing which I gave the hailing sign of our order so plainly that had they been members they certainly would hav recognized it. To my disappointment the signal was not answered, and I knew they were not members. When I reached the door the following dialog ensued:

"Good evening."

"Good evening."

"Can I get accommodations here to-night for myself and horse?"

"No; we don't keep travelers. Mr. Lewis livs two miles further on; he's better fixed 'n we are. Guess he'll keep ye."

"But, my friends, my horse is very lame—so lame that I don't see how I can go any farther, and I am very tired and hungry. If you will giv me something to eat and something for my horse, I will pay liberally for it, and I can sleep on the prairie; it is not cold, and I am accustomed to camp-life."

"No; we don't want strangers camping around here. You'd better go on to Mr. Lewis."

"Well, do you know of any members of the Grand Army living in this neighborhood?"

"Grand Army! Why, we are unworthy members ourselvs. Are you a clergyman?"

"No-o; not exactly a clergyman."

"But you are a professor?"

"Oh, yes; praise the Lord. I'm a professor."

"Come in, brother; hav some supper. You can stay here. David, go and put the gentleman's horse in the stable."

Here were two men fifty years old born and raised in the state of Maine who had never heard of the Grand Army of the Republic, who supposed there was no Grand Army but the "army of the Lord."

When he used the term "professor" I knew he was a Baptist, so of course while I was there I was a Baptist too—had to be or get fired out. I was not surprised in the morning at the breakfast table when I was called upon to say grace, and I was not unprepared, for I had been rehearsing an hour before anyone was up, so I banged away with a blessing, and I must hav got it off all right, for it didn't sour the milk or addle the eggs. The cold shivers ran down my back, however, when we were done eating, to see everybody ranging themselvs in a circle round the room. "Family prayers, and they'll ask me to lead in prayer!" But they didn't. I stayed with them a week till I could get my horse shod. During the entire week they delegated the table service to me, while the brothers took turn and turn about praying.

E. H. ALLISON, Scout U. S. A.

MONTPELIER, IND., June 11, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking you would be so kind as to let me, a subscriber, occupy a small space in which to state a few facts in reply to the article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 31, 1890, by H. Wettstein, entitled, "A Challenge to Mediums," I proceed to write the following. There is a lecturer and medium by the name of Colby, from California, that was in Jay county, perhaps ten miles from Montpelier, that gave lectures and tests of independent slate-writing. My health is such that I seldom get from home, and could not attend the meetings, therefore I cannot make my statements as definitly as I otherwise should. I recently visited Lindley Blackledge, M.D., of Pennville, who showed me a small slate that had on it green leaves, a red flower, and several names of relativs of himself and wife all plainly written, and one of them across the picture, part in slate-pencil color and part in yellow. Dr. Blackledge told me that he bought two slates out of a pile in a store and took them to the Hall, five miles distant; a lady cleaned them, and he placed one on the other. Mr. Colby took one corner of the two slates in his right hand, a third party holding the opposit corners of the slates, and he, the doctor, holding the medium's left hand, they holding the slates as high as the top of their heads and standing on their feet without any table to conceal their tricks. They held the slates in that position a few minutes in the lecture room, in full view of the audience, with kerosene lamps in full blaze, and when they let them down the upper side of the under slate was as I saw it, which was perhaps six weeks after it was written. There were said to be other slates written on that are good tests, which I hav not seen—one of them written on in full daylight. The slate-writing tests above described can be testified to by any desirable number of reliable witnesses, and the writing is on the slates, held sacred as tokens from the departed.

I will now describe a second test. My wife and I went to Anderson Sept. 26, 1889, to the state association of Spiritualists. When we got off the train, not knowing anyone, we secured a guide to conduct us to Westerfield Hall, where the first meeting of four days' term was in session. When we entered a woman was speaking. We seated ourselvs behind all the audience. The speaker finished the lecture in perhaps fifteen minutes, when a stranger came to us and spoke, calling us by our names, William and Eunice, and said to me, "Sarah and Hannah are here, and Hannah has her hand on the lady's head"—describing her minutely, and —"I see a gentleman by you"—describing him, and putting his hand on his right side he said—"It seems as though he had a sore here in his last sickness." He also said, "I perceive you had trouble getting here. One class of spirits were opposed to your coming and did what they could to prevent it, but another class wanted you to come and encouraged you what they could." The facts are, I had two sisters, Sarah and Hannah, and a brother Aaron that died of a scrofulous fistula running around his right side, all of whom he accurately described; and we had so many hindrances in getting away from home that we thought we should not succeed in getting started.

I will next describe an instance of Quaker inspiration in 1848. My wife's father, Horton Brown, a Hicksite Friends minister, made an appointment to preach at a private house, having obtained the consent of the owner. When the time came I went with him, and found a few friends there, and the family anxiously looking for a Free Will Baptist lady to preach there at the same hour—a set-up job to cut him out. I was vexed, and wanted him to leave, but he coolly replied that there was no hurry, so unlike himself that I was surprised. He finally proposed that he would occupy the time, and if she came, he would giv the place to her. But she failed to appear. He preached the finest historical sermon I ever heard, giving an account of the emperor Constantine and of the various councils to formulate the various Christian creeds and dogmas and to decide what books were canonical and what not in constructing the holy Bible, and what terrible quarrels they had among themselvs, and what deceit, fraud, and corruption they practiced at these councils, quoting the church fathers, St. Augustine, Athanasius, and others, quoting quite freely from the historian Mosheim. The next day he and I were at work on the farm. I commenced asking him questions in regard to some things he had said, and found he knew very little about what he had said on the subject. He replied by saying that he had read ecclesiastical history when he was young and supposed he became illuminated so much that it came to him.

Next I will tell of an incident in 1850. I went to my father-in-law's house one summer morning and spoke to him, and he said, "Well, William, I was at thy father's last night [a place he had never seen] and I saw Aaron [my brother], and he showed me the garden, yard, and orchard"—and went on to describe them, and after he had finished his description I told him he must be slightly mistaken, and told him how it was the last time I saw it. He replied, "That was the way I saw it, anyhow." I went to the place the following autumn and found it the way he described it, instead of the way I thought it was. There had been changes made since I saw it.

To sum up the evidence. The slate-writing test I think contains all Brother Wettstein's five conditions, though written prior to them, therefore we will conclude it is a genuin spirit communication, the picture and writing being well executed in only a few minutes. The Anderson test conveys the evidence of the presence of my spirit sisters and brother, and that there is a class of spirits that did not want us to go to the association for fear we might giv or receive an influence that they did not want, because they are afraid of the truth; also that as we find in this world, so will we find in the next, ignorance, prejudice, bigotry, superstition, and human frailties generally. The foregoing account of Quaker inspiration shows that there is a class of spirits that wish to giv the inhabitants of earth the truth as they understand it, and another class that would tell a lie for the glory of God, that still worship old creeds and dogmas and are afraid to let the truth be known; and in this case the woman was unable to fill the appointment, therefore that party was foiled; or it shows that it was not spirits, but the speaker was self-illuminated.

I wish I knew more of mind acting on mind and mind acting on itself. If the mind can act on itself to enable one to reveal buried facts or truths or to visit places that it has never seen while the physical body is in bed asleep, does it not go to prove the independence of the mind or spirit of the physical body, that foreshadows the life beyond? I thank Brother Wettstein for his candor, and think he is honest, and also thank Brother Macdonald for giving both sides a hearing.

WILLIAM ALLEN.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Robin's Song.

Robin Redbreast sat on the garden fence,
And he was a bird of intelligence;
He oped his mouth with a tra-la-le,
And this was the song that he sang to me:

"Up, chipper cherry, and chip cherry, down,
There's a school away in a goodly town
Where the lads and lassies are bright and true,
And as sweet and fresh as the morning dew;
'Twould delight your heart and gladden your eyes
To see how hard each little one tries
In all that is good and true, to excel,
That they each of many good works may tell.
They hav teachers kind, and they mind them, too,
Except sometimes, they forget to do
Just everything that is told them—yet,
Maybe you, yourself, might sometimes forget—
Since no one on earth can quite perfect be,
And all hav faults—well, except you and me!"

Robin Redbreast paused, with a knowing wink,
And then went on with a "Chip, chipper, chink."

"But these little ones, as I hav been told,
Are about as good as the best of gold;
Aye, much better than gold, for they can see,
They can hear, they can talk, can learn to be
The best kind of children, noble and true,
Rich in the graces, and in goodness too.
Now, gold is a metal, and can't do that,
It has no eyes and is blind as a bat;
It has no ears, no speech—it has no thought,
Neither does it know how much it is sought.
But the worth of a child has not been told—
Its value exceeds a world full of gold;
And the tiniest child in that town there
Is a priceless jewel, shining and fair;
And under the touch of a training hand,
Children, like flowers, grow and expand.
Up the ladder of time they are climbing,
And chaplets of roses they are twining,
To wear, by and by, in the school of life,
When they reach its cares, its work and its strife."

Just then a sparrow perched on a tree,
Espying the robin, sharply said he—
"Ah, friend, good morning, good morning, I say!
May I ask the tune you are singing to-day,
With such a rollicking, musical note
That, really, you're almost splitting your throat?"

"Swick!" chirped the robin, "I'll tell you right here,
And you may go spread it both far and near!
I sing the praise"—and the robin sang low—
"Of some little boys and girls that I know,
Who would not disturb the eggs in my nest,
Nor hurt my house, or my babies molest.
They know 'tis better to love than to hate,
So they never frighten me or my mate."

I listened again, and the bird went on
To sing of the children in this good town.

"They know," sang he, "as well as you or I—
The truth of the same no one can deny—
That doing the best, and all that one can,
Doth make of a boy a right noble man,
And changes the girl to a woman true,
Good enough for me, and also for you;
And the one who the brightest crown shall wear,
Here below, or above, or anywhere,
Is he who, true as the stars in the sky,
Turns away from wrong, and ever doth try
To practice the right, whate'er his station,
No matter about his name or nation.
And these little ones, be they more or less,
Each has the power to harm or to bless;
To aid in making the world much better,
Or still to rivet each chain and fetter.
But there is reason to hope and believe,
These same darlings will ne'er make us grieve;
But they will, in the good time to come—
Though some may afar in other lands roam—
Be the pride and joy of teacher and friend,
Whose love and good-will around them doth blend.

"In this very fine school there are some gems
Which are fit to be set in diadems.
One is called Punctual—Wisdom another,
And System, who sticks close as a brother.
Rely on Yourself, and Mister Workwell,
Of peace and contentment they both can tell.
Then there's Charity, white as an angel
Sent us to cheer—a blessed evangel.
Her mantle is broad, it covereth all;
Since no one is sure that he may not fall,
She says, 'Let us be kind to each other,
And see in each a sister or brother.'

"Then, there are others—you've known them before—
Their names hav been mentioned once, twice, or more.
I'm sure you hav heard of one Mister Try,
In this goodly school he ever is nigh;
His partner—chip"—and the robin looked queer—
"Oft is referred to as 'Old Persevere!'
A friend of this school—a friend of mine, too—
Has told of the good that these giants do;
How they work wonders in science and art,
When ruled by Patience and Mister Great Heart!
Then, there's stout I Can, and the prince I Will—
They won't let 'Can't Do It' step o'er the sill;
For he is a foe much to be dreaded,
And long since ought to hav been beheaded.
But, when tempted to injure a neighbor,
Brave-eyed Won't Do It asks as a favor,
That the hand and the tongue each will refrain
From the deed or the word that carries but pain."

"I'm sure," chirped the bird, "these children will be
In the future just what we wish to see;
And these little boys, and little—women,
Will each come to be the good citizen;
Healthful and truthful, good-natured and bright,
Cheerful and rosy as morning's fair light,
Earnest and faithful to every trust,
They shall be counted with the true and just.
And I will sing always, chip, cherry, down,
Of the bright children in the goodly town."

Then the Robin Redbreast flew off the fence,
And he was a bird of intelligence.
So, I've told you the song he sang to me,
With a tra-la-la-la, tra-la-le. S. H. W.

Corner Gospel.

ABOUT CIGARETS.

It is said that nervous diseases and insanity are on the increase; that these diseases are even prevalent among young people and children.

It is said, too, that one great cause of such ailments is tobacco—the smoking of cigars and cigarets.

There is an enormous consumption of cigarets in the United States, more than one not acquainted with the figures would think.

The United States commissioner, in his returns for the year 1888, declares that a tax that year was collected on 2,151,515,360 cigarets.

Inquiry shows that the bad habit of smoking these innocent-looking cigarets is not confined to grown men and women, but that school-boys and school-girls are habitual users of the same.

Now, let us look at the composition of a cigaret. Stumps of cigars, the end that has been held in the mouth of nobody knows whom, or how much he may hav been diseased with cancer or other fetid sickness, some morphine, or some form of arsenical preparation. This is wrapped in some cotton paper manufactured from the rags collected by ragpickers in the streets and elsewhere. Oh, but the rags are cleaned, you say. Yes, but the lime used in cleaning and bleaching is harmful to the throat and nasal passages of the cigaret smoker. There is a kind of rice paper used to wrap cigarets in, but this is not used much, the other being so much cheaper.

You can readily see how such a compound would naturally affect a consumer.

A young man in the very prime of life gradually began to "run down"—became pale and thin, and was obliged to leave his business and go away for his health. He came back no better than he went. Then it was the cause of his illness became known. He was a smoker of cigarets. He abandoned the habit, became well and happy. Another persisted in the habit, not knowing, perhaps, the certain and sure injury he was working upon himself. He sickened and died from poison by arsenic imbibed from cigarets.

There are few sadder sights than a victim of a ruinous habit on the road to sure destruction—health gone, trembling, tottering, shaking, though in the prime of his years, a mental and a moral wreck, nervous, unhappy, despondent.

There is no more beautiful picture than that of a healthy, happy, vigorous manhood and womanhood, clean, sweet, full of strength, physically, mentally, morally, in all ways a clear, firm understanding, a king, a queen, ruling over all false appetites and evil passions. Sweet health of body, health of mind, unstained and unpolluted by the touch of poison in any way, its owner can face the world in his strength and nobility.

Aim to rise superior to everything that would harm and destroy. Resolve to be a man in the full meaning of the word, a woman in all that constitutes true womanhood. The world needs such to do its work.

S. H. W.

Nine Tailers Make a Man.

Everybody has heard of the saying that it takes nine tailors to make a man, and the general supposition is that it reflects upon tailors in some indefinit manner, and no one knows where the saying originated. Now, the truth is, explains Golden Days, that the saying is misquoted, and the proper word is "tailers" or "tellers," not "tailors," as often written, and its origin can be traced back several centuries.

It was one of the customs when a person died in the parish to toll the church bell once for every year of the deceased's life. But nobody from this could tell the sex of the departed, so the sexton, to gratify public curiosity, after ringing in the usual way the number of years, would giv eight quick strokes if the deceased was a woman, and nine if it was a man. These being rung at the end of the strokes for the years were called "tailers," and thus nine tailers made a man.

"A Thoughtless Yes," by Helen H. Gardener.

"A Thoughtless Yes." This is the taking title of Helen Gardener's last book, in paper covers and containing two hundred and thirty pages. It holds a handful of bright, brilliant stories, nine in number, and they are written in the author's clear, vigorous, and comprehensiv style. The matter of them offers food for thought and reflection.

It is a book for the seaside, for summer afternoons. Everyone will want to read this bright and breezy offering of a clear-seeing, witty, and intellectual woman, so no doubt it will find a ready market and buyers by the million. It is published by the Belford Co., New York. SUSAN H. WIXON.

"Little Jack Horner Sat in the Corner."

"Whenever I go back and forth to school,
How many quite bad little boys I see!"
This was Jack Horner's brief soliloquy
As he sat by the chimney on a stool
(It is quite clear that Johnny was no fool)
Eating a piece of Christmas pie; and he Could not help feeling—very properly—
Thankful that he was one who, as a rule,
Had his good things, while other boys had none;
A small boy's grace it was before his pie,
A plum appeared, which he did not refuse,
When he took up the moral he'd begun—
(His childish egotism pray excuse)
"Oh, what a very, very good boy am I!"

—St. Nicholas.

TO TAKE OUT A RUSTY SCREW.—The hinge of the woodhouse door was broken, and Farmer John, who never liked to see things going to pieces, went to work to replace the broken hinge with a new one, says the American Agriculturist. The old screws, however, had rusted, and, although a man of muscle, not one of them could Farmer John budge, until Willie came out to see what was going on. Now, Willie is a great reader. His father often thinks he spends too much time over his books. "Let us try the Russian way," said Willie; and going to the house he heated the kitchen poker red-hot, and pressed it to the head of the screw for a few minutes, when the screw was easily taken out with a screwdriver. So much for "book learning." So much more for the bright boy.

ATTAR of roses is a volatil oil of soft consistency, is nearly colorless, and is obtained from rose water by setting it out during the night in large open vessels and early in the morning skimming off the essential oil which floats at the top. The India and Persia roses are chiefly used in its manufacture, and it is stated that 10,000 bushes with 100,000 roses will yield only 180 grains of attar. It is a delicious perfume, and is exported to European countries in small vials, and is exceedingly costly. The word "attar" is traced to the Arabic "i'tr," which means perfume.

THE political maxim, "To the victors belong the spoils," is usually attributed to William L. Marcy, secretary of war in Polk's administration, and secretary of state under Pierce. In a speech in the Senate, in 1842, he said; "They see nothing wrong in the rule that to the victors belong the spoils of the enemy." The same sentiment is expressed by Catiline to his followers, as given in the Catiline conspiracy in Sallust.

THE old common law said that all robbers and felons be pursued "with horn and with voice" from county to county. This means of communication was called the "hue and cry." This title was given to a gazet which advertised felons in 1710.

GIRARD'S WILL
AND
Girard College Theology.
AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

BIBLE OF TO-DAY.
By JOHN W. CHADWICK.

This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible.

Price, $1.50

ESSENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.
BY LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German by George Eliot.
Price, $3.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
T. C. Allen & Co., 124 Granville st., Halifax, N. S.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 314 S. State st, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

IOWA.
M. L. D. Lansing, Madrid.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, Woodbine Cottage, Coit ave., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.
Horace Haynes, Leslie.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau st., New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
W. Smith, 329 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.
Emory P. Robinson, Sydney.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.
W. Wedeken, Portland, Ore.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 732 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 331 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
C. Stocker, 29 Vauxhall Road, Liverpool.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Park st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

Please send stamp for copy of
PLAIN DEALER.
Address ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
4t24

EXETER HALL.
A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day.
Price, . . . cloth, 8 cents.

The Agnostic Annual
FOR 1890.
Edited by CHARLES WATTS.

CONTENTS.

Agnosticism and Immortality.....Samuel Laing.
A Sonnet.....Joseph Ellis.
Who Was Moses?..H. J. Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S.
The Comfort of Agnosticism.....E. Lynn Linton.
Are Miracles Credible?...Constance C. W. Naden.
The Contest Between Agnosticism and Theology, John Wilson, M.A.
Above: A Poem.....W. Stewart Ross.
The Evolution of the Agnostic Idea, R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.
The New Fatalism.....B. Russell.
Descartes's Proof of the Existence of a God. F. J. Gould.
A Poem.....W. B. McTaggart.
The Free Expression of Opinions..G. F. Underhill.
Fragments.....William Maccall.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

MYTHS AND MYTH-MAKERS.

Old Tales and Superstitions Interpreted by Comparative Mythology.

By JOHN FISKE, M.A., LL.B., of Harvard College.

Price, $2.

BEYOND THE VEIL.

Claimed to be Dictated by the Spirit of P. B. Randolph, aided by Swedenborg, through Mrs. F. H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. [Spir.]

Steel Engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

THE KORAN.

A New English Edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the Life of Mohammed, or the History of that Doctrine which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia.

SALE'S edition. Price, $1.50.

HUME'S ESSAYS.

Essays and Treatises. Autobiography and Dialogues on Natural Religion.

By DAVID HUME. Price, $1.50.

SUPERSTITION IN ALL AGES.

By JEAN MESLIER (born 1678), A Catholic Priest who Renounced Christianity.

Portrait.

Price, pap., 50 cts.; clo., $1.

Man's Nature and Development.

By HENRY G. ATKINSON, F.G.S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU.

Price, - - - - - $1.50.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-Book.

Thirteen Lectures on the Bible.

By ROB'T COOPER. Price, $1.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs.

By MORRIS EINSTEIN. Price, $1.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE.

With Explanatory Observations on his Writings.

By GILBERT VALE. Price, $1.

A BUSINESS MAN'S SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS VIEWS.

From a Poor Man's Standpoint. Price, $1.

KNEELAND'S NATIONAL HYMNS

Price, cloth, 35 cents.

LETTERS TO EUGENIA.

A Preservative Against Religious Prejudices.

By BARON D'HOLBACH.

Price, - - - - - - $1.

CAREER OF RELIGIOUS IDEAS.

Ultimating in the Religion of Science.

By HUDSON TUTTLE. [Spir.]

Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

LIFE OF PAINE.

By J. E. REMSBURG.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of Its Elements.

By A. S. DE PELLEGRINI.

Price, - - - - - 15 cents.

JEHOVAH UNVEILED.

Character of the Jewish Jehovah Delineated.

Price, 35 cents.

MORAL PHYSIOLOGY.

A Treatise on the Population Question.

By R. D. OWEN.

Price, - - - - - 35 cents.

AN HOUR WITH THE DEVIL.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Price, - - 10 cents.

IF, THEN, AND WHEN.

Church Doctrines.

By W. S. BARLOW. [Spir.] Price, 10 cents.

The Liberty of Printing, and Reply.

BY HURLBUT and WAKEMAN.

Price, 10 cents.

ICHABOD CRANE PAPERS.

Daringly witty and inexpressibly laughable onslaughts on Christianity.

Price, 10 cents.

BLASPHEMY AND THE BIBLE.

BY C. B. REYNOLDS.

Price, 5 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

FREETHOUGHT

IS IT

DESTRUCTIVE OR CONSTRUCTIVE?

A SYMPOSIUM

BY

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	R. B. WESTBROOK,	CAPT. R. C. ADAMS,
E. B. FOOTE, JR.,	SALADIN (W. Stewart Ross),	L. K. WASHBURN,
H. O. PENTECOST,	GEO. E. MACDONALD,	SUSAN H. WIXON,
E. C. WALKER,	SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,	F. M. HOLLAND,
LUCY N. COLMAN,	PARKER PILLSBURY,	MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL,
C. B. REYNOLDS,	CHARLES WATTS,	J. H. BURNHAM,
W. F. JAMIESON,	THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.

SUBJECTS OF PAPERS:

Is there an Affirmative, Positive, Constructive side to Freethought?
If not, the reason why?
If there be, in what, in your opinion, does it consist, and in what should it consist?

PRICE 25 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

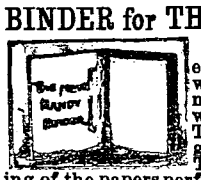
8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,



The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Col. Kelso's Works.

The Bible Analyzed. "For Sledge-hammer Logic unsurpassed." 8vo, 833pp., silk cloth, $3.

Spiritualism Sustained. This work goes not so far to sustain Spiritualism as to show that Christians are inconsistent in denying the alleged truths of that philosophy. Cloth, 12mo, 245pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

Giordano Bruno.

His Life, Works, Worth, Martyrdom, Portrait, and Monument.

With a complete list of the American subscribers to the fund for the erection of the monument.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, THOMAS DAVIDSON,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, KARL BLIND,
LYDIA R. CHASE.

Single copies 15 cents; ten copies for a dollar.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Charles Watts's Works

The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity. 96 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Secularism: Is It Founded on Reason, and Is It Sufficient to Meet the Needs of Mankind? Debate between the Editor of the Halifax Evening Mail and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by George Jacob Holyoake and Colonel Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 60 pages, 25 cents.

A Reply to Father Lambert's "Tactics of Infidels." 20 cents. Post free.

Christianity: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence. 32 pages. Price, 15 cents.

The Horrors of the French Revolution: Their Causes. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Bible Morality. Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defectiv as an Ethical Guide. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the More Reasonable? 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Evolution and Special Creation. 10 cents.

Saints and Sinners—Which? 24 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

The Superstition of the Christian Sunday: A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 26 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Glory of Unbelief. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Nature and the Supernatural; or, Self and Knowledge. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The American Secular Union; Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cents.

Theological Presumption: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N. S. In this letter the following subjects are dealt with: 1. Why Do the Clergy Avoid Debate? 2. The Position of Agnosticism Toward Christianity. 3. Freethought and Men of Science. 4. The Difference between Facts and Opinions. 5. Christ and Heroism. 6. Christianity and Slavery. 16 pages. Price, 5 cents.

NEW WORK BY MRS. WATTS. JUST PUBLISHED.

Christianity: Defectiv and Unnecessary. By Kate Eunice Watts. 24 pages. Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION,

OR, THE

Conflict between Reason and Superstition.

BY T. C. WIDDICOMBE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Price, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FESTIVAL OF ASHTAROTH.

A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews.

By A. C. MIDDLETON.

Price, ... 10 cents.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS.

AN ADDRESS

By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE

New York State Bar Association, at Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1890.

The only Complete and Authorized Edition.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book,

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies. For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, . . . $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Every Liberal Should Read

THE BIBLE AND EVOLUTION.

BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

WITH PREFACE BY DR. HARDWICKE.

INTRODUCTION.

Chapter I, Bible Astronomy and Evolution; Chapter II, Bible Biology and Evolution; Chapter III, Bible Myths and Evolution; Chapter IV, Bible History and Evolution; Chapter V, Bible Morality and Evolution; Chapter VI, Bible Miracles and Evolution; Chapter VII, Miracles Incredible; Chapter VIII, Bible Poetry and Evolution; Chapter IX, Bible Art and Evolution; Chapter X, Bible God and Evolution; Chapter XI, Soul and Future and Evolution; Chapter XII, Heaven Hereafter; Chapter XIII, Conclusion.

Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay. —[Penn Monthly

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo. 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Poetry.

The Pope and the Sultan.

The pope he is a happy man,
His palace is the Vatican.
And there he sits and drains his can;
The pope he is a happy man.
I often say when I'm at home
I'd like to be the pope of Rome.

And then there's Sultan Saladin,
That Turkish soldan, full of sin;
He has a hundred wives at least,
By which his pleasure is increased.
I've often wished, I hope no sin,
That I were Sultan Saladin.

But no, the pope no wife may choose,
And so I would not wear his shoes.
No wine may drink the proud paynim,
And so I'd rather not be him.
My wife, my wine, I love, I hope,
And would be neither Turk nor pope.
—Johann Wilhelm Gleim.

Paradise and the Sinner—New Version.

One morn a sinner at the gate
Of Eden stood disconsolate,
And as he pondered on the things
In life he'd done, his wild oats sowing,
He felt the pangs that conscience brings,
And both his cheeks with shame were glowing.

He thought of all the vows he'd broken,
He thought of falsehoods lightly told,
Of all the hasty words he'd spoken,
And all the tricks he'd played for gold.
"Ah, me!" he cried, "I own my sin,
So, pitying angel, let me in."

The angel heard the sinner's tale,
He blushed not, neither turned he pale,
But "Think you, then," in wrath he cried,
"For crimes like these to pass inside?
Your life's not been so badly spent;
You must do something worse by far,
Come back with something to repent,
And then I'll raise the crystal bar."

The sinner he flew from the spot sublime
Away to the earth below,
"I wonder," he thought, "what kind of crime
Is reckoned the worst en haut."
He picked a pocket and stole a purse;
He plotted against the crown;
He changed two babies put out to nurse,
And he left a dog to drown.

"Good," said the angel as he heard
A list of the sinner's sins;
"But this is only about a third
Of the crime that entrance wins.
Your record, I trow, must be blacker far
Before I can raise the crystal bar."

The sinner flew back to the earth once more,
And he steeped his hands in his brother's gore;
He poisoned his wife by slow degrees,
And hanged his twins on a couple of trees;
And then with a broken and rusty saw
He cut off the head of his mother-in-law;
And he cried, as a shuddering world turned sick,
"If the chaplain's right, I hav done the trick."

Once more he stood before the gate
And told his tale and asked his fate.
The angel smiled—said, "Right you are,"
And swiftly raised the crystal bar.
But oh, when the sinner was once inside,
"There is some mistake!" he in terror cried,
As down in the bottomless pit he fell,
And found he had knocked at the gate of hell.

"It was your mistake," the angel said,
"To think that because your hands were red
You could pass at once to the realms above,
The beautiful realms of peace and love.
The clerical gents may tell you so,
But this is the place to which murderers go."
—Referee.

How the Women Went from Dover—1662.

The tossing spray of Cocheco's fall
Hardened to ice on its rocky wall,
As through Dover town, in the chill, gray dawn,
Three women passed, at the cart-tail drawn!

By the meeting-house in Salisbury town
The sufferers stood in the red sundown,
Bare for the lash! O pitying night,
Drop swift thy curtain and hide the sight!

With shame in his eye and wrath on his lip,
The Salisbury constable dropped his whip.
"This warrant means murder foul and red;
Cursed is he who serves it," he said.

"Show me the order, and meanwhile strike
A blow at your peril!" said Justice Pike.
Of all the rulers the land possessed,
Wisest and boldest was he, and best.

He scoffed at witchcraft; the priest he met
As man meets man; his feet he set
Beyond his dark age, standing upright,
Soul-free, with his face to the morning light.

He read the warrant: "These convey
From our precincts; at every town on the way
Giv each ten lashes!" "God judge the brute!
I tread his order under my foot!
"Cut loose these poor ones and let them go;
Come what will of it, all men shall know
No warrant is good, though backed by the crown,
For whipping women in Salisbury town!"

The hearts of the villagers, half released
From creed of terror and rule of priest,
By a primal instinct owned the right
Of human pity in law's despite.

For ruth and chivalry only slept,
His Saxon manhood the yeoman kept;
Quicker or slower, the same blood ran
In the cavalier and the Puritan.

The Quakers sank on their knees in praise
And thanks. A last, low sunset blaze
Flashed out from under a cloud, and shed
A golden glory on each bowed head.

The tale is one of an evil time,
When souls were fettered, and thought was crime,
And heresy's whisper above its breath
Meant shameful scourgings and bonds and death!

What marvel that, hunted and sorely tried,
Even woman rebuked and prophesied,
And soft words rarely answered back
The grim persuasions of whip and rack!

If her cry from the whipping-post and jail
Pierced sharp as the Kenite's driven nail,
O woman, at ease in these happier days,
Forbear to judge of thy sister's ways!

How much thy beautiful life may owe
To her faith and courage thou canst not know,
Nor how from the paths of thy calm retreat
She smoothed the thorns with her bleeding feet.
—John. G. Whittier.

The 32d Day.

On the 32d day of the 13th month of the 8th day of the week,
On the 25th hour of the 61st minute, we'll find all the things we seek;
They are there in the limbo of Lollipop land—a cloud-island resting in air,
On the nowhere side of the mountain of mist in the valley of overthere.

On the nowhere side of the mountain of mist in the valley of overthere,
On a solid vapor foundation of cloud are palaces grand and fair;
And there is where our dreams will come true and the seed of our hope will grow,
On the thitherward side of the hill of hope in the hamlet of Hocus Po.

On the thitherward side of the hill of hope in the hamlet of Hocus Po,
We shall see all the things that we want to see and know all we want to know,
For there the old men will never lament, the babies they never will squeak
In the cross-road corners of Chaosville, in county of Hidengoseek.

In the cross-road corners of Chaosville, in county of Hidengoseek,
On the 32d day of the 13th month of the 8th day of the week,
We shall do all the things that we please to do, and accomplish whatever we try,
On the sunset shore of sometimeorother, by the beautiful bay of bimeby.
—S. W. Foss, in Yankee Blade.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

IRON-CLAD AND MANNA SERIES

IRON-CLAD SERIES.

1 Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
2 Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake.. 5
4 Influence of Christianity on Civilization. Underwood..... 25
7 Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Mueller... 10
8 Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison..... 15
9 Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 10
10 Epidemic Delusions. Marvin..... 10
11 Philosophy of Spiritualism. Marvin..... 50
12 Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural, and Portrait.. 25
13 Essay on Miracles. David Hume..... 10
14 Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
15 Were Adam and Eve our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
16 Why do Men Starve? Chas. Bradlaugh.. 5
17 Logic of Life, Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. George J. Holyoake. 10
18 A Plea for Atheism. Chas. Bradlaugh.... 10
19 Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake.. 5
20 Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake..... 5
21 Defence of Secular Principles. C. Watts.. 5
22 Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts..... 5
23 The Christian Deity. Charles Watts..... 5
24 Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts.. 5
25 Freethought and Mod. Progress. Watts. 5
26 Christianity: Its Nature, and Influence on Civilization. Chas. Watts..... 5
28 Thoughts on Atheism. Austin Holyoake. 5
29 Is there a Moral Governor of the Universe? Austin Holyoake..... 5
30 Philosophy of Secularism. Chas. Watts... 5
31 Has Man a Soul? Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
38 Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
39 Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
40 Poverty: Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H.. 10
42 Science and Bible Antagonistic. Watts... 5
43 Christian Scheme of Redemption. Watts. 5
44 Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10
47 Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5

MANNA SERIES.

1 Original Manna for "God's chosen."..... 5
3 New Life of David. Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
4 Why I was Excommunicated. Barnard... 20
5 200 Questions Without Answers..... 5
6 Dialogue between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin..... 10
7 Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian..... 10
8 Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake..... 5
9 New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh..... 5
10 A Few Words about the Devil..... 5
11 New Life of Jacob..... 5
12 Daniel, the Dreamer. Austin Holyoake... 10
13 Specimen of the Bible: Esther. Holyoake 10
14 Acts of the Apostles: A Farce. A. H.... 10
15 Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. H. 10
16 Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh..... 5
17 Who Was Jesus Christ? C. Bradlaugh... 5
18 What Did Jesus Teach? C. Bradlaugh.... 5
19 New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5
20 New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh... 5
21 A Secular Prayer. Holyoake. Per doz... 10

On orders for Iron Clad and Manna we will send $1.10 worth for $1; $2.50 worth for $2; $5 worth for $3, and $10 worth for $5.

THE

Bible of Nature,

OR, THE

Principles of Secularism.

A CONTRIBUTION to the RELIGION of the FUTURE.

BY PROF. FELIX L. OSWALD,

Author of "The Secret of the East, or the Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline," "Physical Education, or the Health-Laws of Nature," "Household Remedies," "The Poison Problem, or the Cause and the Cure of Intemperance," etc., etc.

Felix L. Oswald is a well-known and vigorous writer on scientific and social subjects.—[Cin. Com. Gazette.

Cloth, 12mo, 240pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

UNIVERSE ANALYZED

BY JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.,

Author of "Deity Analyzed," "The Bible Analyzed," "The Real Blasphemers," "Spiritualism Sustained," etc., etc.

The latest and best work of an analytic thinker, who is gifted with those rare powers that render the subtlest conceptions the easy property of the ordinary mind. The book contains many ideas that will be new to the world and productiv of good in furnishing food for thought. We trust it will hav the immense distribution it so richly merits.—[The American Idea.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 Cents.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x32, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the three will be forwarded to any address, for 25 cts, or either one for 15 cts.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, 4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, 7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Life. A Prose Poem. Printed in colors on board, beveled gilt edges. 50 cents.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. boudoir, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliever; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

Fathers of Our Republic, Paine, Jefferson, Washington, Franklin. A lecture delivered before the Tenth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, in Chickering Hall, New York, November 13, 1886. 15 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

NOTE.—These tracts are especially intended for distribution as Freethought missionary documents. When sending subscriptions for your Truth Seeker, or money for books, please add whatever you can for tracts, and, when received, hand them around among your neighbors, or leave them in hotels, places of public assembly, etc. To allow much to be done in this way with a little money the following discounts are made. On one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off. This rate of discount is given on these tracts only. Please order by numbers. The numbers not mentioned are out of print.

23 Reply to Shelton's Letter. Bennett..... 3
29 Paine Hall Dedication. Underwood..... 5

35 Moving the Ark. Bennett..... 2
37 Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.... 2
38 Christianity not a Moral. X. Y. Z..... 2
39 The True Saint. S. P. Putnam..... 1
43 Christianity a Borrowed System. Bennett. 3
47 Cruelty & Credulity of the Human Race.... 3
49 Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild..... 5
52 Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
53 Questions for Bible Worshipers..... 2
54 Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.... 5
58 Prophecies. Underwood..... 2
62 The Jews and their God..... 10
63 The Devil's Due Bills. Syphers..... 3
64 Ills we Endure—Cause and Cure. Bennett. 5
65 ShortSermon. No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 2
67 Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2..... 5
70 Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon..... 3
71 Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman..... 2
73 Foundations. John Syphers..... 2
74 Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett..... 2
75 An Hour with the Devil. Bennett..... 10
76 Reply to E. F. Brown. Bennett..... 3
77 The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett..... 5

82 Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett..... 1
83 Revivalism Examined. Dr. A.G. Humphrey. 5
84 Moody on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps. 2
89 Logic of Prayer. C. Stephenson..... 3
90 Bible-Mania. Otto Cordates..... 2
91 Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood..... 1
94 The New Raven. Will Cooper..... 5
96 Ichabod Crane Papers..... 10
97 Special Providences. W. S. Bell..... 2
98 Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker..... 2
100 140th Anniversary of Paine's Birthday.... 5
102 The Old Religion and New. Bell..... 2
104 Evolution of Israel's God. Rawson..... 10
105 Decadence of Christianity. Cápphro..... 2

107 The Safe Side. H. B. Brown..... 1
110 Invocation to the Universe. Bennett.... 1
111 Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.... 1
112 Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage..... 2
113 Come to Jesus. Bennett..... 2
114 Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115 The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett..... 2
116 The Sunday Question. Bennett..... 2
117 Constantine the Great. Preston..... 3
119 The New Faith. Stoddard..... 3
120 The New Age. W. S. Bell..... 10

122 World's Great Religions. Bennett..... 10
123 Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and "Observer"..... 10
524 Sinful Saints. Bennett..... 10
125 German Liberalism. Neymann..... 2
126 Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood..... 10
130 The Ethics of Religion. Clifford..... 5
134 Talks with the Evangelists..... 5
137 Christian Love. C. L. James..... 3
138 Science of the Bible. John Jasper..... 2
140 Astro-Theology..... 5
141 Infidelity. H. W. Beecher..... 2
142 Synopsis of All Religions. Saxon..... 10
143 Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins..... 2
148 When Did Paul Live? Scholasticus..... 2
149 Age of Shams..... 3
145 If You Take Away my Religion? What Will You Give Me Instead. Martin.... 10
150 The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut and Wakeman..... 10
151 What is the Bible? M. W. H..... 5
152 A Remarkable Book. Douglas..... 2
153 Liberty and Morality. Conway..... 5
155 Co-operation Society's Redeemer..... 2
156 Free Speech & Free Press. Shelley..... 2

159 Boston Bennett Indignation Meeting..... 5
160 Sabbath Observance. Coleman..... 3
161 Protestant Persecutions..... 3
162 Eighth and Last Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett..... 10
164 Bible Impeached. Chapman..... 2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1 Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D..... 5
2 Evolution: Homogeneous to Heterogeneous. Underwood..... 3
4 Literature of the Insane. Marvin..... 5
5 Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D... 3
6 Graduated Atmospheres. McCarroll..... 2
7 Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D..... 3
8 How Marsupial Animals Propagate..... 2
9 The Unseen World. Prof. J. Fiske..... 10
10 The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures..... 10
11 Is America New World? Dawson..... 10
12 Evolution not Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D..... 5
23 Nibble at Professor Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium..... 10

☞ See note at head of column.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL IN THE WORLD.

Published every Saturday, at $3 per year, by the Truth Seeker Company, at 28 Lafayette Place,

NEW YORK CITY.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR. . . C. P. SOMERBY, BUSINESS MANAGER.

DURING THE YEAR 1890 THE TRUTH SEEKER

Will Print the Most Varied and Entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal.

Among those who have written and will write for its columns are these eminent men and women known all over the world as advocates of Liberty:

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	HELEN H. GARDENER.
R. B. WESTBROOK, A.M.	ARTHUR B. MOSS.
PARKER PILLSBURY.	L. K. WASHBURN.
JOHN E. REMSBURG.	CHARLES B. REYNOLDS.
CHARLES WATTS.	LUCY N. COLMAN.
ROBERT C. ADAMS.	FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.
J. H. BURNHAM.	JULIET H. SEVERANCE.
JOHN PECK.	MATTIE P. KREKEL.
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN.	W. F. JAMIESON.
H. O. PENTECOST.	SUSAN H. WIXON.

And many others.

THE TRUTH SEEKER also reprints from reviews and magazines the latest papers of such eminent writers as CHARLES BRADLAUGH, PROFESSOR HUXLEY, FREDERIC HARRISON, and other English Liberal writers.

The Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S "Children's Corner," MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, has been elected senior member of the School Board of Fall River, Mass.

The Truth Seeker Gives all the News of Freethought, and is Always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

If you have any Ideas or Reforms calculated to benefit humanity write to THE TRUTH SEEKER (sending your subscription) and let the world know of them. THE TRUTH SEEKER publishes each week more letters from the people than any other paper in the world.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests, and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

Send $3 for a Year's Subscription, or $1 for Four Months' Trial.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, 28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which the point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Modern Science Essayist.

Ten Cents Each.

1. HERBERT SPENCER: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON.
2. CHARLES ROBERT DARWIN: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. JOHN W. CHADWICK.
3. SOLAR AND PLANETARY EVOLUTION: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. GARRET P. SERVISS.
4. EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH: The story of geology. By Dr. LEWIS G. JANES.
5. EVOLUTION OF VEGETAL LIFE: How life begins. By Mr. WILLIAM POTTS.
6. EVOLUTION OF ANIMAL LIFE: The order of zoological evolution. By D. ROSSITER RAYMOND
7. THE DESCENT OF MAN: His origin, antiquity, growth By Prof. E. D. COPE.
8. EVOLUTION OF MIND: Its nature and development By Dr. ROBERT G. ECCLES.
9. EVOLUTION OF SOCIETY. By JAMES A. SKILTON.
10. EVOLUTION OF THEOLOGY. By Z. SIDNEY SAMPSON.
11. EVOLUTION OF MORALS. By DR. LEWIS G. JANES.
12. PROOFS OF EVOLUTION. By NELSON C. PARSHALL.
13. EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By JOHN W. CHADWICK.
14. PHILOSOPHY OF EVOLUTION. By STARR BOYT NICHOLS.
15. THE EFFECTS OF EVOLUTION ON THE COMING CIVILIZATION. By MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist, 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

tf

SPECIAL SALE

OF

WATCHES AND DIAMONDS.

Good American Nickel Stem-winders, $2 50, $4, $6. Best grades in silverine case, 7 jewels, $7.50; 9 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9; 15 jewels, $10; adjusted, $16. For 3 ounce coin silver case, add $3.50; 4 ounce, $4 50; 5 ounce, $6. In best open-face filled gold, dust-proof case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $18.50; adjusted, $24.50; hinged cases, $3 more; hunting cases, $6 more.

The New Model "Otto Wettstein" Watch,

All modern improvements: in silverine, $19; 3 ounce coin silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25. BEST open-face filled screw case, $27; hinged, $30; hunting, $26; Louis XIV style, $2 to $10 more. Ladies' best gold filled, 7 jewels, $17; 11 jewels, $18.50; 15 jewels, $25; adjusted, $35; 14 kt solid gold, $10 to $20 more. Ruby and diamond ornamentations up to $100 extra.

DIAMONDS.

An elegant 3 stone, 8kt., solitaire pin and drops, $600, worth $900; a magnificent hair ornament and pin and pendant combination, rosette, 29 brilliants, $200, worth $300; one do., heart-shape, sapphire and ruby in center, same price and value. Pins, rings, drops, studs, from $300 down to $10; same proportionate discounts. All bought before late advance.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

Liberal Meetings.

These notices are for the benefit of Liberals who may be visiting the places where these societies are located. Local Secular Unions and Freethought Societies meeting regularly can hav their gatherings advertised here free by forwarding the necessary information.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.
Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

The Newark Liberal League
Meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Liberal League Hall, 177 Halsey st., cor. Market st., Newark, N. J. Lectures and discussions on religious and social questions. Seats free and everybody welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257
